A NEW COURT HOUSE.

Prospect of a New Railway Station —More Residences Needed.

LOOKING FORWARD.

Crookstons Progress Will Continue. Many Improvements in Sight.

The past year has been one of unprecedented growth and prosperity in Crookston, and now that the new buildings are completed and business opened up in them, there is no reason why this prosperity may not go on. The amount of business done in the city during the present year will be much more than during any previous year.

Already many are talking of building as soon as the weather will permit, but in some cases the JOURNAL has been requested not to say anything at present about the project.

Manufacturing interests are one of the potent factors in building up any community. Crookston realizes this to the case of her lumber mills and flour mills. A new vinegar factory is a much needed matter, and a new oat meal concern is also mentioned. A new machine shop and foundry is already an assured thing. E. I. Larson of Mayville, N. D., expects to open a new hardware store in the building at present occupied by the People's Press.

The 5th ward is to have a handsome new school building. The bonds are already voted and Harris Bros., of Chicago, have practically negotiated to buy them. This edifice is to have four rooms and will cost $4,000. Moreover in South Crookston private residences will be built and already buildings to serve as hotels are going up.

The Great Northern railway, it is confidently expected, will again this year put in many improvements. J. J. Hill already has the plans drawn for a large two story transfer freight depot to be located in South Crookston. This will be used to store away freight and on the second floor will be offices for train dispatchers. Down town a new Great Northern railway station is imperatively demanded. The wooden structure which now serves as a ticket office, waiting room and baggage room is wholly inadequate to meet the demands of the traveling public. The crowded condition not merely of the waiting rooms but also of the platform for the past six months testify to the need. The station was all right when it was built but it really has outgrown its usefulness. President Hill has looked with favor upon Crookston in the past and without doubt he will put up a railway depot that will be in keeping with the rest of the Queen City.

A new court house is another piece of architecture which ought to be erected at the county seat of Polk county. The county can well afford to pay for such a building—the money is already in the treasury; the standing of the county demands that the county building be if less ugly edifice than is the present one for by their fruits ye shall know them; and last but not least the county records are, as it is, in a dangerous state. In case of fire many valuable documents would be food for the flames. The present board, of county commissioners can make an enviable record for themselves by erecting on the court house hill a handsome structure befitting the position and wealth of Polk county.

In the matter of private residences it is to the credit of the city to say there is a great lack. On the other hand this condition of affairs ought not to be continued. The inflock of population has been such that all available houses have been secured and still there are others needed. A JOURNAL representative met a man on the streets the other day who was in vain looking for a dwelling—even two rooms would have satisfied him for the present. People are coming to town to live all the time and private dwellings must be built. And these will be a paying investment for they will not remain unrented.

Change of Managers.

Last Saturday F. M. Brown, who for eight years has managed the business of the Valley Roller mills in this city, severed his connection with that firm. He will not, however, leave Crookston as he will represent W. C. Lelatkow & Co., Grafton Millers, in this city and vicinity. John M. Thompson takes Mr. Brown's place as manager of the mills.

—Additional local will be found on the second page of this paper.

NEW TIME TABLE.

The Change on the Great Northern that went into Effect Tuesday.

At midnight and one minute Tuesday, Jan. 3, several changes in the time of running trains on the Great Northern were made. As it is now the trains from St. Paul that formerly got into Crookston at 6:30 a. m. under the new schedule arrives at 6:55. Of the Fosston line the train from Grand Forks going east arrives here at 8:54 in the morning. As it was before the change went into effect 8:49 was the time. The Duluth train, going west, that formerly arrived in Crookston at 10:40 in the evening now reaches the city at 4:08 in the afternoon. No change is made in the time of the train going to the Twin Cities. It reaches here as before at 9 o'clock in the evening. The St. Vincent train that used to leave at 2:30 a. m. now waits till after the Duluth train, eastbound, gets in, making its time of departure 9:15 in the morning. It arrives from the north at 8:10 in the evening. The St. Hilaire and Halstad trains run as before. The Flyer from the east does not run into Grand Forks but stops long enough at the junction to allow passengers to board the train. Going east it does notevem do that. The Grand Forks folk are much disappointed that these trains do not enter the city. The excuse given for this by the railway authorities is that the train is made a fast time as possible and that the run into Grand Forks would cause some delay.

The change was very beneficial to Crookston, in that the runs of some of the conductors are so arranged now that they will make their headquarters in this city. The runs are from Crookston to Barnesville and return and from Crookston to Minot and return.

A DARIUS GREEN.

The Electric Light Foreman Thrown 25 Feet But Not Seriously Hurt

E. D. Lathrop, foreman of the Electric Light & Water Power Company had a rather narrow escape from being seriously injured the day before yesterday. As it was his forehead was cut and he was considerably bruised but no bones were broken. He is up and around the house and is not suffering much pain and will undoubtedly be back at work in a few days.

He was over in Jerome's addition inspecting the work on the intake pipe and was standing on the end of a large beam that was lying crosswise of some other timbers when a huge bundle of earth, weighing about 20 tons, broke loose above and came rolling down. It fell on the timber on which Mr. Lathrop was standing, on the end opposite to that on which he was. There was a spring-board action and Lathrop shot up into the air over twenty feet. He was picked up and brought home and Dr. Dunlop called.

Magazine Notes.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews begins its new volume with a strong issue and a largely increased circulation. The two important and timely subjects of American diplomacy and territorial expansion figure prominently in the January number. The editor reviews the historic year 1898 from the international view-points and discusses pending national problems; Mr. Henry Macfarland, the Washington correspondent, contributes a study, based on intimate knowledge, of the diplomacy of the war, and Prof. Harry Pratt Judson, of the University of Chicago, writes an exhaustive paper on "Our Federal Constitution and the Government of Tropical Territories." Mr. W. T. Stead gives an interesting estimate of the young Russian Czar. Miss Laura Carroll Dennis describes the career and work of the rising American sculptor, George Grey Barnard, and a sketch of the late General Garcia, the Cuban patriot, is contributed by Mr. George Reno. Margherita Arlina Hamm gives a succinct account of the Red Cross movement and the work of that organization in the late war.

Box Car on Fire.

Monday morning the fire bell rang, and the firemen responded. The fire was in a box car filled with coke. Yardmaster Decker caught sight of the blaze while the car was in the yards in South Crookston and at once coupled an engine to the burning car and a flying trip was made to the water tank, but as they were unable to put the fire out in this way the fire company was called out and soon the smouldering heap was saturated with fire extinguisher. How it caught is a mystery. Was it an fire before it reached the city yards?

HAVE TAKEN NEW QUARTERS.

Wallace's New Block has a Warming —Several Removals.

With the New Year many professional and business men in the city are changing quarters. They are evidently going to make a new start with the New Year. Ben Stenwbridge, court reporter, picked up his work bench and tools Monday morning and removed them to Judge Watts's office in the Rickett block. Judge Ives had already taken his desk, chairs and other goods out of his old office in the Opera House block and placed them in a room off of Martin O'Brien's office. So the old Chambers look deserted.

The building on Broadway almost opposite the Commercial hotel, at present occupied by the People's Press is to be vacated by that paper this week, the owner, J. E. Harris, having sold it to E. J. Larsad, of Mayville, N. D., who will open a hardware store there about February 1. In the meantime a more solid foundation will be placed beneath the building and other improvements made. Editor Knappen's new press rooms are in the building formerly used as the police station.

The Wallace block has received into its handsome apartments on the second floor several professional men. Dr. Dennison, who for many years could always be found in the Rickett block, has taken up his abode with "Sam." A. R. Holston, the new county attorney, has changed the location of his workshop and now forges his legal thunderbolts in the second story of one of Crookston's most imposing pieces of architecture. Dr. Spence, the popular tooth extractor and cavity filler, has vacated the rooms he has been in over the Times and has fitted out some elegant dental apartments over Wallace's apothecary shop. Attorney Will Marin can be consulted by those needing advice on points of law at his new quarters in the vicinity of Dr. Spence. Dr. Farley occupies the rooms directly over Tom Morris' jewelry store. Mr. J. E. Starkey and family have moved into the apartments above Ben Clement's candy factory. One room will be used as an insurance office and Mr. Wallace retains one room for himself. The upper story of the block will be handsomely fitted out by the Masonic lodges.

GYMNASIUM.

The Project to Go—Rooms in the New City Hall.

Crookston is to have an institution for the culture of brawn. Brains in good large quantities are in the next session of our citizens but muscular development has been somewhat neglected. This lack is now to be supplied. The city council will furnish rooms in the basement of the new city hall, heated and lighted. These rooms Professor Les Sore will fit up with apparatus and he hopes to be in running order next week. The gymnasium rooms are plenty high enough for work with the rings or on the horizontal bar.

As a guarantee of good faith on the part of Mr. Les Sore, instead of giving bonds as the council at first asked, the financial part of the plan will be in the hands of a committee. As soon as twenty-five members are secured the gymnasium will be organized and thereafter each person who joins will have to be voted upon by the members. It is proposed to have a respectable and orderly organization. There will be a class for the school boys after 4 o'clock in the afternoon and a class for business and professional men at night.

Professor Les Sore is a man of experience in his line and merely asks that he be given a chance to show what he can do in the way of improving the physical and in consequence the health of some of the residents of the city.

At the Skating Rink.

There will be a grand masquerade at the skating rink next Friday evening. The managers of the ice flodred palace are making arrangements for a royal entertainment and the fancy and other kind of skaters are preparing to appear in their best and have lots of fun. The movements of those gliding over the ice will be made more graceful by the accompaniment of music. Some elegant prizes are being offered. A pair of skating shoes for the best lady's costume, a gold plated watch charm for the best gentlemen's costume. The one having the most comical character suit will be presented with an oxford muffler and the most graceful lady skater will get a fancy Chinese clock. There will also be several races.

DISTRICT COURT

Opens at 10 a. m. Tuesday—Judge Watts Presiding.

SEVERAL CASES WERE TRIED

Special Venire of Petit Jurors—Grand Jury Reports One Indictment.

When the hour arrived the new judge of the Fourteenth Judicial District, William Watts, merely nodded to Sheriff Lawrence and the latter at once opened proceedings with the familiar cry, "Hear ye! hear ye! This court is now open." After a few preliminaries the roll call of the grand jurors was read. As there was not a sufficient number of them present to constitute a quorum they were excused by the judge until 2 p. m. The petit jurors were next called, many not responding to their names. As no one was ready for trial they too were excused but requested to return promptly at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The civil calendar on which there were 16 cases was then read and arranged. The case of the State of Minnesota vs. Rohl Farris which had been brought here from Marshall county on a change of venue was discussed at the suggestion of the attorney of Marshall county that he did not think the evidence sufficient to warrant the case being tried. Some of the witnesses on the calendar were continued. Others had been settled. The majority, however, were for trial by jury and there being only twelve Court cases. In the afternoon the new grand jurors, Messrs. Geo. Wareham, C. T. Onstad, E. M. Fisk, O. H. Richardson and W. H. Narvie had to be empaneled to take the place of five men who were excused for cause. The judge then gave his charge to the grand jury after which they were taken in charge by Officer Munch and brought to the new city hall, where their deliberations will be held. That the grand jury should hold its serious outside the court house is rather unusual but this change is made that the hearing proceedings may not be interrupted by men going in and out of the jury room. The rest of the afternoon was spent in hearing motions and arranging dates for the trial of certain cases.

In the absence of the new clerk of court, E. L. Lommen, on account of illness, M. O. Sortedahl acted as clerk during the first hour and after that John Vig filled his old place. Ben Stawbridge's brawny arm was pressed into keeping tab on the proceedings. Charley Lohn, who was to be initiated as a Mason at this session was not on hand as he is confined to the house with an attack of the grip.

The following attorneys were in attendance: From Crookston—Messrs. Miller, Steenerson, De Forest Bocklon, Rowe, O'Brien, Gossman, Vnale, Montgrew, Wilkinson and Holston; of Thief River Falls—Messrs. Risley of Fosston; Keefe and Gaylord of Fergus; E. J. Grover and R. W. Cutts of East Grand Forks and L. W. Lee of Thief River Falls.

The court convened at 9 o'clock the morning of Jan. 4. The first case called was that of W. H. Cook and J. C. Dewitt, vs. James Revor. As the plaintiff did not appear judgment was given for the defendant. The second case was that of A. Breslauer & Co. vs. Daniel Sullivan. Liquors had been sold to the defendant and the latter had given in payment a promissory note for $180. As the defendant was not present a verdict for $200.40 was directed for the plaintiff.

The third case taken up was similar to the second and the verdict was similar. No. 27 on the calendar on motion of the plaintiff was dismissed without costs. No. 63, M. W. Jenson et al. vs. Great Northern Railway company was also dismissed on motion of plaintiff. The grand jury returned an indictment against J. C. Stanton and W. J. Clark—true name John Shannon—charging them with grand larceny in the first degree, the charge being that on Nov. 7, 1898, at East Grand Forks, they took from a house one silk dress, one overcoat, one revolver, three lace curtains and three yards of silk. E. J. Grover was appointed to defend them and the case set for Monday next.

A special venire of twelve petit jurors was made. This was made necessary by the fact that some jurors were excused and others did not appear.

The case of the First National Bank of Grand Forks vs. John Svenson et al was transferred to Marshall county on application of the defendants, they being residents of that county.

The next case was an action brought by the Merchants National Bank of Crookston against S. Torgerson et al on a promissory note for $200. The defense was made by Jacobson that he signed as surety on condition that Torgerson was to get two other sigares. After all the evidence was in a verdict was directed for the plaintiff for $214.49.

The case of State vs. Jos. Koefnel was taken up. Koefnel was indicted last June for keeping his saloon open after 11 p. m. on June 5. The witnesses say it was 11:20 when Axtos and Albin Anderson were in the saloon. "Little Gem," kept by the defendant. The case went to the jury this morning.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Remi Fortier, Chairman—New Members Seated—County Printing Let.

The first session of the new county board of commissioners began at the court house Tuesday morning. The new members, O. W. Eastman and K. C. Brutvold were sworn in and at once took part in the deliberations of that body. The election of a chairman was the first matter to come up and Mr. Remi Fortier was chosen without a dissenting vote. Mr. Fortier has had considerable experience as a county commissioner which will stand him in good stead in his present position. Attorney Gossman was appointed deputy county attorney for one month at a salary of $100. N. G. Engstrom was again elected to the position of janitor of the court house, the compensation being $50 a month.

Chairman Fortier appointed as members of the finance committee, Brutvold, Thompson, Eastman; of roads, bridges, Eastman, Brutvold; of taxes, Brutvold, Eastman, Thompson; of jail and court house grounds, Eastman, McCarthy, Thompson; of roads and bridges, McCarthy, Eastman, Thompson; bills and claims, McCarthy, Brutvold, Thompson; hospital, Eastman, McCarthy, Brutvold; purchasing, Thompson, McCarthy, Brutvold.

A joint bid for the county printing was received from L. E. George of the Fertile Journal, C. T. Lamman of the McIntosh Times, W. E. McKenzie, of the Crookston Times, C. C. Knappen of the Fisher Bellevue and F. J. Duffy of the East Grand Forks Courier. It was agreed to by the bidders that the Fertile Journal should be designated as the official paper. The bid of these five papers was accepted, no one else bidding, and the Fertile Journal as per previous arrangements of the newspaper men was named the official county paper for 1899. This closed the business for Friday.

On Wednesday county orders were cancelled, the bonds for the county treasurer, the coroner, the register of deeds and clerk of court were received and approved.

Sealed bids were received for the building of the approach to the Mallory bridge, but the bids were all rejected as being too high. Representatives of bridge building firms being present oral bids were received and the contract was let to the Roth Iron Bridge Company for $1,575. The approach is to be constructed of steel.

Two resolutions were passed, copies of which will be sent to Polk county's representatives in the legislature. One calls for an amendment to section 644 of General Statutes of 1894, relating to payment of claims against the county. The commissioners wish to be able to make payments in accordance with written contracts without unnecessary delay. The other requests the legislature to secure an amendment to Chapter 48, of the General Laws of 1899, so that a county may build important bridges on other than county roads.

OFF THE RAILS.

Freight Cars Ditched Near Shirley— No One Seriously Injured.

Last Thursday night when the St. Hilaire train was about three miles east of Shirley it met with an accident which resulted in several cars being ditched, but fortunately no one was seriously hurt. In fact only one woman, Mrs. Charles Wilcox of Sunrise, Minn., was injured at all, she but slightly. The trouble was caused by a broken rail. The engine and two or three freight cars passed over safely, but at that point the train broke and two freight cars were ditched, the baggage and smoker—one car—left the track and bumped along for a short distance but was not overturned and the day coach was only partly off the rails. The conductor and brakemen lost no time in looking after the welfare of the passengers. The engineer pulled ahead to where a freight was waiting for the mixed train to pass, took the caboose of this train back and brought the passengers and baggage into Crookston an hour late. A wrecking crew from Grand Forks cleared the roads.

ANNUAL REPORTS.

Polk County's Officials Give An Account of Their Work.

QUEEN CITY BUSINESS

Postmaster's Receipts—Chief Gonyea's Customers.

The year 1898 is past and public officials are filing their records of the year's work. The following reports will indicate something of what has been done in the way of public business during the past 365 days:

In the office of the clerk of court, John Vig, there were entered 197 civil cases, 129 transcripts of judgment, 595 second papers were issued, 258 first papers, 20 minor's papers, 226 marriage licenses, 22 naturical compulsions were recorded, 8 credentials of ordination and 2 physicians certificates. The total receipts were $4,469.50 and total expenses $2,116.05.

The report of the chief of police of this city, Louis Gonyea, is as follows: The total number of prisoners during the year was 570, the number of lodgers, not held as prisoners, 875. There were not at any one time more than ten held in custody. 21 tramps was the largest number that sojourned at the police over a single night. Only two of the prisoners were under 16 years of age, 63 served sentence in the lockup, 176 were totally intemperate and 18 were women. Of the prisoners 73 hailed from the Queen's dominions, 97 from the Emerald, Isle, 25 from Germany and Austria, 137 from Norway and Sweden, 5 from other foreign lands and 119 were born within the limits of Uncle Samuel's domains. The above report is evidence that the police department of the city is in competent hands.

There were recorded in the office of the register of deeds during the year 1898:

Albert Wickstrom is the retiring officer of this department

Postmaster Elken reports that the total receipts for the quarter ending Dec. 31, 1898, were $3,305.92; the receipts for the same period during 1897, were $2,727.60, showing an increase for the quarter of $668.23. The total receipts for 1898 are $2000, over and above those for 1897. In the, register and money order department the business has increased 20 per cent.

In the United States land office for the three months ending Dec. 31, 1898, there were 292 homestead entries, 266 entries on reservation land, 177 final proofs, 5 final timber culture, 2 soldiers' declaratory statements, 15 cash sales, 101 cash entries of pine land. The total receipts were $56,210.54.

FARMERS' MEETING.

Minnesota State Agricultural Society Meet at St. Paul Jan. 10 to 12.

Next week, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, a meeting that will be especially interesting to the farming community will be held in St. Paul. It is the annual meeting of the Minnesota State Agricultural Society and is promises to be one of the most important in the history of the society. During the now makes a three days' session compulsory. The time will be spent in educational work, in the discussion of matters affecting agriculture in all its branches. Among those prominent on the program are Prof. Curtiss, who talks on "Live Stock as a factor in Successful Farming;" Prof. Craig, on "Sheep—good and bad;" E. D. Childs of Crookston on "Dairying in the Northwest," and Dr. Carryer on "Horse Breeding." The discussion of these and other topics will be very helpful to those engaged in tilling the soil, the various live stock associations of the state will be represented there.

SPAIN'S RED AND YELLOW ENSIGN REPLACED AT HAVANA

By the Stars and Stripes — Ceremonies Observed in the Captain General's Palace and Were Simple in Form—Crowds Not Allowed to Gather in the Vicinity to Witness the Proceedings—Salutes From Morro and Washington Before and After the Change of Flags.

HAVANA, Jan. 2.—The sovereignty of Cuba passed from Spain to the United States at noon. The form of the transfer was simple, consisting only of an exchange of speeches in the salon of the palace, the hauling down of the Spanish flag and the raising in its stead of the flag of the United States on the flagstaff on the palace roof. Salutes were fired from the heavy guns of the forts and the warships before and after the change of flags. The raising of the Stars and Stripes was greeted by cheers of the people, who covered the roofs of the buildings around the palace and the plaza. No crowd was permitted to gather in the streets in the vicinity of the palace to witness the Epoch-Making Function.

At 9 o'clock a guard composed of the Second battalion of the Tenth infantry marched into the Plaza de Armas under command of Captain Van Vliet and formed around the square. Captain General Castellanos watched them with interest from the balcony of his apartments as they entered the square and were stationed at all the streets approaching the plaza. No one was allowed to enter without a pass and all the doors of the palace facing the square were ordered to be closed. Only those who could get on the roofs and balconies of the houses in the neighborhood saw what was going on before the palace. With the guard was the band of the Second Illinois regiment, which had been ordered for the occasion as the Best Band in the Seventh Army Corps.

With the band were the buglers of the Eighth and Tenth infantry. At 11:30 a. m. Major General Wade and General Butler of the American evacuation commission arrived from Elvadado on horseback, accompanied by their staffs. Major General Brooke, governor general of Cuba, and Major General Ludlow, governor of the city of Havana, accompanied by their staffs, arrived at 11:30 in carriages. General Brooke and General Chaffee, General Brooke's chief of staff, in the first carriage. In each of the other carriages rode a Cuban general with American officers. As the carriages drove up the Second company of the Thirty-eighth Spanish infantry presented arms, and the American band started up with

The Spanish colonel saluting. At 11:45 Major General Lee, military governor of the province of Havana, and his staff, joined General Brooke. The latter general then crossed the street to the palace, General Lee on one side at him and General Chaffee on the other, followed by the other American generals and the Cuban officers. On entering the palace the American generals went to the salon facing the plaza. It is lofty chamber. Here were gathered the members of the captain general's staff. Suddenly Captain General Castellanos entered the salon without ceremony from the left and greeted General Brooke and others. After shaking hands General Brooke sat upon a sofa while General Castellanos

British Vice Consul Jerome introduced him to General Maya Rodriguez. Shaking both the hands of the Cuban officer in his usual Spanish fashion, General Castellanos said: "We have been enemies, but I respect you for your correct attitudes and opinions. I have pleasure in shaking your hand." Captain General Castellanos then took his position before General Brooke. The buzz of conversation on the American side of the chamber contrasted with the silence on the Spanish side. There was a marked difference, too, between Americans and Spaniards, the former tall, heavy and wearing much gold cord, the latter small and slight in blue striped cambric uniforms. The Spaniards were depressed, the Americans were correspondingly buoyant. At the the boom of a gun announced that the American flag was being raised on the staff on the roof of the palace and that the Stars and Stripes were going up on all the other official staffs in Havana. The band on the plaza played "The Star Spangled Banner," while the guns of the fleet and fortresses began to roar out the national salute of 21 guns. General Castellanos, in a brief address, surrendered Spanish sovereignty, and General Brooke accepted on behalf of the United States. The Spanish captain general at once proceeded to the wharf, accompanied by Generals Clous and Chaffee, and went aboard the transport Rabat for Matanzas. He gave a last look at the city and with tears in his eyes retired to his cabin. Shortly after he received "the last sigh of the Moor."

SECRETARY HAY OBJECTS.

Exclusive Franchise for a Cable to Hawaii Knocked Out.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The secretary of state has formally disapproved the concession made in July by the Hawaiian government to the Pacific Cable company for an exclusive right of laying cable to Hawaii. It is understood that this action was taken in no spirit of hostility to the Pacific Cable company, but the concession was disapproved, first on account of the formal protest made by the Hawaiian commission, and secondly, because it seemed best to leave to congress a free hand in the disposition of the whole subject.

QUAY NEEDS VOTES.

Enough Republicans Bolt the Caucus to Mean Defeat for the Senator.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Jan. 4.—Despite the efforts of the opponents of Senator Quay to secure a postponement of the senatorial caucus until a later date, the adherents of the regular senator carried their point and secured the endorsement of their favorite by 100 of the 164 Republican members of the Pennsylvania legislature. This is less than the exact number necessary to elect a United States senator on joint ballot, the total membership being 254, of which 128 is a majority. The anti-Quay leaders are jubilant over the result of the caucus and claim that the man they are fighting can never succeed himself in the senate. On the other hand the Quay people and Senator Quay himself

Express Confidence of Ultimate Victory.

They say that of the absentees two members are kept away by sickness and will vote for Senator Quay. This would leave him 17 votes short of the number necessary to elect, and the efforts of the Quay leaders will be directed during the next two weeks towards securing that they will be just as bitterly opposed in the future by the group of men who have made the fight against Mr. Quay as they have been in the past.

The Quay leaders during the past few days have been claiming anywhere from 118 to 135 votes to the caucus. The fact that the actual figures were away below their lowest claim is regarded by many here as a source of great disappointment to them. This class of people are strong in the belief that Senator Quay is beaten.

Absentees Will Organize.

A meeting of the Republican absentees from the caucus will be held in the morning to perfect a permanent organization. Either Senator Flynn of Allegheny or Senator Martin of Philadelphia will be elected chairman. The anti-Quay leaders claim that five of those that participated in the caucus will not be bound by its action. They take the position that it was not a regularly constituted gathering and that their votes do not bind them to vote for the caucus nominee. With the exception of four all the absentees signed a written pledge binding them to keep away from the caucus.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE.

Both Houses Convene and Organize—Caucus Nominees Confirmed.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 4.—The two houses of the Minnesota legislature convened at noon and proceeded to organize. The caucus nominees in both branches were endorsed. The senate officers are: Secretary, R. A. Lurgens; first assistant secretary, W. D. Smith; enrolling clerk, Victor Shallen; assistant enrolling clerk, C. Bergblue; clerk to engrossing committee, Andrew Quam; sergeant-at-arms, W. J. Donaghue; assistant sergeant-at-arms, Thomas Downs; chaplain, Rev. R. N. Jaquiya.

In the house: Speaker, A. N. Rice; chief clerk, Ismel Borgstrom; first assistant clerk, C. J. Noble; second assistant clerk, J. A. Everett; engrossing clerk, E. H. Ingersoll; enrolling clerk, Edwin F. Beck; journalist, L. M. Barrie; sergeant at arms, Edward Fanning; assistant sergeant at arms, T. A. Nelson; chaplain, Rev. O. N. Lindh.

The reception to Governor and Mrs. Lind in the evening was a huge success. Fully 5,000 people managed to get through the reception parlors of the Ryan hotel and hundreds were turned away.

NEW MEN IN CHARGE.

Wisconsin State Officials Sworn In by Chief Justice Cassoday.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 4.—Wisconsin's new state officers have been inaugurated. Yesterday the formal ceremonies taking place in the assembly chamber. The new officers, excepting Governor Scofield, the only one who succeeds himself, gathered in Milwaukee and came to the capital on a special train. They were met at the depot by the old state officers, Mayor Whelan and other members of the local reception committee and entering carriages the procession was formed, headed by the governor's guards. At the capitol the new officers were escorted to seats, and each was presented by his predecessor to Chief Justice Cassoday, who administered the oath of office. Each was then escorted to his department, where they held informal receptions during the afternoon. There is no inaugural ball.

ROOSEVELT IS GOVERNOR.

Parade of Civic and Military Bodies Preceded the Ceremonies.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 1.—Theodore Roosevelt has been inaugurated as governor of New York. In spite of extreme cold weather the ceremony was witnessed by a great crowd of people gathered in the assembly hall of the capitol. Preceding the inauguration there was a parade of civic and military bodies. Bishop Doane of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Albany, offered prayer and Secretary of State McDonough administered the oath.

North Dakota Officers Inaugurated.

BISMARCK, N. D., Jan. 4.—State officers elect were inaugurated without ceremony. Governor Fancher and other state officers took oath of office in body before Judge Winchester of the district court. The oath was taken privately in the governor's office at the capitol. Both houses of the legislative assembly convened promptly at noon for organization.

Express Hope for Dingley.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Representative Dingley passed another comfortable day and the attending physicians expressed renewed hope that the distinguished patient will recover. The crisis in the case is not expected until Friday.

SITUATION GRAVE

RELATIONS BETWEEN NATIVES AND AMERICANS AT ILOILO

Very Much Strained—Forbearance on the Part of Both Necessarily to Avoid Open Rupture—Filipinos Ready to Fight—Declare Uncle Sam's Troops Cannot Land Unless They First Disarm—Rebel Reinforcements Continually Arriving From the Other Islands.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The news received in Washington regarding the attitude of the rebels and natives at Iloilo and vicinity is similar to the effect that reported in the press dispatches. The situation, officials say, show that the relations between Americans and those with whom they are dealing are most strained and will require tact and forbearance on the part of both to avoid a collision. It is also said that the information which has been received does not indicate that General Miller has landed with the American troops.

DECLARE THEY WILL FIGHT.

Insurgents at Iloilo Refuse to Allow Americans to Land.

MANILA, Jan. 4.—Advices just received from Iloilo say the rebels at a meeting on Saturday ratified the act of a delegation which assured the Americans that they might land unarmed, but that if the latter landed armed the natives would be uncontrollable.

It is further said that every preparation is being made for resistance upon the part of the rebels, and that reinforcements are arriving from Negros and the neighboring islands. In spite of the efforts of the United States cruiser Baltimore and the gunboat Arizona to scare them with searchlights.

The American troops are restless. The rebels are drilling on the beach evening and morning, in full view of the American expedition, which is still afloat.

The California volunteers were embarked on four transports today. Their destination is unknown.

The natives here are quiescent but watchful.

SPANIARDS ASSASSINATED.

All Those at Batabar, One of the Philippines, Except Women, Are Dead.

MADRID, Jan. 4.—General Rios cables from Manila confirming the report that all the Spaniards at Batabar, an island of the Philippine group, situated thirty miles south of Palawan, have been assassinated with the exception of the women, whose fate is being sought for.

ORDER NECESSARY.

War Department Sticks to Its Position Regarding the Cuban Contracts.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The objection of the citizens of Santiago to the execution of the war department's programme requiring the custom collections at that port and at all other Cuban ports to be sent to Havana has brought before the war department fair to face with another of the many problems connected with the administration of affairs in Cuba that requires speedy settlement. The order is said to be absolutely necessary, the interests of good government demanding that there should be but one responsible head to the commercial affairs in Cuba. It was pointed out at the war department that if Santiago, at one end of the island, and Havana, near the other, were allowed to much precious ore from Puerto Principe and Pinar del Rio would be withheld from them to make any public improvements. The officials are disposed to allow each of the military commanders of the several departments into which Cuba is now divided to submit requisitions based upon estimates of cost of such public works as sanitation, harbor improvements and road and bridge building as it is deemed advisable to undertake. The cabinet, which General Brooke is about to call to his assistance in the administration of the island, probably will examine into these necessities and propose an allotment of the total customs collected and internal revenue taxation in proportion to the needs of the communities and in accordance with the principles of justice and good government.

OPPOSED TO 16 TO 1.

Judge McConnell of Chicago Says That Issue Is a Dead One.

CHICAGO, Jan. 3.—In a speech before the Democratic Monticello club ex-Judge S. P. McConnell selected the leaders of his party to subordinate, if not wholly eliminate, free silver at 16 to 1 in the next campaign if they hope to win in 1900. He termed the ratio of 16 to 1 superstition and declared the keynote of the next Democratic national platform should be opposition to trusts and monopolies. Mr. McConnell said in substance that if the Democratic party is to be a factor in the future it must not live in the past, but in casting aside dead issues grapple with the living question of dealing with trusts and combines.

Judge McConnell was a delegate to the last Democratic national convention; is a warm friend of ex-Governor Altgeld, and prominent in state politics.

ENOR ROMERO IS DEAD.

Mexican Ambassador at Washington Succumbs to Appendicitis.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—Senor Don Matias Romero, the Mexican ambassador to the United States, died at the embassy here at 4:10 a.m. On Wednesday last an operation for appendicitis was performed upon the ambassador, and although the operation was entirely successful, the resulting shock proved greater than he could bear.

Senor Romero probably was the best known member of the diplomatic corps in Washington, and was for some time its dean.

Next Sunday being the nearest to that date, Rev. Mr. Fisher at the Congregational church will speak on the Relations of Jesus to all the world.

—The St. Anthony and Dakota elevator at Eldred has been robbed of $200 cash, and no clue as yet has been found that will lend to the arrest of the robbers. Two masked men in the dead of night entered the elevator and had a loaded revolver close to the head of the grain buyer, Mr. Little, until he handed over what money he had on hand.

—The Journal begins, with this issue, a fascinating story of army life on the frontier. "A Garrison Tangle" is one of those charming tales written by Captain Chas. King who is a master of the art of story telling. The pleasures, the intrigues, the diversions, the love making of the social side of life at an army post are vividly portrayed.

Lumber Interests.

The Shevlin-Carpenter Lumber company have made a move that will have the effect of increasing the business of this city. Hereafter Crookston will be the headquarters for all their lumbering interests. All business that was formerly done at St. Hilaire will be transacted here. The mills at St. Hilaire will run just the same but the sale of lumber will be made by the office here.

The company are making arrangements for a large output of lumber during the coming season. The mill in Red Lake Crookston is just now being rebuilt with a view to its being in such shape as to be able to do the immense amount of work that will be demanded of it.

—The Burns celebration is sure to be a success. Answers are being received from those in the valley to whom invitations were sent and invariably they have been acceptances.

A Good Thing.

"Hello, Banks!" said his friend. "What are you doing here?"

"Oh, I'm in the insurance business."

"Fire or life?"

"Neither," said Banks calmly, and as he did not brace himself to prove it, nor make a lunge at the other man's buttonhole, his friend's curiosity was aroused.

"Hm! What kind of a species have you added to the genus?" he inquired humbly.

"Well," said Banks, with the gravity of a man who has just given his last quarter to a philanthropist, "it isn't the bright side of an old thing turned over. It is something distinctly new. A good thing! Hm! It doesn't even need to be pushed along!"

"Well," said his friend, "you don't happen to have a picture of it in your pocket?"

"No," said Banks. "But I'll tell you. It is a policy that positively ignores against the meeting of creditors when you are broke; against the man who wants to borrow your umbrella for five minutes; against the candid friend that tells you how much worse you look than you feel; against the man who wants to get a corner on your time for a year paying for it; against the shark, the fish story, the shoemaker against the mother-in-law, and other little annoyances of home; against the man who knows it all; against"—

"Hold on, there!" broke in his friend wildly. "That'll do. Make me out a policy for $60,000." — Detroit Free Press.

Black Sea Water is Poison.

The explorations of the Russian scientist Andrussow have established a very curious fact. The Black sea, which in some parts has a depth of more than 6,500 feet, is poisoned by sulphuric hydrogen, wherever the water is deeper than 1,200 feet. This accounts for the curious fact that there is no organic life below that depth, excepting perhaps some bacteria of very low organization impregnated with sulphur. The causes for this poisonous state are explained by the quick outflow of the fresh water through the Bosporus, while salt water coming from the Mediterranean enters through a deeper current to the depths of the Black sea.

The waters on the surface are, therefore, controlled absolutely by horizontal currents, and of considerable force, and surface to the bottom are hardly ever noticeable. The water at great depths is now so saturated with sulphuric gas as to the disintegration of organic matter which reaches the bottom by reason of its weight that no fish or other living being which needs oxygen for its organism can ever exist beyond a stated depth. —Philadelphia Record.

The Death of Carlyle.

Quels had not been considered seriously ill more than about a fortnight or so before the end, writes Carlyle's nephew, John C. Aitken, in The Atlantic. The very last day, the day before the last days kept flickering in a way so extraordinary that the doctor declared he had never met such tenacity of life and vitality in the whole course of his varied London and other experience. Dear uncle, the good, true and noble old man that he was, really suffered little in the way of pain for some weeks before his death, which was itself little more than a gentle flickering sleep, ending in a scarcely more than sigh of sound.

While lying in a comatose or unconscious state his mind seemed to wander back to old, unmistakable memories of his ever loved ones and their surroundings; his mother holding her supreme seat, surrounded by a host of worthy and very familiar faces not very greatly less dear to him. He died full of years, with all his weary load of world's work well and nobly done, and leaves no mortal behind him who does not love and reverence his life and memory.

A Postal Joke.

A west sider recently approached a certain postoffice official. His face was serious; so was his voice.

"Say," he said, "I don't think it's right for you to make your letter carriers do double duty."

"What do you mean?" exclaimed the official.

"Why, we've got a carrier over our way who is at it day and night."

"At what?"

"Why, he carries mails all day, and then has an extra mole to carry at night."

The official looked puzzled.

"That's queer," he said. "I'll inquire into it." Then his face brightened up.

"Hold on," he cried. "What does that night mail weigh?"

"About nine pounds," said the citizen with a horse chuckle.

The official grinned.

"Guess he'll have to stand it," he said. "It's just a short route, you know."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

County Officials.

A. R. Holston, county attorney and Ole R. Miller, coroner, are now both side officials of Polk county, having entered upon their new work with the New Year. M. G. Peterson, who was appointed last fall to fill out the term of Mr. Beaudry, resigned, continues in office as county treasurer, Judge J. S. Pywer, of East Grand Forks, the new county register of deeds, still lies sick in the hospital, and R. E. Lounsbe, new clerk of court, is also confined to the house with pneumonia. In these two positions the old others will hold over for the present.

LIND'S MESSAGE

New State Executive Makes His Recommendations to the Legislature.

Suggests Some Changes in the Tax Laws and Economy in Expenditures.

TREATMENT OF THE INSANE

Wisconsin Plan of Caring for the Unfortunates Given His Approval.

Favors a Central Board of Control to Manage Our State Institutions.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 4.—The message of Governor Lind to the state legislature is as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Among the important duties which you have been commissioned by the people of this state to discharge, and one that cannot be delegated or deferred, is to provide the necessary moneys for defraying the expenses of government, and for the support of our schools and state institutions. Pursuant to law, the state auditor has submitted his estimate of revenue receipts for the ensuing biennial period, based on a tax levy of 1½ mills, which I append. This rate, according to the estimate, will produce $2,569,000 in the first year, and leave a surplus of $279,000 over and above estimated disbursements; in the second year $2,655,000, with a surplus of $110,000. The estimated surplus for the two years, aggregating $389,000, limits your appropriations for new buildings and other original expenditures to a sum within those figures. While it is conceded that this estimated surplus is not excessive in view of the urgent necessity for increased facilities in some of our institutions, I venture the prediction that the rate suggested will produce a much larger amount than estimated under a stricter administration of our tax laws governing the return and assessment of personalty.

A Reform That Is Necessary.

A reform in that regard, even though you should not see fit to change existing law, is imperatively necessary. Besides, there is an extensive domain for a legitimate and material increase in the revenues of the state in a manner which will not impose any new burdens on our people, or on industry, as will be suggested farther on. If you avail yourselves of these sources, I feel confident that you can safely reduce the levy by 3-10 of a mill, and the state still realize in excess of the estimate. The taxpayers are entitled to a reduction in view of the growth of the state in population and wealth, and I earnestly recommend that it be made. This recommendation is not made in a spirit of indifference to the demands of that liberal progressive policy which is characteristic of our people in their views concerning public expenditures, but because it is earnestly believed that the adoption of the measures for additional revenues, and of reform in the administration of our state institutions, herein recommended, will result in increased revenues on the one hand, and a reduction of expenses on the other, and by that means leave a larger sum available for new undertakings than would result under the practices now in vogue.

QUESTION OF TAXATION.

The Subject One of Greatest Importance. Some Desirable Changes.

The subject of taxation is one so vital to the state, so important to the people, that it always merits the most earnest consideration of both legislature and executive.

Taxation is appropriation by the state of the property of the individual, and is only justified when exercised for public purposes, and in pursuance of express law. The question in behalf of what objects state taxation should be imposed presents few difficulties. As to our public schools, the administration of justice and of public affairs, our dependent and reformatory institutions, public buildings and highways, and many other public objects, we feel instinctively that they are matters of public concern, and that reasonable appropriations for those purposes are for the public good. But your duty and mine is only half performed when we have selected proper objects for the state's care. It is equally important that the money required for these purposes shall be levied and taken from such sources that its collection in itself will not be a detriment and Menace to the Public Welfare.

A good end does not justify questionable means. In our generous public-spirited haste to provide for the many meritorious objects of the public care, we have been so intent on the end that we have overlooked the means. The truth of the matter is that our state is today exacting taxes on the little stock, tools, implements—the means of subsistence—of numbers of our citizens who are struggling to support themselves and their families, while thousands who possess great wealth escape. Besides the inherent injustice of this, the state can ill afford to have those already battling for an independent existence loaded with additional burdens, which will, sooner or later, transfer many of them into the dependent classes. That this condition of affairs exists, the most cursory investigation of the subject will show. It is no more just nor candid to charge this to the depravity of the wealthier members of the community than it is to cry demagogy whenever the subject is brought up. It is, in my judgment, a condition resulting from the new forms that wealth has assumed under the remarkable progress and the economic changes which have taken place in this century. It is not a subject for declamation or invective, but for patriotic, speedy solution, now and here, and as rapidly as the forms of our institutions permit.

Change in Form of Property.

In the early days of the Republic, when the principles were formulated which still control our methods of taxation, visible property constituted the property of the community. Wealth meant houses, lands, implements and cattle. Franchises, bonds, stocks and securities were practically unknown. Today they constitute, according to conservative estimates, perhaps 80 per cent of personalty wealth. They are owned by the wealthy. As a rule, they escape taxation, not because they are the property of the rich, but because the assessor cannot get his eyes on them. The producer, on the other hand, cannot conceal his stock, or the implements of his trade, and they are taxed. The patriotic desire to volunteer tribute to the state is probably no greater in the one than in the other. To illustrate, let me cite you to the last published report of our state auditor. The loans and credits of the private banks, brokers, and stock jobbers in the state were returned and assessed at $383,636, while the sewing machines were valued at nearly twice that sum. All the bonds and stocks, other than bank stocks, were returned and valued at less than the yearling calves, and less than double the valuation of the dogs over six months old. Judging by comparison and by data from other states, it is safe to assume that the value of the personal property in this state is nearly as great as the realty. As returned for taxation, the figures are in round numbers: Real property, $500,000,000, personalty, $100,000,000. To get at the remaining personal property, or to substitute some other method of obtaining revenue more just and efficient than the present antiquated system of taxing personalty, is the problem. To solve this, I believe with my predecessor that a commission should be appointed. If action were taken by you in that behalf at once, a report might be obtained in time for consideration at this session.

CORPORATE TAXATION.

Foreign Companies Should Be Treated the Same as Domestic Ones.

Akin to the question discussed, but separate and distinct from it, and not in anywise dependent upon its disposition is the subject of licensing and taxing corporations. By wise and well-considered legislation on this subject, you can obtain an amount of revenue that will more than make up for the proposed reduction in the tax levy and which will, with other corporation taxes, in the course of time, increase the permanent revenues of the state to such an extent that a direct tax for the revenue fund can be dispensed with. Our law now requires the payment of a minimum incorporation fee of $50 to obtain a corporate charter, and in addition, one-tenth of 1 per cent on the capitalization in excess of $50,000. This provision is bringing large sums of money into the treasury annually. It can and should be extended to foreign corporations doing business in this state. This would only be a measure of justice to ourselves and to our own business interests. The license fee should be uniform with that imposed on our domestic corporations, and may then be collected on the entire capital stock of the foreign corporation, or on that portion of the capital engaged in business in this state, as is the law in New York. Either course is valid, and has been sanctioned by the courts of last resort, both state and federal.

Tax on Foreign Corporations.

In addition to this, many of our sister states levy and collect an annual franchise tax upon corporations. Domestic corporations and foreign corporations doing business in the state are alike subject to it, with such exceptions as the legislatures have chosen to make. This, it seems to me, is one of the most available as well as legitimate sources that you can turn to for revenue without burdening the individual citizen. The tax, in itself is a just one, both on economic grounds and from the standpoint of public policy. The corporation permits the union of the capital of several owners in a way peculiar to that form of organization. It gives the mass a solidarity and efficiency that can never be obtained in a partnership. It is a well recognized fact that there is an economic advantage in the harmonious co-operation of numbers over individual effort. The business of the corporation is not interrupted by the vicissitudes that befall individuals. It enables the owner of limited capital to participate in undertakings that would be beyond his reach but for its aid. If business reverses befall the corporation the shareholder is only liable for its losses to a limited degree. Numerous other advantages might be referred to, but this is enough to show that the state confers special value when it grants a corporate charter. The state conferring these special powers and privileges, which are constant and continuous in their character, it is clearly just that an

for them. It is no sufficient answer to say that the capital is taxed in the property in which it is invested. The capital as such would be liable to taxation in whatever form. This principle cannot be better expressed than in the language of the Supreme Court of the United States (143 U. S. 305). The court says: "The right and privilege, or the franchise, as it may be termed, of being a corporation, is of great value to its members, and is considered as property separate and distinct from the property which the corporation may acquire. According to the law of most of the states, this franchise or privilege of being a corporation is deemed personal property, and is subject to separate taxation." The state having conferred the franchise—the special value—is entitled to the taxes imposed. It is one of the easiest taxes to collect; practically self enforcing. If a domestic corporation refuses to pay, such refusal can be made cause of the forfeiture of the charter. In case of the foreign corporations, they can be denied the process of our courts. This is the law in New York. What has been said with reference to domestic corporations applies with greater force to the numerous foreign corporations doing a large and lucrative business in this state, such as the various machine companies, the loan companies, the various trusts, and mining companies in the northern part of the state.

Express, Telegraph and Other Taxation.

Referring to express, telegraph, telephone and sleeping car companies, the governor says that in his opinion the tax of 3 per cent upon gross earnings on business originating and ending within the state is grossly inadequate, besides being liable to abuse. Railroad companies pay 3 per cent of gross earnings including interstate business. The tax, he says, whether it be 3 per cent or a greater rate should be computed upon the valuation of the corporation's property employed in business in the state.

TAXATION OF RAILROADS.

Rate on Such Property Is Considered Too Low.

Another branch of taxation that demands your earnest attention and well considered action is that of the franchises and property of corporations engaged in transportation by railroad in this state.

The total amount of taxes paid on the gross earnings of the railroads in this state for the year ending Dec. 31, 1897, was $1,127,950.24. The mileage is something over 6,000 miles. A valuation of the railroad property in the state, in the same proportion that other property is valued, would probably not fall below $10,000 per mile on an average. At this low valuation, a rate of taxation, the same as is imposed on the other property in the state, 24 mills on the dollar, would have brought $1,440,000 for the current year. So it will be seen that our rate of taxation on railroad property on the basis of valuation is only about two-thirds that of the other property in the state.

Higher Rates in Other States.

You will also find upon investigation that our rate of taxation by percentage on the gross earnings is much below the rate that prevails in our sister states, which are within the domain of the systems transacting most of the business in our state. All of our railroads, with the exception of possibly one, are interstate roads and not operated with reference to state lines, but as systems. The companies do not keep separate accounts in each state. For the purpose of taxation they apportion the gross earnings of the system among the several states through which they run in proportion to the mileage in each. This is the only practicable way and is approximately correct and fair. So far as our railroad traffic is concerned, we are to all intents and purposes one jurisdiction with Northern Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin, and to some extent with the states west of us. This group of states are on the whole traversed and dominated by the same systems, and the business of each system operating within the group is treated as a unit. Our state is therefore (aside from the need of the revenue) interested in seeing to it that it obtains substantially as large a proportion of the earnings of these companies for the support of its government and institutions as is taken by the other states in the group. If we do insist upon this, we simply compel our people to help pay taxes in the other states. If our railroads were confined in their business operations wholly within the boundaries of this state, the rate of taxation imposed would perhaps not be so material, for a high rate of taxation would necessarily in the course of time, be reflected in higher transportation rates; so, also, a lower rate of taxation would have a tendency to produce lower transportation rates, but inasmuch as we are part and parcel of the states referred to for transportation purposes, we cannot, in justice to ourselves, be governed by any such considerations, unless they are also heeded by the other states in the group.

Lower Transportation Rates.

Iowa and Illinois have already secured materially lower transportation rates than we have. If we continue to also permit them to exact higher rates of taxation from the railroads which operate in those states, and in ours, than we collect, manifest injustice will be done to our people. The maximum rate of gross earnings tax in Illinois is 7 per cent; in Wisconsin, 4 per cent; in Iowa, 4 per cent; in our own state, 3 per cent. The average rate actually collected in the several states is 2.8 per cent in Minnesota, 3.5 per cent in Wisconsin, 7.6 per cent in Iowa, 6 per cent in Illinois, as appears by the statement furnished by the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners, which I append. The average rate of gross earnings tax collected in the three states named is over 4.3 per cent; more than one-third higher than the rate imposed in this state. In other words, if the railroads had been subjected to the same rate of taxation in this state, as the average of the rates in Iowa, Wisconsin and Illinois, we would have received last year over $1,700,000, instead of something over $1,100,000. I am also advised that notwithstanding the fact that Wisconsin already collects a much larger rate than we do, and on a less volume of business, the executive of that state will urgently recommend to the legislature at the ensuing session, to increase the rate now in force to keep pace with the increase in the rate of taxation upon other property in the state. That, also, is a feature that should not be lost sight of, for increased taxation and higher civilization go hand in hand.

Some Alternative Propositions.

The Chicago Great Western Railway, which is operating under an old territorial charter which fixed the rate of taxation at 2 per cent on the gross earnings, has not accepted the provisions of the "Stillwater Act," under section 1 of Chapter II of the General Laws of 1887, and therefore contends that it is liable to pay only 2 per cent. As we have no general provision of law imposing the 3 per cent gross earnings tax, it is probably right in its contention, at least, it has prevailed with the state authorities up to this time, and it is therefore imperatively necessary that legislation should be enacted to cover that case.

I am fully aware that the argument will be used before you that it is unsafe to attempt any revision of the gross earnings tax law in this state; that by so doing you will jeopardize the benefits that the state now derives from that method of taxation.

No Question of Acceptance.

There is no question but that the companies will much prefer to pay a reasonable gross earnings tax than to have their property and franchises taxed upon a valuation. But if it is feared that any company might resist the payment of a higher gross earnings tax than is now levied, on the ground that it is in violation of federal law to impose a tax upon the income from inter-state commerce, as a precaution, you can readily obviate this difficulty by also enacting an alternative mode of taxation, providing: That in the event that any railroad company, subject to the payment of taxes in this state, shall refuse to adopt and abide by the rates of taxation on gross earnings which you establish in commutation of other forms of taxation, then the property and franchises of such corporation shall be taxed upon a valuation the same as other property in the state, and at the average rate of taxation in the state thus leaving it to the corporations themselves to determine whether they will pay taxes on a valuation the same as other property in the state, or accept your gross earnings commutation plan in lieu of that form of taxation. You could go one step farther and authorize the companies to fix their own valuation with the proviso that the valuation so fixed should be the valuation and basis for determining transportation rates as well as for taxation. With such an alternative before them, you need have no fears that they would reject any reasonable gross earnings rate. They understand, as well as every lawyer in your body, that they cannot escape payment in one form or the other, and they will be glad to avail themselves of the gross earnings tax as the least burdensome.

Reduction in Expenditures.

Thus far, I have only discussed matters relating to the better adjustment of the burdens of taxation and the sources to which you can look for additional revenue to meet the growing wants of our progressive state without further burdening persons or property directly engaged in production.

By well considered legislation, the state may be able to so utilize its different resources for raising revenue by taxation that the rate may be reduced and still an increase secured in the revenues. But it is idle in a young state like ours with a constant and rapid growth in population to speak about decreased expenditures. What we can reasonably hope for, and what we should insist upon attaining, is not necessarily a reduction in aggregate expenditures, but a system of management and administration in all public affairs that will give the people the greatest possible efficiency and the largest possible returns for the money expended.

TREATMENT OF INSANE.

Governor Lind Warmly Commends What Is Known as the Wisconsin Plan.

The treatment of insane occupies a prominent place in the governor's message. His preference as between the two plans outlined respectively by the board of trustees of the state hospitals and the board of corrections and charities is decidedly in favor of the latter. The plan recommended by this board is substantially that now in operation in Wisconsin.

The plan now in operation in Minnesota, by which all the burden of expense is borne by the state, the governor says, practically holds out a premium to the different counties for loading down the state with the care and maintenance of the indigent who are suffering from any mental disorder or weakness in the slightest degree. This is certainly bad policy and should be reformed.

"In no sphere of sociological inquiry," says Governor Lind, "has modern science made greater advance than in the study and treatment of insanity. The early practices of treating the insane, first, as possessed, and latterly, as criminals, have been wholly discarded, except as traces remain in the forms of our commitments. The modern and rational conclusion is that insanity is a disease and as such requires treatment the same as any other ailment. In this acute stage, the hospital is the proper place for its care. If it is or becomes a permanent or chronic condition, then the patient is what we might call a mental cripple, and the home or asylum is the proper place for his care. There is no more sense in keeping the acutely insane and the chronic in the same institution than there would be in keeping those who had become physically crippled in a hospital designed for the treatment of acute cases of disease or injury; still this is what we are undertaking to do in this state to today."

Adopt a Humane Method.

In their physical ailments the chronic insane do not differ essentially from sane people. On the whole, they seem to suffer less from sickness than people who are mentally sound. Bearing these facts in mind, and the additional one that a human being cannot be content without some means of employment, and that the instincts and cravings of the mentally crippled in this regard are the same as those of sane people, it seems to me that the dictates of interest and humanity alike will compel you to abandon hospital extension in this state upon present lines, and to adopt a method which will be more natural and humane to the unfortunates, and which will also utilize such elements of efficiency for production and self-support as they possess. As to what this plan should be the board of trustees and the board of corrections and charities do not agree. The board of trustees recommends what is termed the "Colony System." The board of corrections and charities, on the other hand, recommend what is known as the "Wisconsin plan."

Under it any county that may so elect should be authorized and empowered by the legislature to erect and furnish a suitable building or buildings for the maintenance and care of the chronic insane, under such restrictions and safeguards as they point out and suggest, the state to pay the county $1.50 per week for each inmate cared for. Both plans have this in common: that they are better calculated to place the chronic insane under natural conditions and thus insure their greater comfort and happiness, and also that they will, though in a different degree, utilize the productive capacity of the inmates toward their support.

Favors the Wisconsin Plan.

The plan of the hospital board retains the entire subject and machinery of administration under state control. The other remits the administration of the institution to the local authorities, reserving, however, ample power of control and supervision to the state. As between the two plans, my judgment has lead me to favor the Wisconsin plan, and I recommend its adoption without hesitancy or reserve. My first impressions were against it, and my present judgment is the result of investigation and observation. If no other considerations entered into it, I should deem it a great reform in itself for you to select that method which transferred the burden of administration to the local authorities. The administration of the county asylums in Wisconsin is most admirable. Judged by the same standard, it is as good in all respects as the administration of the state hospitals, in that state or in ours. In respect to economy, there is hardly any room for comparison, the arguments in the report of the hospital board to the contrary notwithstanding.

Governor Lind then details at some length his observations in visits to some of the Wisconsin county asylums for the chronic insane, finding them in management exceedingly commendable. He found all the institutions visited better housed than he had expected, and also better equipped. The food for the most part being raised on the farms operated in connection was wholesome and abundant, the beds and bedding cleaner than in any similar institution he had ever visited. He is loath to believe that as good local management cannot be obtained in this state as in Wisconsin. The supervision rests in the state, and its aid to the extent of $1.50 per capita could and should be made contingent upon the maintenance of a high standard. At the present one hospital in each congressional district would probably be sufficient, with one for each large city.

STATE INSTITUTIONS

Recommendations of Auditor Dunn for a Single Board Endorsed.

Another subject that will prominently be called to your attention by the able report of our state auditor, is the management of our state institutions. It presents the question whether we shall continue the present plan of a separate board for each institution, with a board of corrections and charities to supervise and moderate their actions, or whether we shall adopt the plan of one central board of control for the management of all the institutions. Both plans are in operation in our sister states. Each has its peculiar advantages, as well as its disadvantages. The separate board plan contemplates a body of high minded citizens, full of sympathy for the unfortunate classes, not forgetful of the great burden that these classes are upon society; willing to and so situated that they can give their best efforts and time to the service of the state in connection with the institution to which they are appointed, without compensation.

The single board plan presumes a small body of men possessed of excellent business ability and who have become by training and experience experts in the conduct of institutions, and in the treatment of the unfortunate of the several classes, devoting their whole time and energy to their duties and receiving adequate compensation. They are better competent to judge of the qualifications needed for superintendents, stewards, and other subordinates and employes. They are also competent to act upon all requisitions and to decide finally what expense ought to be incurred and pass upon accounts. They are free from local influences and politics, and political considerations do not enter into the discharge of their duties. These are the highest ideals for either plan, and it is needless for me to add that the actual results fall far short of the ideal in both.

The dangers to which the separate board plan is liable are that men with the qualifications indicated, and who have the means so that they can afford to devote the requisite time to the work required without compensation, are difficult to find, and that in practice political considerations frequently control appointments to these positions. That, as a result, the resident member becomes, to all intents and purposes, the board for the institution, and that its management will be given a turn beneficial to local business and political interests; that each institution thus becomes a separate factor, and the local member or board becomes an advocate, and frequently a lobbyist, for its special advancement, without reference to the needs of the other institutions, or of the best interests of the state as a whole. This latter is probably the most reprehensible feature of our present system in this state.

Dangers of the Central Board.

The dangers to which the central board of control is exposed, it seems to me, may be summarized as follows: That the appointments to them are as likely to take the political complexion as in the make-up of the separate boards. If inefficiency or lack of probity find place, the resulting danger is greater because of the greater power. There is also greater danger of stagnation, and that a demoralizing and beaurocratic spirit may gain ascendancy in the long run. The single board plan possesses advantages over the other in point of economy, notwithstanding the fact that its officers are salaried. The expenses of the separate board, which in this state amount to considerably over $5,000 per annum, with a small per diem allowed in some instances, would go far toward paying salaries.

Aside from this great gain would result from the buying of supplies for all the institutions by one board.

Governor Lind strongly recommends, in the event that the "single board" plan is not adopted, the system known as "analyzed accounts." Instead of the steward reporting to the board of trustees a long list of items purchased during the month or quarter, as the case may be, and having the bill passed upon in gross as is now the practice in our institutions, the aggregate sum only being reported to the board of corrections and charities, the entire account should be transmitted in detail to this board and the items analyzed and grouped under the proper headings. By that means, it would be possible for the board of corrections and charities at their meetings to determine at a glance, not only the aggregate expenditures under a given head in each institution, but the different items under that head with the prices paid. If great discrepancies were apparent, they would promptly be called to the attention of the boards and stewards at fault.

Benefits of This System.

By the introduction of this system, any member of your body, or myself, could step into the office of the secretary of the board of corrections and charities in this building, and ascertain instantly the expenses, say for butter, vegetables, flour, clothing, house furnishings or fuel, or any other item, in any of our institutions in any preceding month, and this not only as to quantity purchased, but as to prices paid. This we cannot do now. The reports now required and kept only deal in lump sums.

The secretary of the board of corrections and charities has at my request furnished an estimate of the additional expenses incident to the introduction of this system. He is of the opinion that an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,000 or $1,200 per annum would be able to do the work. An appropriation of $1,600 for clerk hire and other expenditures incident to the introduction of this system is earnestly recommended. This, of course, in the event that you do not adopt the plan of a central board of control.

Other State Institutions.

Under the head of state institutions the governor also calls attention of the legislature to the reports submitted. He suggests that the binding twine output of the state prison might well be increased, and that the St. Cloud reformatory inmates might well be put to work at raising sugar beets.

In the matter of education Governor Lind makes the suggestion that the preparatory departments of state normal schools might well be abolished, because the work done therein is such as is done in the high schools of the state, and that their maintenance is practically superfluous. He recommends liberal appropriations for the state university, to whose work he calls special attention. Another recommendation is that publishing of free text books in use in the schools of the state should be done on state account. This is already done in several states.

AGRICULTURE.

Work of the State Experimental Farm Warmly Commended.

That portion of the message dealing with the state experimental farm highly commends the work of that institution, and he bespeaks for it a liberal treatment, and also a continuance of state institute work.

Without making any specific recommendation, it seems to me that, in view of the record made by our creameries at the recent Omaha Exposition, the time has come when Minnesota creamery butter should mean what the name implies. This, I think, can only be accomplished by authorizing the state food and dairy department, in conjunction with the faculty of the College of Agriculture, to adopt rules regulating the sanitary conditions that must be observed in the management and the character and quality of the product that must be produced in a given creamery to entitle it to be styled a "Minnesota Standard Creamery," and its product and packages to be called and known as "Minnesota Creamery Butter."

The manufacture and sale of creamery supplies in the Northwest, with the exception of one concern, is in the hands of a trust. Such being the case, I also suggest for your consideration the advisability of undertaking the manufacture of creamery supplies in the state prison on state account, to be sold to creameries and farmers at cost.

Question of Forestry.

The subject of forestry is receiving considerable and well merited attention in the state. On this subject, like many others, it is futile to undertake legislation in advance of a well defined, active public opinion. So long as nine-tenths of our people would rather cut a tree than plant one, time devoted to the discussion of scientific forestry is usually wasted. All we can hope to do is to lay the foundation for it in the future. The European countries did this by introducing the subject in their schools early in the century. If we would create an interest in the subject that shall be productive of results, we should do the same. Our bounty plan has been productive of some results, but the plan that in my opinion would be productive of greatest results would be to require each country school district to have a large plot of ground connected with it upon which the children, under the guidance of a competent teacher, would learn to grow and love a tree. By that means, each community would have a nursery and it would not be many generations before our now bleak prairies would present the appearance of parks. Horticulture and forestry should be made regular studies in our normal schools.

The subject of good roads is sufficiently prominent in the public mind at this time to justify me in the assumption that it will receive your earnest consideration without comment on the part of the executive.

EXCESSIVE FEES.

Recommends a Salary Basis for Certain Officials.

There are certain offices in the state: That of clerk of the supreme court, oil inspector, and surveyors general of logs, in which the emoluments are measured by fees collected by the incumbents. It is commonly understood that the revenues are so large that they cannot in any sense of the word be regarded as compensation. When the income of an office passes beyond the compensatory point, it is plundering the people. I recommend that the laws relative to these offices be amended so as to place the offices on a salaried basis.

The report of the State Railroad and Warehouse commission will be laid before you. No new legislation is needed on that subject, except that the record made before the commission on a hearing should be made to constitute the record on appeal. The present practice of trying the case de novo in the district court is useless and expensive, and by its delays tends to defeat the ends of the law.

The telephone service and the telephone companies in the state should be placed under the jurisdiction of the commission, and it should be given the same power to compel connections, control joint rates, and rates, that it now possesses in regard to other common carriers.

The criticism which the commission has been subjected to in connection with the grain inspection department relates to administration and cannot be discussed with profit on this occasion. No new legislation is deemed necessary on this subject.

RAILROAD PASSES.

Would Make It Illegal for Officials to Accept Them.

Our state enjoys the peculiar distinction of being the only one whose laws expressly authorize the issuance of railroad passes. Under its sanction, the practice of issuing passes to public officials and at the request of those prominent in public life has become so common and apparently so cherished by the beneficiaries that the repeated recommendations of my predecessors for its abolishment have not been heeded. I repeat the recommendation that the practice be abolished root and branch in the hope that the legislature will not hesitate to give expression to the pronounced public opinion on the subject.

DIRECT LEGISLATION.

Favors the Adoption of the Initiative and Referendum.

Under the new economic conditions which have obtained and which have made capital, through organization, such a potent factor in society and in legislation, it has become necessary that the individual citizen should be given more efficient means for his protection. The exclusively representative method is no longer a safeguard as has been so prominently demonstrated in the recent franchise scandals in one of our sister states. Instances of similar character, though not so flagrant, are not wanting in our history. The only remedy, it seems to me, against such abuses, is to afford the people a constitutional method by which they can initiate needed reforms, by direct action on the one hand, and exercise the veto power on questionable or corrupt legislation on the other. This involves the introduction of no new principles in our form of government. There are no stronger reasons for trusting the people to pass upon men than upon measures. We do not think so in regard to constitutional enactments, which is legislation in its highest and most important form. The people now have the power to initiate reforms and legislation in the matter of locating county seats, and in some municipal undertakings. This power, with proper restrictions as to the time and frequency of its exercise, should be extended to other important questions.

Would Amend the Constitution.

The constitution could, and in my judgment should, be so amended as to enable a minority in the legislature by appropriate action to refer enactments, at least such as extend corporate privileges or authorize the granting of franchises, to a vote of the people before becoming operative.

Governor Lind recommends that work on the new capitol be pushed as expeditiously as possible. To that end he would have permission granted to the commission to anticipate the tax levy by the use of some of the trust funds of the state, to which no profitable or suitable investment has been found.

In conclusion permit me to express the conviction that cordial co-operation between the executive and the legislature is essential to the best interests of the state, and that it is my earnest desire to extend to you in the performance of your many and arduous duties every assistance that the executive department can render and in the same spirit that I shall look to you for suggestion and aid.

CUBA NOW FREE.

At high noon Jan. 1, 1899, the last vestige of Spanish sovereignty in the new world ceased and in place of the Spanish colors the stars and stripes now float over Morro Castle, the palisades, and all other government buildings as well as over private residences in Havana.

"Without ostentation," so runs the press dispatch, "and without the semblance of disorder the sovereignty of Cuba passed from Spain to the United States. The ceremony of transfer was simple, consisting only of a series of speeches in the hall of the palace, the hauling down of the Spanish flag and the raising in its stead the flag of the United States on the flag staff of the palace roof."

The greatness of the American character is shown in the way the transfer was made. No attempt was made to humiliate the vanquished. The difficult task of the Spanish officers was rendered as easy as possible for them. They were treated as brothers, still their power had to be taken away from them. The scene in the throne room was indeed a affecting one, particularly when General Castellanos bade adieu to his officers in these words: "Gentlemen—I have been in more battles than I have hairs on my head and my self possession has never failed me until today."

The Cuban army did not take any official part in the ceremonies nor were the Cubans allowed to make any demonstration.

The lone star flag of Cuba was not officially recognized. The island is in the hands of the United States, to remain there till the Cubans have shown themselves competant to rule. It is very easy to find fault and say that the Cuban generals should have had their say in the day's proceedings and that the Cubans in general ought to have been permitted to hold high carnival on this, the most important day of their lives, but there is another side to the question. Surely the American generals now in Havana are just as anxious as any others for the happiness and welfare of the Cubans. Knowing the situation thoroughly they decided that it was best for the Cubans to hold no celebration, and we think their decision a wise one. Had the Cubans been given full reign the result might have been direful. Feb. 24 General Gomez and his army and all other Cubans will celebrate in Havana, their rescue from Spanish misrule and their entrance upon a life of freedom.

Yes, freedom for Cuba is now enrolled among the nations that enjoy that greatest of man's privileges. The full significance of their position they cannot yet realize, indeed, it will take long years to learn what it in very truth means to be free.

THE RURAL SCHOOLS.

Judging from the reports published in the Twin City dailies of the State Educational Association meeting held in St Paul three days last week, and from conversations we have had with some of those present, no subject was given more, if indeed as much prominence, as that of the rural schools. President E. G. Engstrom in his annual address made the startling statement that "during the last twenty-five years there has not been one single modification in our system of common school supervision." And Mr. Engstrom ought to know for he has been county superintendent of Goodhue county during almost all that time.

It was the general opinion that the term of service of the county superintendent was too short; that the office should be taken out of politics; that in very many cases the salary ought to be increased. Mr. Engstrom suggested that representatives of the different school boards be given the power to select the county superintendent.

The short terms of the country school was also considered a drawback to the greatest efficiency of the rural teacher. "Permanent employment, long terms and state certificates," as one man expressed it, "are some of the things that are most needed to encourage along able persons to make a life work of country school teaching." The legislature will be asked to pass a law in accordance with which certificates for rural teachers will be issued by a state board. The North Dakota Educational association took similar action with reference to state certificates.

The rural school is undoubtedly the base of the school system, and if it is not solid how can the superstructure be lasting.

JUDGE DAY.

Judge Day, chairman of the Paris Peace Commission, spoke last Monday night at Canton, Ohio, his home, to the members of the county bar association. He said among other things: "If I were called upon to state the most gratifying circumstance of our foreign relations during the war, it would be found in the uniformly cordiality and hearty friendship of the English nation before and during the struggle. Observing the obligations of neutrality and never stepping outside the requirements of international law, we had the symphaty and good will of that great power. I do not believe either nation seeks or would be benefited by a formal alliance. Nevertheless the experience of cordial relations between people kindred by blood, speaking the same language and having the same ideas of civil liberty and good government is a fact the effect of which can hardly be overestimated.

INDIANS from several of the reservations are going east to consult with the Great Father. They evidently think they can get better treatment at Washington than they can from the local agents. It is to be sincerely hoped that they may.

BRYAN, by his attitude on expansion, has alienated from himself some of those men who were boon companions, so to speak, of his during the presidential campaign of two years ago. He now takes the wrong road this time again and it is too late to turn back. Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews, superintendent of Chicago schools, is the last man to take a whirl at the ex-colonel.

PARTICULARS of the meeting of the State Agricultural society in St. Paul next week will be found in another column. Skilled labor is the only kind that will eventually succeed in these days. Scientific methods must be employed if progress is to be made in any field. At this meeting the farmers will have an opportunity to learn some of the most improved methods of farming.

DAVID M. CLOUGH, who for almost two terms has been at the head of the state government, on Tuesday last surrendered the reins to John Lind. Mr. Clough has undoubtedly given the people a good business administration and has shown that he possesses executive ability. In an emergency Clough was always to be depended upon. Witness his prompt action in the recent Indian trouble.

THE president now has in his cabinet two men, Secretary Hay, of the state department, and Secretary Hitchcock, of the interior, who have been for two years ambassadors at London and St. Petersburg respectively. Foreign affairs are so important now that President McKinley evidently wishes to have among his personal advisors men who can speak from personal experience as to the conditions abroad.

SENATOR QUAY, of Pennsylvania, is making a hard fight for re-election to the United States senate. John Wanamaker is working against him. Senator Quay is now under indictment charged with using for personal ends public money. The case is now before the supreme court and much depends upon what that court does. The senator has won in the republican caucus, but he still lacks seventeen of a majority on joint ballot.

CONGRESSMAN-ELECT ROBERTS, of Utah, has been one of the most talked about men in the country ever since last Nov. 8, when he was elected to go to Washington. If his reception at the country's capitol is anything like his reception by the press it will indeed be a warm one. There is a general cry against a Mormon being seated in the national legislature. As a polygamist, he is a law breaker and a law breaker is in no position to give aid in making laws.

THE peace treaty will in all likelihood be ratified by the United States senate, but how soon is the question. If the senate, as now constituted, refuses to sanction the work of the peace commissioners, enough new senators take office March 4, 1899, to insure the speedy ratification of the treaty. Senators who are anti-expansionists on principles ought to be respected and heard, but dilatory tactics by politicians ought not to be countenanced.

RUMORS of abuses in the hospital at St. Peter are prevalent at the present time, and they are such that an investigation into the matter will be necessary. It is indeed unfortunate that institutions of this kind cannot be conducted so that investigations into their management will not be necessary. While the authorities must be held innocent till proved guilty, still, rumors have some foundation. If it arouses righteous indignation in one to think of the unfavored and helpless creatures, brought to these institutions, being maltreated.

IT looks very much as if England were going to have trouble in South Africa. The Uitlanders of the Transvaal are considerably worked up over the fact that an Englishman has been killed and the authorities are not dealing very severely with the criminals. Several meetings have been held and resolutions passed calling for redress. The Jameson raid sometime ago was unsuccessful as it ought to have been, but President Kruger, as it looks now, will be dealing with England in a case where the latter is the injured party.

STATE AUDITOR DUNN'S biennial report to the state legislature is an able document containing some important recommendations. He recommends that the tax on gross earnings of the railroads be increased from three to four per cent: that there be an increase on the rate of interest on school land certificates be reduced and that a committee of the legislature be appointed to investigate the question of combining into one general board or control the many separate boards that now supervise the state institutions.

THE Governor's message in full will be found on another page. He recommends a commission to investigate the question of taxation. He cautions the legislature not to increase schools for higher education at expense of common schools, and recommends that the state publish text books of their own. He endorses Auditor Dunn's recommendation for a general board of control. He approves of the Wisconsin system of county asylums. With reference to the binding twine industry Mr. Lind thinks that if the matter is properly handled the product can be furnished to the farmers for less money than in the past. He furthers recommends that the issuing of railroad passes be abolished.

WE think the old advice of think twice before acting would have been excellent advice to young Mr. Gray, the new Mayor of Minneapolis, to have followed. In that case he might not have made the blunder of offering an important office to a man and then withdrawing the offer before the nomination was sent to the council. Major Schaeffer enjoys the unique position of being kicked out of the office of chief of police before he was ever in it. The mayor says that no political pressure has been brought to bear upon him to bring about the change, but that he finds he made an error in judgment in the first case. It is a question of a very suspicious nature. Still if the mayor is to be taken at his word he has certainly shown courage in thus publicly acknowledging a fault.

WHAT a different spirit animates the legislature of Minnesota from that which is prevalent among the men now assembled and assembling at Bismarck! Both legislatures have to elect United States senators. At St. Paul, save that there is a little flurry over the speakership and a few appointments by the Governor that the senate must ratify, the members are prepared to go right to the business of the people, and that is what they were sent there for. Chauncan K. Davis has not even opened up headquarters. Everything is comparatively quiet at least as compared with the violent state of affairs in North Dakota where the sharp contest is going on over the United States senatorship. Men in an overexcited state of mind cannot legislate.

IN referring to the fact that the Hon. P. M. Ringdal has accepted position on the railway and warehouse commission, the Alexandria Post News says:

"This is a very satisfactory appointment. It gives the Red River valley two members and the state secures a majority of the board. There is undoubtedly a feeling among the farmers that there has been and is something wrong in the grain inspection department. If there is Mr. Ringdal will find it, for he will be on his mettle to find such charges against the farmers and will find it, if it is there. If he does find it, it will be rectified, if he does not find it the system of grain inspection as put in operation and carried on by the Republicans will be vindicated. The issue is one of transportation rates which is Mr. Ringdal's hobby. He will be where he can do the most good rectifying wrongs if there are any, and clearing the atmosphere. The Republicans are not at all sorry to find their opponents in control of the commission.

CITY SCHOOLS.

The Total Enrollment Up To Date is Eleven Hundred.

Supt. John Moore, of the city schools has just completed his report for the first term of school. This report includes the work and attendance during the last four months. The total enrollment is 1100; boys, 484; girls 617. This is an increase in attendance over last year of 80. The number of pupils in the primary department is 335; intermediate, 386; grammer, 129; high school, 98. Those under 8 years of age, 223; between 8 and 16, 853; between 16 and 21, 111 and over 21, 3. The average daily attendance has been 875. Compared with last year this is an increase in daily attendance of 56.

There are in the schools two teachers not including the superintendent. Twenty-

Notes From Exchanges.

St. Hilaire Spectator: John Sebley, the stenographer who has been employed by the St. Hilaire Lumber Co., the past six months left Saturday for Crookston where he has accepted a like position.

Aitkin Age: David M. Clough will retire from the duties of chief executive next Monday with the respect and esteem of the people of the state. His successful administration has been gratifying to his friends and a disappointment to his enemies.

Aitkin Age: The Pine County Record must be going out of the old year backward in a fit of blues, as it comes to us this week with the first page where the last page ought to be, and printed in blue ink. We trust it will get its face turned the right way before beginning the year of grace 1899.

Little Falls Transcrip: Jos. Bray, a business man, and one of the oldsettlers of Red Lake Falls, visited friends in the city Wednesday evening. Mr. Bray states that the several Little Falls men who have recently gone into the lumber business in that city are doing very well, and especially Wm. Reid—now about one month ago opened a new city store there.

Farm Stock and Home: The way the girls at the Minnesota School of Agriculture take hold of agricultural studies indicates that they propose to answer the question: "Why do not more women manage farms," by preparing themselves for increasing the number of such managers, if it should be necessary to do so, or for valuable "assistant managers," at all events.

Moorhead News: The supreme court of Minnesota has decided that the law making appropriations for the purchase of seed wheat for farmers is unconstitutional on the ground that the act appropriates public money for a private purpose. But not the least lost sight of the fact that counties were held liable for the reimbursement to be spent and that the money expended to buy seed wheat and that the counties in their turn held the farmers receiving the wheat accountable to them, and therefore the money advanced by the state was not an appropriation granted, but a loan?

Pelican Record: Many good suggestions have been offered at the meeting of the State Teacher's Association in St. Paul this week. One of the best we have seen is that the election of county superintendent be taken out of politics and that important office be filled at a convention of one delegate from each school district in the county, and the term of office to begin Aug. 1 instead of Jan. 1, and thus provide against the possibility of a general change of policy in the middle of the school year. This suggestion is offered by Prof. A. E. Engstrom, president of the association.

Detroit Record: P. O. Stephens, deputy game warden, made a tentable in the capture of unrabbed game this week, at Pine Point, where he secured forty-two saddles of venison and over one hundred partridges in the possession of Alf. Cooney. He brought the entire outfit to Detroit, where it was shipped to St. Paul by State Game Warden Fullerton. Cooney was arrested and bound over to the district court. There were a large number of Indians about Cooney's place when the venison was captured, and some of them were disposed to be ugly and to resist seizure of the game and the arrest of Cooney, but others expressed satisfaction over Mr. Stephens action and were glad to see action taken which would prevent the wholesale slaughter of the reservation game. The wiser Indians, as well as white men, realize that all game will be exterminated in a few years if wholesale slaughter for market is not stopped.

A DYNAMITE TRAMP.

The Explosive Stuff Used in An Attempt to Kill Wm R. Brown.

VAN R. BROWN, county attorney for Red Lake Falls county, was very nearly killed at his office yesterday afternoon. He noticed a mysterious parcel above the transome when he entered. After transacting some business with some clients he concluded to investigate. The door was partly open. He reached for the article, but as he is a rather short man he was unable to grasp it firmly so it slipped from his fall-ing on the outside of the door. The explosion that followed shattered the door and did other damage, but fortunately Mr. Brown was not much injured.

Who the dynamiters are is not yet known, though certain persons are suspected. It looks as if Brown's persecutors were determined that he would not be county attorney for he had taken the office but the day before. Such a black crime as this attempted assasination seldom disgraces modern history. It reminds one of the Chicago anarchists or the Russian Nihilist plots.

BOND BUSINESS.

The Blanks Are Signed and the Money in the City Treasury.

The money accruing to the city from the sale of the city bonds was received yesterday morning. The sum was $37,235. All business in connection with the issue of these documents was, of course, completed. Mayor Brown spent several hours Monday morning in the mayor's quarters in the new city hall, signing the bond blanks. The city comptroller and city clerk soon added their signatures, and the question became past history.

Receives Damages.

In the case of John Wulworth against T. R. Clyndale which was tried in the justice court before Judge Holt on Tuesday last the jury gave the plaintiff a verdict, of nine dollars and a half.

Mr. Clyndale claims that for months he has been trying to get Mr. Wulworth to move out of a room that the latter had rented from him. Failing in this, on Dec. 17, 1898, he removed the effects and piled them at Wulworth's peanut stand. Wulworth sued for damages to the extent of $80 and received only part of that.

A Safe Deposit.

Had one been directly opposite the door that opens upon the stairs leading to the second floor of the Walker block on Saturday afternoon last at 4 o'clock he would have undoubtedly have been greatly surprised or if he did not have time to be surprised he would have felt assured that something had dropped, and perhaps he might have assumed a reclining position with the rapidity of lightning. For at that time Holmes's safe was coming with swift strides down the stairway. Fortunately the door was open so as it did not have to force a passage into the open air. With a mighty roar it shot out onto the sidewalk and having reached terra firma, or as near to that as possible, and as possible, it rested from its labors. No one was hurt and soon the iron monster found the heights from which it had accidentally fallen.

School of Agriculture.

The Minnesota School of Agriculture is one of the most important departments of the State University. The term that ended just before Christmas was the most successful in the history of the school. The attendance was larger and the average attendance of the girls almost doubling that of a year ago. The girl students are considered particularly bright and industrious, the teachers are unanimous in their praise of them. The second term of the school year always brings the greatest number of students and it is expected that the present facilities will prove wholly inadequate. "More and larger class rooms, and more dormitories and facilities will be imperatively demanded," says the Farm, Stock and Home, "and the demand will probably be supplied by the coming legislature."

Black Patti's Troubadours.

The exulted standing and reputation of Black Patti, the extraordinary excellence of her Troubadours, and the phenominal success of their performances elsewhere, makes the appearance of this remarkable company of singers, dancers and comedians to this city an event of immence public interest. Black Patti's song is the triumphs for all the leading music cities of Europe and America are without parallel. She is one of the most popular prima donnas in the world, and has appeared in song before the largest and most distinguished audiences that ever assembled to applaud a cantatrice. She has been the recipient of distinguished honors paid to her by the royalty of Europe, and nearly every representative musical organization in the United States has acknowledged her wonderful vocal gifts by the presentation of costly medals, diplomas and decorations. In addition to her bumtiful voice and exquisite art, nature has endowed her with a bright intellect, and queenly form; and if it was not for the accident of race and color, she would unquestionably attain distinction in Grand opera equal to that enjoyed by Melba, Calve, Albani, and the world famous diva after whom she is named. This company appears at the Grand Opera house, Crookston, Jan. 10.

—Tuesday evening the old Masonic rooms were lighted up, but this time it was for the Modern Woodmen, who were holding their first meeting in their new quarters.

—A slight change has been made in the baggage room of the Great Northern station. The hanggngeman can now do his work without being interrupted by the public.

—Friday night the latest in the social line, the Diamond Social club, will hold a dance in the G. A. R. hall. The most graceful in the round dances will be fittingly rewarded.

—The merchants have agreed to close their shops at 6:30 p. m., for the next two months. This gives the clerks a chance to enjoy themselves during the evenings and the proprietors a chance to get acquainted with the folks at home.

—Elling Knudson, who has been confined to the house for three years on account of a stroke of paralysis, died last Friday night at his home in Sampson's addition. He was seventy-six years old. Mr. Knudson was an old soldier and a member of Col. Cobham post.

—Knute Buamme, a man aged eighty years, who lives with his son a few miles west of town, died last Saturday night. Thursday night of last week the old gentleman left the house at night and before he could be found he was so badly frozen that the result was fatal.

—The report of business done in the United States land office during the month of December is as follows: The total number of entries made was 133. There was 15 final proofs, one timber culture proof, and 25 cash entries. The cash receipts amounted to $12,133.31.

—The university contingent, Angus McKinnon, Jay Durand and Bruce Harris, left Monday for Minneapolis. They claim to have had a delightful vacation but nevertheless they are so taken up with the "U" that they are not displeased with the prospect of getting back to work.

—F. P. Raymond is the latest addition to the faculty of the Business College. Mr. Haymond hails from Geneva, Iowa. He has just completed a special commercial course at Valparaiso and will have charge of that department in the college here, together with the short hand work.

—Judge Watts' present quarters not being large enough or sufficiently convenient for chambers, he has rented a couple of other rooms in the same block in which he is now, alongside the Columbia club. One of these has just been vacated by Major Mix who will have his office in future in A. R. Holston's old rooms.

—Many a merry dancer glided over the floor of the new city hall last night. The occasion was a party given by the proprietor of the Grand Central hotel. Louie Morin and Frank Magneau very kindly furnished the dancing room. A delicious lunch was served at the hotel during a rest from the giddy whirl.

—The Methodist church and the Scandinavian M. E. church both held watchnight services last Saturday night. The services began about 11 o'clock and lasted till the New Year was ushered in. This custom of spending the last hours of the old year in quiet meditation is a beautiful one, though not now by any means confined to that single denomination.

Advice to Consumptives

There are three great remedies that every person with weak lungs, or with consumption itself, should understand. These remedies will cure about every case in its first stages; and many of those more advanced. It is only the most advanced that are hopeless. Even these are wonderfully relieved and life itself greatly prolonged.

What are these remedies? Fresh air, proper food and of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. Be afraid of it! Fat-nutritious food and drink plenty of milk. Do not forget that Scott's Emulsion is the oldest, the most thoroughly tested and the highest endorsed of all remedies for weak throats, weak lungs and consumption in all its stages.

You can find it in all druggists.

Poor and Weak

Catarrh and Bronchial Trouble—Had no Appetite—Now Better in Every Way—A Delicate Child.

"Some time since I took a sudden cold and could not get rid of it. Being subject to catarrh and bronchial trouble I coughed terribly. I lost my appetite and grew poor and weak and I did not feel like work. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. In a short time the cough disappeared, I slept well, had a good appetite and I was better in every way. Last spring I was not feeling well, I had no appetite and no strength. I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon felt more like work. My little nephew was a delicate child and had a humor which troubled him so he could not rest at night. He has taken a few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and now he has a good appetite and is able to sleep." Miss ANNIE J. FREEMAN, South Duxbury, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the One True Blood Purifier. All druggists, $1.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner pills, aid digestion. 25c.

Changed Quarters.

The Modern Woodmen have leased for five years the rooms on the third story of the Fournet block which have been occupied by the Masons. Two other orders, the U. C. T. council and the Elks, will share the use of the rooms with them. The workmen have been using the I. O. O. F assembly room, but so many lodges do the same thing that it has been almost impossible to make arrangements for any extra meetings. The Masons have their new quarters on the third story of the Wallace block.

Had Never Been Well.

"I have never been well or strong but since I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I have felt quite well. It is a good medicine to restore strength. I was always troubled with pimples but the first bottle gave me relief and I soon more permanently cured me." Annette Messerle, 124 Atlantic Street St. Paul, Minn.

Hood's pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla. Be sure to get Hood's.

REPORT OF MAJOR DALY.

Chief Surgeon of the Army Found "Secret Chemicals" in the Beef.

Washington, Jan. 3.—The war investigating commission held a brief executive session and at noon adjourned until Tuesday, Jan. 3. There was no important action and the matter of recalling Commissary General Eagan, Major General Shafter or Major General Miles, as a result of the agitation over the beef issues to the army in the way, remains undetermined.

The commission has made public a report, heretofore omitted, bearing on the beef controversy. It is from Major W. H. Daly, chief surgeon at army headquarters at Tampa, prior to the sailing of the Shafter expedition, and is as follows:

"Washington, Sept. 21, 1898. Assistant Adjutant General, Headquarters of the Army, Washington. Sir: I have the honor to report in the interest of the service that in the several inspections I made in the various camps and troop ships at Tampa, Jacksonville, Chickamauga and Porto Rico, that I found the fresh beef to be apparently preserved with secret chemicals, which destroys its natural flavor and which I also believe to be detrimental to the health of the troops.

"While on duty at the headquarters of the army at Tampa, at the time of the embarkation of the 'Shafter expedition,' Colonel Weston, the efficient chief commissary, showed me a quarter of beef that had already, as a test, been 60 hours in the sun without being perceptibly tainted, so far as the sense of smell could detect. It is impossible to keep fresh beef so long untainted in the sun in that climate without the use of deleterious preserves, such as boric acid, salicylic acid or nitrate of potash injected into it in quantities likely to be hurtful to the health of the consumer. At Ponce, Porto Rico, food arriving on the transports from the United States was also of the same character, being apparently preserved by injected chemicals to a deficient cold storage."

CONDEMNED THE MEAT.

Official Reports Unsparingly Denounce Beef Furnished Soldiers.

Washington, Dec. 31.—The war investigating commission held only a short session devoted to executive business. There were no witnesses ready for examination.

The commission discussed a synopsis of the reports of officers to General Miles on the results obtained by canned beef, fresh beef, rosin beef, in campaigns in Cuba and Porto Rico. These reports to General Miles unsparingly condemned the meat furnished as neither palatable nor nutritious and as virtually unfit for food.

The Spanish Oath.

In Austria a Christina witness is sworn before a crucifix between two lighted candles, and, holding up his right hand, says, "I swear by God, the Almighty and All Wise, that I will speak the pure and full truth, and nothing but the truth, in answer to anything I may be asked by the court."

Jewish witnesses, while using the same words, add to their solemnity by placing their hands on the page of a Bible on which is printed the third commandment.

A Belgian witness swears to be veracious in these words, "I will speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; so help me God and all the saints."

The Spanish oath is more elaborate. The witness, kneeling on his right knee, places his hand on the sacred book, and, being asked by the judge, "Will you swear to God and by those holy gospels to speak the truth to all you may be asked?" answers, "Yes, I swear." Thereupon the judge says, "Then, if thus you do God will reward you, and if not will require of you." In some parts of the country the ceremony is different. The witness forms a cross by placing the middle of his thumb on the middle of his forefinger, and, kissing his thumb—a practice which would probably be very familiar to some English witnesses—exclaims, "By thiscross I swear!"—Law Notes.

The Ballad Passing.

A celebrated musical critic was recently married in church, and after the ceremony, as the wedding procession marched down the aisle, the organist played the wedding march from "Lohengrin." When critic ran out the bridegroom stopped to the music and addressed the wondering assembly thus:

"I know I am committing a breach of etiquette as well as propriety in doing this, but I am not to blame. It is my musical organ, upon which has become ineffably sensitive by reason of the critical nature of my duties."

Then he drew from the pocket of his dress coat a well thumbed copy of the score of "Lohengrin." Opening it at the march, he read over to the organist and said:

"Went offended my ear was the fact that in the seventeenth bar of the duo page passage you flatted very badly, and in the andante movement you slurred the appoggiatura. Now," putting his finger upon the passage, "let us try that again."

Once more the organ pealed forth, and this time the player, conscious that the great critic was listening to him, accomplished his duty with credit to himself and to the great satisfaction of the critic.—Fred Mc Up.

Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 6.—Ed. Norsehelm, a sailor of this place, aged 26, was run over here by an engine on the Rose Lake Short line. He died of his injuries. He had been drinking and was lying on the track asleep.

Canadian Woods in Winter.

The country of the Little Saguenay is as rough as any part of the Rocky mountains. It is the custom to dress lightly for traveling, notwithstanding the 30 degrees below zero, and even then one perspires very freely, making it impossible to stop long for a rest, on account of the chill of the open parts. Ice forms on eyebrow, hair and mustache, while the sweat freezes in scales on the back of one's neck. The snow falls from the trees on the voyager, the melting slightly from the heat of the body, forms cakes of ice. Shades of Nansen and all the arctic men! I do not understand why they are not all pillars of ice unless it is that there are so trees to dump snow on them.

The spruces and hemlock of these parts all point upward in straight as one could set a lance, to resist the ocean's last fall of snow. If one loosed ever so little out of the perpendicular, it could not survive the tremendous averages of 30 feet of snowfall each winter. Their branches, too, do not grow long as they would snap under the weight. Every one who on the evergreens has its little burden of white, and without intermission the snow comes sifting down from the sky through the heat of the winter.

When we stopped and the creak of the snowshoes was still, we could almost hear our hearts beat. We could certainly hear the creaking of the tobacco burning in our pipes. It had a soothing, an almost seductive, influence, that smells of snow. So solemn is it, so little you feel yourself, that it is a consciousness which brings unconsciousness, and the calm white forest is almost deadening in its beauty. The winter forest means death.—Frederic Remington in Harper's.

Faith is, after all, the basis of banking, and if there in no faith there can be no banking. For that reason it is possible for those who are skilled in bookkeeping, but who are dishonest, to carry on enormous for a series of months or even years, dishonest methods by which even the most expert accounts are deceived and can be deceived as long as this dishonest man can have access to the books.

The record of embarrassments or failures has, in almost every instance, under rigid examination, been found dishonest methods of this kind were carried on by those who had daily access to the books, in one case for a period covering at least 15 years. In that case the dishonest employee, knowing that his safety depended upon his ability to reach the books, refused to take a vacation. If the officers of the bank are unable to detect dishonesty of this kind—and if they adopted the most approved and scientific method of bookkeeping—it is beyond reason to expect that a national bank examiner can do it.—Hon. Thomas A. Jones, President of Lincoln National Bank, New York, in North American Review.

The Pleasing Conches.

A personal allusion to the color of the negro's skin, a retort calling in question the nice conduct of the pastmaster's sister, and then two savages foaming at the mouth, their pouches wrapped round their arms, their bodies bent so as to protect their vitals and each knives quivering like snakes, stood in the middle of a room. The company withdrew themselves into the smallest space, stood on the tops of cooks, sad at the door the faces of the women looked in delight, while the pulpero, with a pistol and a bottle in his hands, closed down his grating and was ready for whatever might befall. "Negro," "Abijuna," "Minute," "carajo," and the knives flash and send out sparks and the returns de tie an tao jor, the fighters' arms up to the shoulder joints. In a moment all is over, and from the pulpero's right arm the blood drops in a stream on the sand floor, and all the company stop out and say the affair was a "vulleuta," "muy guapaso," and the two adversaries separate friendship over a tin mug of gin.—Saturday Review.

One Woman's Way.

"Speaking of women with saving dispositions," said Dixmyth, "my wife's in a class all by herself."

"How so?" queried his friend Hojax.

"Last week I bought an upright piano," replied Dixmyth, "and my wife made a hasty retreat from the store with it, so the polish wouldn't get scratched. Yesterday she made another cover of linen to go over the plush to protect that from getting soiled. Next week I suppose she'll make a called cover to protect the linen. Oh, I tell you when we have great big fertile minds."—Chicago News.

An Easy Promise.

In her heart love and duty strove for mastery, and duty won.

"No man shall wed me," she exclaimed, with enthused eyes and quivering lips, "who does not promise me that if he is ever president of the United States he will use his influence to have battleships christened with water!"

Such was the ardor of his passion that Algernon hesitated not a moment.

"I promise!" he cried, and fell upon his knees.—Detroit Journal.

A Fine Phrasing.

There are some classes of people, says The Cornhill Magazine, who seem to think that when they speak to a person they must use certain peculiar phrases, wholly strange to them under ordinary circumstances, as, for instance, the phrase reply of the laborer to the minister's words of praise concerning a fine fat pig which he saw in hisoky, greeting with satisfaction and repletion, "Oh, sir, if only we was all as fit to die as my old sow be!"

And Won.

"Didn't the bride get a fine lot of presents?"

"Yes, indeed. She played her cards well."—Providence Journal.

GUARDIAN ANGEL.

"I thoroughly believe," said Thompson, as he lit a cigarette, "that inanimate objects often absorb, so to speak, the personality of any one with whom they have long been in contact."

"Explain!"

"I will, by a story. Several years ago I was spending the holidays with a friend —John Yarrow—in Maryland. His house was of stone and stood in a lonely place. Yarrow had come with his carriage to greet me in person, and not having seen each other for many months we had much of mutual interest to talk about. We had been conversing for a half hour perhaps and he I almost reached our destination,' when Yarrow paused in his narration of some trifling incident and pointed out as a great favorite of his an ancient beech tree growing along the road some rods ahead.

"So engrossed was I to our conversation up to this time that I gave slight attention to our whereabouts as we drove along. But with the first glance at that tree and at the country to the right and left of me and we were following"—here Thompson straightened up and fixed me with his eyes—"I became conscious of a faint and subtle but unmistakable sense of familiarity with my surroundings. At first the feeling was so exceedingly delicate it almost escaped me, but the more I looked about me the stronger it grew. Even that particular gnarled and twisted beech, in a dim and eerie, spectral fashion, had a place somewhere, somehow, in my memory. That was the first time I had ever been in the state. So far as I am aware I had never seen any pictures or even read a description of the valley to which Yarrow had asked me to spend the holidays. It is a fact, though, which you may question at your own supralement, that ever since my ancestors came to this country, long ago, their home, without exception, up to my father's time, had been in Maryland.

"As first I was inclined to treat the occurrence as a mere obtuseness of a nature too imaginative mind. I said nothing about it to Yarrow and did my best to divert my thoughts to other channels. But try as I would this haunting, fantastic sense of acquaintanceship clung to me and during the drive and increased to such a degree as to startle me almost when we entered the wide front door of the old stone house. That night the whole thing was brought to such a striking climax I shall never forget it.

"Yarrow had given me his room to sleep in and had taken up his quarters elsewhere. I retired and soon was sound asleep.

"How long I slept I do not know, but suddenly my eyes were open and I was wide awake. I felt a cold current of air upon me and with the quick intention of danger present I looked toward the window. There, sitting astride the window sill, with his feet on the floor, in my clothes and sharply silhouetted against the moonlight, was the long, lanky, cadaverous form of a negro. Now, although I am not totally a coward, I hope, I nevertheless am extremely susceptible to the sensation of fear.

"But on this occasion, to my utter astonishment, I regarded that silent, evil form that threatened me with absolute unconcern. I noted how sharp death's form was. I watched it there crept over me such a feeling of peace and comfort and absolute safety as I seldom have known. The negro then moved not a muscle, for my eyes became more accustomed to the light, I noticed for the first time that he was not looking at me, but over me, at something on the other side of my bed, and still with no sensation of fear and actuated more by a gentle curiosity than by any other motive I turned my head to the other direction and saw—I must have seen it when I went to bed last night, but I had put him now, at the peril of his life, motionless, petrified.

"What I saw was the spectral semblance of one of the most beautiful women I ever had seen in the life of mortals. Her eyes, gentle and filled with a mild reproach, were fixed upon the form in the window. She also was motionless. And although I was ten feet away, quaintly gowned in the style of another century, I felt face was one of supernal sweetness and touched with a shade of sorrow. It reminded me of my mother's. All sense of place and time was lost as I gazed, and then an irresistible impulse came upon me to speak and I slept.

"To my ordinance of the presence of my voiceless callers could I find neart morning light was streaming. And although I told Yarrow nothing of my adventure he mentioned quite casually at the breakfast table that a negro gardener whom he had discharged for insolence a few days before had been seen about the place the previous evening in a dangerous mood. He cautioned me to go about the country unarmed. But that day, I confess to my unbounded joy, a peremptory telegram from employers cut my visit short and sent me scurrying back to the city.

"I took a run out one week later to see my family," said Thompson on a abrupt. "I thought his story ended, "and on a rainy afternoon my mother and I were sitting in the attic for a look at the contents of several aged trunks. A shipment of hers had died in Maryland recently, she told me, and the trunks had been in storage ever her. Their contents represented the windfalls of the family tree for many generations.

"I found an old book presently that interested me. It was my mother, during a freak after trunk, delved merrily away and kept up a running conversation. Suddenly also straightened up with an ejaculation of pleasure and surprise.

"'George,' she said, 'I just spoke—here and see what your poor old mammy looked like when she was a girl! Here's a dear little miniature of Grandmother Knode, and it's perfectly beautiful!'

"I closed my book with a sigh and obeyed. Fully three seconds elapsed while I looked at the tiny portrait, with eyes that did not see. Then, with some sort of an indistinct groan I sprang upright to the door and so old stone house. I seized the life of ivory in a tumult of joy and fled to the nearest window. It was the face I had seen at Yarrow's—the face"—and Thompson's voice sank low—"of my guardian angel."—Porter Poore Sheehan in New York Advertiser.

NEWS IN MINNESOTA

At the end of the year Minnesota had to its credit $881,400.32.

The reception to Governor Lind at the Ryan was a marked success.

Marcus P. Hayne, well known attorney and president of the Minneapolis baseball club, is dead.

Wilmot Seager, formerly of Duluth, but lately a resident of Milwaukee, has assigned, with liabilities placed at $100,000.

Detective James G. Doyle has been appointed chief of police of Minneapolis and J. R. Canterbury chief of the fire department.

County hospitals for the chronic insane and no board of control are recommended by the state board of corrections and charities.

The Northwestern elevator at Grove City has been destroyed by fire; also about 25,000 bushels of wheat and two horses. Origin unknown.

Ex-Governor Merriam of St. Paul has gone to West Superior and taken the management of the Superior Water, Light and Power company.

The Duluth telephone franchise expires in the spring, and the various companies are at work booming aldermanic candidates favorable to their respective causes.

The number of deaths in Winona for the year just closed was 258, against 259 during 1897. Among the number dying were two that had completed a century—Mrs. Fredereck Behr, aged 100 years and 20 days, and Joseph Cohieszineki.

The board of trustees of the Minnesota Soldiers' home has issued its 11th annual report, showing that since it was established 1,219 soldiers have been admitted and given care. The average number of men that have been dependent on the home during the year is 363. The amount expended for the support of the home was $53,633.96, or $14,000 less than the preceding year.

Immigration to Minnesota last year fell behind, but it was an off year for immigration. The total number of arrivals was 4,063. The nationality of the immigrants was as follows: Germany, 499; Sweden, 1,322; Norway, 1,176; England, 24; Ireland, 104; Finland, 165; Denmark, 218; Austria Hungary, 401; Italy, 89; Spain, 1; Greece 7; Holland, 22; Portugal 6; Syria, 28.

State Bank Examiner Kenyon has issued a statement showing the condition of state banks at the close of business Sept. 20, and for comparison an abstract of the reports for Dec. 1. The comparison shows an increase in nearly every item and a substantial increase in resources of the two cash items "due from banks" and "cash on hand," also a large increase in deposits and due to banks, the increase in the two items being more than $1,800,000. The reserve exceeds $7,000,000, being 31 per cent and $2,400,000 in excess of the required reserve.

The annual meeting of the Minnesota State Agricultural society will be held at the rooms of the Commercial club in St. Paul on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 10, 11 and 12, 1809. The school of agriculture, the Minnesota State Breeders' association, the Farmers' Institute corps, State Horticultural society and other allied organizations, will co-operate with the agricultural society in the work of this meeting, making it exceedingly valuable from an educational standpoint. Reduced rates will be given on all railroads in the state.

A movement is on foot among the high schools of the state to organize an interscholastic athletic association to be composed of the athletic organizations of all the high schools in Minnesota. It is proposed to hold an annual field meet on the university campus every season. The object of such an organization is two-fold; first, to stimulate a keener interest in athletics among the high schools themselves, and second, to perfect an organization in which the university may look for reinforcements to its athletic forces. S. S. Parr of St. Cloud is chairman of a committee having the organization in charge.

The following Minnesota postmasters have been appointed during the week: Millersburg, Rice county, C. F. Cushman, vice Charles T. Miller, resigned; Marystown, Scott county, Ferdinand Bombach, vice Alvis Self, resigned; Sabin, Clay county, Carl Erickson, vice O. V. Olson, resigned; Walcott, Rice county, J. B. Heath, vice L. B. Knudson, removed; Adams, Mower county, Erick L. Slindee, vice James Slindee, resigned; Attica, Aitkin county, J. M. Grubb, vice Isaac Ostman, resigned; Northland, Polk county, Lewis Thompson, vice A. O. Oppeguard, resigned, and Oddessa, Big Stone county, Alonzo Eagon, vice Henry L. Zwiener, removed.

INDIANS ARE THREATENING.

Will Burn Reservation Pine Unless Cutting Is Stopped.

WALKER, Minn., Dec. 31.—Present timber agitation among the Chippewa Indians is not against the "dead and down" law, but against selling the pine on the reservation on the "standing timber estimate plan." There is a decidedly bitter feeling among the Indians on this matter, and prominent Indians openly declare that if the pine is sold as is now planned they will burn every stick of timber from the south line of the Leech lake reservation to the border.

Trip for the Red Men.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—Indian Commissioner Jones has directed Agent Sutherland at White Earth to have five Indians each from White Earth, Leech Lake, the Red Lake bands, and three Mille Lacs Indians prepare for a trip to Washington. The secretary will undoubtedly grant the necessary authority and the delegation should start some time next week. It is said that the principal object of the Indians in coming here at this time is to urge a change in the law requiring the estimation of their timber before it is sold.

A PRECIOUS HAUL.

I was a tall, thin lad of 13, just promoted to a stool in the office where my father was managing clerk, when a long season of trouble fell on our family party. Mother had a bad illness, little baby Mina died, and finally Fred, my younger brother, and I added to the general distress by taking scarlet fever very severely. Fred soon picked up again after the sharp month of fever, but I grew thinner and paler, and yet, as the doctor said I was not likely to give others my late complaint, I returned to my stool and my pen; not for long, however. My first day in the office was my last for a good while. Mr. Scramble, our middle partner (the firm was Bullion, Scramble & Snatch), happening to pass by, noticed my wretched looks and ordered me off work instantly. "Tranter," he said to my father, "that lad wants a change. Send him down to Eastport tomorrow, and I will take charge of him; for a month, mind you—not less. My children are there, and little Miss Bullion, so I know it is a famous place."

The good natured gentleman then hurried off to avoid any thanks. It was not the first kind act toward our family, and we knew well that "taking charge of me" meant paying for me.

"I'll give you a half crown for your first haul, my boy," said father laughing, as he saw my preparations for securing the treasures of the deep.

"Give you 5 shillings for a big fish," said kind Mr. Scramble.

I laughed and blushed.

At Eastport a lodging had been taken for me with a good old soul who had three sons on the high sea and another in the coast guard of the place. Nothing could be more delightful. She coddled and petted me in the house and promised me all sorts of delightful fishing and sailing expeditions outside. Her Jim, when off duty, took many a gentleman out fishing, and he should take me too.

My first duty, however, was to take a parcel to Marina Terrace, where six little Scrambles and golden haired Miss Bullion were planted, in charge of an old nurse, a lively nursery maid and a shortsighted but conscientious governess. Two of the children, Kitty Scramble and her bosom friend Miss Bullion of the golden locks, were hanging over the balcony. They knew me, and they knew the parcel, and there was a rush down stairs, during which I heard the plaintive voice of Miss Wrinkle imploring them to be ladylike.

But Eastport air evidently had the same life giving effect on them as it had on me, and they were a good deal more like wild colts than they were like young ladies. Hardly a sin at 10 years old!

"We're going out in a boat this afternoon, Will," said my friend Miss Kitty.

"And so am I," said I, smiling back at the little girl.

And then Miss Wrinkle's voice was heard again, and the two children vanished indoors.

Coast Guard Jim had a large party of gentlemen to take out that afternoon, and, being a modest youth, I allowed him to settle them well to their work before teasing him to bait my hook. So I had time to look about me.

After a strict search around I discerned a little rowing craft with a large party on board—four of the Scrambles, Miss Wrinkle, Miss Bullion and two little schoolboy cousins of the latter. Miss Kitty shook her handkerchief at me, and I answered with a great waving of my arm.

The pleasure boat came nearer and nearer to our fishing party, and at last I could hear the shrill voices of the little ones. Kitty and Miss Bullion had their arms around each other's neck, of course, and Miss Bullion's golden hair was blowing around Kitty's hat, to their great amusement.

I could not take my eyes off them. All at once something seemed to strike my eyelids—at least I can explain the sensation in no other way, so great was the shock to me when little Kitty Scramble, with a cry and a splash, fell overboard. In another second her friend, Miss Bullion was in the water, too, vainly trying to save her playfellow.

It took me one second to dash off my pea jacket and spring overboard—no one in our boat saw the accident till then, and I was yards ahead of Jim, who followed my example.

I could swim, for I used to go to the baths on Saturdays at home, and so a few strokes brought me up to the floating glory of little Miss Bullion's hair, which I grasped remorselessly, towing her along with me as I struck out for Kitty. Poor little soul! She was gasping and struggling with the waves, and on my approach seized me with the terrible clutch of the drowning.

I was a good swimmer, but this I knew would be fatal to all of us, so with the force of despair I shook her off and then seized her once again, saying in the firmest voice I could muster:

"Kitty, be still! Hold by my shoulder!"

The child heard and with a wonderful self control did as I bid her. Jim then came up and relieved me of little Miss Bullion, who was insensible, and between us we got the children on board our boat and then as quickly as possible rowed ashore, the pleasure boat following with the terrified governess and children.

Kind and helpful people awaited our landing, and the nearest house was put at the service of the half drowned little girls, and I was seized by main force and put to bed, too, the world persisting in regarding me as a hero.

After a sound sleep I awoke to find my father and Mr. Bullion beside my bed.

"You have our everlasting gratitude, William Tranter, for your heroic deed of yesterday," said the latter. "In your state of health, too, it was most praiseworthy. The doctor says the shock might have proved fatal." This was pleasant news for me. "But he is satisfied you have sustained no injury beyond temporary fatigue, and we purpose rewarding you in the manner we consider most beneficial to yourself and family—by giving your father, long a most valuable servant to us, a small but increasing share in our business."

Bullion, Scramble, Snatch & Tranter!" Could I believe my senses? But so it is, and I do consider my first haul the very best I ever made in my life.—New York News.

MANY A SLIP.

I am a young solicitor without practice. Dining with a friend I met a Mr. Van Scoup, a typical American, broad shouldered, tall, neatly dressed.

"So you're an attorney, then?" he said, addressing me.

"Yes, I am, worse luck."

"Ah! Business slack, then?"

"No, not that exactly, but it's humdrum work at the best; not exciting enough. Now a man like you is meeting with fresh experiences every day, and life's not run in a groove and tied up in red tape."

Van Scoup thought a moment, then he looked over at me in a critical sort of way.

"Do you want a real, live, exciting sort of job; no red tape about it?"

"Let's hear about it," I replied.

"Well, I've made my pile, so it's not much consequence to me, but there's one man on the face of God's earth that if I could only lay my hands on I'd be worth another $50,000. If you can hunt him down anywhere, I'll pay you well."

"What's he like? How does he mean so much to you? When was he seen last?" I exclaimed, as fast as I could.

"I'll answer that last right off—he's the dead image of me, as like as the halves of a split pea—what you call over here my double."

"But how can you get the money from him? It's not a criminal offense to be a man's double."

"You find the man, and he'll know right off whether I'm going to get the dollars or not."

"But does he differ from you in nothing?"

"Well, that's the most extraordinary thing in the whole bag of tricks, for he's got his initials tattooed on the soles of his feet."

"What!" I exclaimed.

"Yes, on the soles of his feet. It's a ticklish job, I admit."

Van Scoup entertained us with a long rigmarole as to how he had only to find this double, whom he knew to be in London, and to produce him in New York to have him convicted of an impudent fraud by which he had absolutely got immense sums of money by personating Van Scoup in several places in the States.

Of course I never gave the matter a moment's consideration until one night I felt I should like to have a Turkish bath, and so found myself in Northumberland avenue luxuriating in true eastern fashion.

I had not been in one of the hot rooms long before I saw the big, burly form of the American coming through the doors.

I rose from the marble slab to greet him.

"Well, Van Scoup, this is a queer place to meet you. Why, we're dining together tomorrow evening."

"So we are, but that's no reason why we shouldn't enjoy ourselves together tonight, is it?"

"Of course not."

He took one of the wooden lounge chairs beside the marble slab on which I was extended at full length and we had a very interesting conversation.

"I've not found your double yet," I said. "Have you seen or heard of him?"

"No, I've not. But you wouldn't expect to find him here, would you?"

I laughingly replied: "No, perhaps not. Of course you would be able to see his feet here, wouldn't you?"

He laughed. "Ah, so you would! Never thought of that. I ought to have had a private detective put on at every bath in London."

I suggested, "It wouldn't have been a bad plan if it was worth the trouble."

"Oh, it's worth the trouble!"

Time passed on, and my companion was the first to announce his intention of being shampooed, and left for the cooler room.

I staid a little longer than I anticipated, and was rather annoyed at finding a considerable rush on the shampooers, so that possibly I was not undergoing that delightful process of being thumped and banged about till quite 20 minutes after my friend had left me. Shampooers are very communicative sort of men, and the one operating upon me was no exception to the rule.

"That's a fine piece of tattooing work on your chest," I said, looking at an immense design covering his whole chest, a crucifixion in fact.

"Yes, it's about as good as you'll see in a day's march, but it's a silly game to play with yourself; it gives you no end of pain at the time, and it doesn't give you a chance if ever times go bad with you."

His words seemed to burst upon me with a new thought, a splendid idea, better than the plan of Van Scoup's of having private detectives at the baths—ask all the shampooers. So I asked:

"I suppose sometimes some of the bathers themselves have been tatooed?"

"Oh, heaps of 'em, especially those that have traveled!"

"Seen any lately?" I asked.

"Why, there's never a day passes without seeing some of 'em. Only the turn but one before you—a big American he was—he had been tattooed on the soles of his feet."

"What!" I exclaimed, jumping up and almost running out of the shampooing room, regardless of being in paris naturalibus and that my head and eyes were covered with soapsuds.

"Stay a moment, sir!" the man exclaimed, but I was not to be stopped. A sort of frantic frenzy seemed to take me as I dashed from the shampooing room, slipped accidentally into the plunge bath, swam to the other end, seized a huge white sheet from the astonished attendant and rushed madly up the stairs to the cooling rooms.

"The man with the tattoo marks on the soles of his feet!" I exclaimed. "Where is he? Where is he?"

By this time my curious appearance had attracted considerable attention, when a small boy attendant ran up. "Do you mean a tall gentleman, with black hair and a tuft of hair on his chin like a goat?"

"That's the man!" I almost shrieked.

"Well, sir, he's gone. He went almost as soon as he came up from the hot room. He said he couldn't stop, and he told me to say that if any one asked he had forgotten an appointment and would not be at the dinner party tomorrow."

I dined the next evening with my American client, but I didn't tell him how near I had been to earning his dollars.—New York World.

Sharks and the Dead Whale.

The presence of any large quantity of easily obtainable food is always sufficient to secure the undivided attention of the shark tribe. When "cutting in" whales at sea, I have often been amazed at the incredible numbers of these creatures that gather in a short space of time, attracted by some mysterious means from heaven only knows what remote distances. It has often occurred to us, when whaling in the neighborhood of New Zealand, to get a sperm whale alongside without a sign of a shark below or a bird above. Within an hour from the time of our securing the vast mass of flesh to the ship the whole area within at least an acre has been alive with a seething multitude of sharks, while from every quarter came drifting silently an incalculable host of sea birds, converting the blue surface of the sea into the semblance of a plain of new fallen snow.

The harpooners and officers from their lofty position on the cutting stage slew scores upon scores by simply dropping their keen edged blubber spades upon the soft crowns of the struggling fish, the only place where a shark is vulnerable to instant death. The weapon sinks into the creature's brain, he gives a convulsive writhe or two, releases his hold and slowly sinks, followed in his descent by a knot of his immediate neighbors, all anxious to provide him with prompt sepulture within their own yearning maws.—National Review.

The Four Greatest Poets.

Who are the four greatest poets of the world? The question was one, we gather from Sir Edward Hamilton's monograph, which used to exercise Mr. Gladstone. About the first three places indeed he believed that there could be no reasonable question. They must be assigned to Homer, Dante and Shakespeare. But about the fourth place Mr. Gladstone found great difficulty. He considered that there were four competitors—Æschylus, Virgil, Milton and Goethe. We wonder how many of our readers would at a first guess select Mr. Gladstone's final choice? It was Goethe.

Who, in recent days, have been the greatest masters of English? This was another question which Mr. Gladstone was fond of considering. He decided in favor of two as greater than all others—Cardinal Newman and Mr. Ruskin. It is interesting to recall the fact that Mr. Morley, in a lecture, answered the same question. According to him, the great masters of English in our generation have been three—Carlyle, Macaulay and Mr. Ruskin. The last named alone appears, it will be seen, in both lists.—London News.

Life's Changes.

While in the drawing room coach on his way home from Philadelphia not long ago a New Yorker found himself face to face with a woman whom he had not seen for some time.

"Why, Mrs. Blank," cried the New Yorker, "how"—

At the woman's reproachful glance he stopped. "Not Mrs. Blank," she corrected. "I got my divorce from Mr. Blank some time ago. I'm now Mrs. Dash. Let me present my husband, Mr. Dash," whereupon a man got up and bowed.

"You—you don't mean it!" gasped the New Yorker. "I hadn't heard. You and Mr. Dash haven't been married very long, have you?"

"Oh, no, indeed," said the woman, "about 45 minutes, I think," consulting her watch. "We're on our wedding trip now."

The New Yorker gasped again. Then, "Bless you, my children," he cried and fled to the smoking car.—New York Sun.

An Offset.

"This is Mr. Pueer, is it not?"

"Yes, sir."

"You have rented a house fronting on Mulberry square, I believe?"

"I have."

"Well, my name is Fergason. I have rented the house next to yours, and by a queer mistake the man I sent to clean it up so I could move into it went to the wrong place and cleaned up yours. His bill, which I settled, is quite moderate—only $1.50—and I thought that if the work proved satisfactory on inspection perhaps you would not object to assuming the payment of that amount."

"Not at all, sir, but I shall charge you $1.50 for one day's occupancy of my house. That, I think, makes us even, sir."—Chicago Tribune.

EFFIE'S MARRIAGE.

"When is he coming, my charming bridegroom, mamma?" asked Effie Palgrave one day, much as if she had consented to the engagement all along.

"Whenever you like, dear."

"I hope he won't expect me to be sentimental! I suppose not, though. An old fogy like him will be too rheumatic to trouble me with demonstrative affection."

"He is only 45, my dear child."

"Very likely, but he is a stiff as a poker, and when he dances he lifts one off one's feet and shakes the room."

"Married men don't often trouble themselves to dance with their wives, Effie; therefore you can banish that grief from you at all events."

The ceremony was over—tender youth tied to middle age for life. For better, for worse, Effie had swallowed that much gilded pill.

Even to think of Laurence Leicester was now a sin, she told herself. Yet she met him everywhere, her eyes would stray to the door until he entered, and she allowed him to talk to her and put on her wraps as he had been wont to do.

Had he and she not been so basely handled she would have behaved differently, she also told herself, for her husband, she was forced to own, was a good man.

Too late she had learned that Laurence's coming marriage to Miss Falsey had been contradicted. She had been duped into a hateful union, and it gave her almost a right to permit her old lover to hover around her.

Ah, almost—not quite—the right. Not a great deal of difference in the phrase, yet enough to torment her conscience at moments, such as when her husband took the wrap from Laurence's hands with firmness and dignity—by the way, how dignified he could look at times, considering that he could not dance—or when he framed her small face in his hands and turned it toward him, looking at at it with a patient mournfulness which hurt her more than if he had struck her.

It was not long after this that Laurence Leicester went home from his club with a white face and a dizzy brain. He had been playing higher even than usual, fortune had made a dead set against him, and he was a disgraced man unless he could have the command of several thousands. He reviewed his position, but knew that he could not lay his hands on as many hundreds.

Yes, there was one way, but—

The blood mounted to his brain as he took a scented, prettily tinted letter from his desk in Effie's beloved handwriting. Hitherto he had never held it without putting it to his lips, but now he could only hold it stiffly while he struggled for power to act a chivalrous man's part and destroy it.

Twice he put it away, a third time he took it out again, thrust it into his pocket, rushed out and made his way to Grosvenor square.

What were a few thousands to her? Her millionaire husband was so lavish he would never know for what purpose they had been used.

Naturally, he would not threaten her—in fact, he would not, except as a last resource, show her the letter. She was so good that she loved his fair name better than he did.

* * * * * * *

"Let me see whether I take in your meaning, Laurence. I am to rob my husband in order to"—

"Effie! What a word! He gives you untold thousands to do what you like with."

"In fact, I might construe your words into a threat. If I like, I may buy back my letter—that is, if I fear my husband's anger should you feel disposed to show it to him?"

"For heaven's sake don't look like that, Effie," he cried, "and forget all I have said. I am a cur. There, see," and he tore the letter into fragments. "I am a disgraced man, and desperation led me to this dastardly conduct."

Effie staid his hand as he was about to throw away the pieces; then she composedly gathered them up in her handkerchief. "Effie," he repeated in unfeigned anguish, "forgive me and forget this wretched business. Let me fling away those bits of paper." Forgive him! Yes, perhaps in time she could do that, but forget it—never, and she loved this man—loved him instead of the husband who was waiting for the day when her heart would cease to go astray and turn toward its rightful place.

"Laurence, don't press me for an answer tonight. Come tomorrow morning."

"But I want no answer," he said vehemently. "I tell you my madness is over, and I humbly beg your pardon. Of course I'll come tomorrow just to see you, if you don't hate the sight of me, that is."

He gave her a long look as he left her. She was so still, and if she said goodby the words were inaudible. And there she remained, half stunned, yet mechanically thinking.

"It was best so. I will never see him again, but I might have broken down if I had attempted the final farewell. He shall not be disgraced, but the assistance shall come through my husband. He will help him, I know, and he is so good and so patient that he will not expect too much from me—just—at first."

* * * * * * *

"I say," said one club acquaintance of Laurence's to another, "Leicester is in luck. I wish I had his appointment. Uncommon good one!"

"In India, is it not?"

"Yes."

* * * * * * *

Effie did not make quite a full confession at that time, not until later when they had drawn nearer together.

The exact words of his reply not even to her mother did she repeat, but they caused tears of repentance and of gladness to flow in abandonment from her heart.

As time wore on when they took their daily drives the spectacle of the quiet faced man and the now blooming, happy young wife caused much talk and much wonderment that for once the meddling of "The Fate" had not wrecked two or more lives.—London Argosy.

A Pastor's Joke.

The Very Rev. Dr. McGregor of St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh, is, like Zacchens of old, a man of little stature. When in a strange pulpit, he is always provided with a footstool to raise him to the necessary height in the eyes of the congregation. On one occasion when preaching in a country church he found that the necessary footstool had not been provided. The reverend doctor, who has a keen sense of the humorous, on standing up found that he was quite invisible to the congregation and announced as the first psalm for the day, "Lord, from the depths to thee I cried." Even the serious Scotch folk could not repress the smile that followed this dry announcement.—London Chronicle.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure by Advertisement.

(Last publication February 16, 1899.)

Default has been made in the condition of that certain mortgage containing power of sale, dated the 15th day of November, 1892, filed in the office of the register of deeds in and for Polk county, on the 22d day of November, 1892, at 11 o'clock a. m., and recorded in book "51" of mortgages, on pages 264 and 265, whereby Christian T. Morben and Olea Morben, his wife, mortgagors, mortgaged to The American Freehold-Land Mortgage Company of London, (Limited), of London, England, mortgagee, the certain tract or parcel of real estate situated in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, described as follows, to-wit: The east half of the northwest quarter (E ½ of the NW ¼) and the north half of the southwest quarter (N ½ of the SW ¼) of section twenty (20), in township one hundred and forty-seven (147) of range forty-two (42), containing 160 acres, more or less, according to the United States government survey thereof, together with the appurtenances thereunto belonging, by which default said power of sale has become operative;

And no action or proceeding, at law or otherwise, has been instituted to recover the debt secured thereby, or any part of the same; and there is now due and claimed to be due on said mortgage and said debt the sum of five hundred and twenty-one and sixty hundredths ($521.60) dollars:

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of said power of sale and the statute said mortgage will be foreclosed and said premises sold at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash by the sheriff of said Polk county, or his deputy, on Saturday, the 18th day of February,

1899, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston in said county, to pay said debt with interest, taxes, (if any) twenty-five (25) dollars attorney's fees, and the costs and disbursements allowed by law.

CHAPTER I.

Captain Turner had been up since first call for reveille, had spent a shivering hour at his troop stables, had tramped through the snow from the creek valley up past the long line of ramshackle sheds that defaced the east front of the original Fort Russell, had declined the invitation of some of the old stagers and young leaguers of his regiment to "come in and have something" at the sutler's store by the gate, had plodded thoughtfully on to his own quarters some distance up the row, had had his bath and changed his stable garb for the best soldier uniform he owned and was now waiting somewhat impatiently for breakfast. The Cheyenne Leader had little in the way of telegraphic news, and its local gossip failed to interest him. He tossed it aside and after a look into the little dining room, where the breakfast table was set for two, began pacing slowly up and down the gay parlor five paces one way and five back. Occasionally he would cast a glance upward and listen for sounds of movement aloft, but none rewarded his attention. Presently he went to the window and, throwing aside the curtains, gazed gloomily out upon the snow covered parade. Over across the barren, wind swept level, bordered by its row of leafless, desolate, stripping cottonwoods, quivering in the rising breeze, the unsightly brown barracks were ochetoned, their gable ends to the north and south, with the wooden tower, the official home of the officer of the guard, and behind it the dun colored walls of the quadrangles, filling the gap at the opposite angle of the diamond shaped quadrilateral.

Here and there along the parade lay bare, unsightly patches, of dead gray buffalo where the wintry gales had and swept away the filling snow, only to whirl it into deep drifts about the barracks. Beyond the rough wooden ordinary buildings that framed the roadway bounding the parade the snowy slopes dipped out of sight into the valley of the Crow, only to reappear half a mile beyond, defaced with the same broad gray patches and streaked with jagged lines of dingy white where the snow lay in shadow deep in the gullies and coulees. Beyond them all, 100 miles to the south, cold, remote and majestic, towered the peaks and domes of the Rockies, dazzling when the morning sun shone, but repellent and frowning now that his face was hid behind a dense veil of cloud that was drawn athwart the heavens. To some was dreary in the last degree. Only about the guardhouse was there sign of life and action, for in the intense cold the troopers hugged the comfort of their barracks and huddled about the redhot stoves. The captain's face, somber and melancholy, yet a refined, clear cut, handsome face withal, seemed to take on an additional shade of gloom as he stood there, lonely and silent, drumming on the window panes with his finger tips. Through the thin partition in the party wall of wood that separated his soldier home from that of Captain Wayne next door came the sound of cheery voices, of joyous laughter and childish glee. Turner sighed impatiently, he took out his watch, glanced at it and seemed impatiently. Even as he left the window a trumpet, muffled in heavy overcoat, came briskly out from the adjutant's office and sounded first call for guard mounting, whereat the captain strode through the dining room and spoke to the maid in the kitchen beyond.

"Nora," he said, "be so kind as to run up and tell Mrs. Turner not to hurry if she's tired, but that I'm on a genuine court this morning and must have my breakfast at once."

Bridget Nora hastened on her apron, the Irish maid of all work proceeded on her mission. She was back in a moment. "The missis says not to wait. She'll be down directly," was her report.

"Very well. Bring me whatever is ready," said Turner briefly and sat him down at the table.

There had been a lively hop the night before, and joy was unconfined. A dozen pleasant people had driven out from Cheyenne. The music was capital. Half a dozen young officers from other posts (were visiting at Russell. Half a dozen young ladies from the distant east were visiting relatives and friends among the officers' families in the garrison. Many of the ladies of the —th cavalry were charming "society" women, many were pretty and attractive, several were wealthy and able to display stunning toilets, and nearly all were graceful and accomplished dancers. As a consequence anywhere from 36 to 40 couples were to be seen on the polished floor of the hop room, and visiting officers from other regiments promptly owned that when it came to "hopping" the —th could put up the prettiest dance in the army.

And hops were things Mrs. Turner dearly loved. Ten years the junior of her solemn looking spouse, she had married when only 18, had never home him son or daughter, had been with the regiment in the south just' after the great war, in Nebraska when they were guarding the track layers of the Union Pacific, in Arizona during that four years exile, in Kansas on their return, and was now facing, with the sisterhood, the skin scorching Wyoming blizzards, and homesiding when not with her lord the horrid effect of the dazzling suns and blasting gales upon her once peachlike complexion. Among her garrison and Cheyenne intimates and acquaintances, however, Fanny Turner had no such admission to make. She could not help seeing, she said, the havoc played with the cuticle of the other ladies. Even their bride, the lovely blond, Mrs. Billy Ray, had completely lost, said Mrs. Turner, the delicate bloom and softness of her fair waifs skin. "But as for me," she continued, "I declare it seems to make no difference whatever."

Certainly, under the light of the lamps and candles of the hop room, her complexion seemed as peachy as on her wedding day, 13 years gone by. But there were a dozen women in garrison who were ready to explain and account for that. "No one is this regiment," said the colonel's wife, "can approach Fanny Turner in the art of 'making up.' She's 33 if she's a week old, and she dances and dresses and decorates as though she were not 20."

All of which was practically true. Spoiled and petted by an overindulgent mother in her girlhood, Fanny had no idea of any will or way but her own when she married Captain Turner. He had fallen deeply in love with her when home wounded after Cedar Creek in the fall of 1864. He was the hero of their semiromal community, and she married him because he was so much thought of and admired by some of the others. For several weeks Turner thought himself the happiest and luckiest of men to have captured this fair young beauty, and these disillusion set in, and one disappointment followed another. She was empty headed, frivolous, fond of every kind of social gayety, but with neither heart nor taste for domestic duty of any kind. She loved to dance, and his wounds had put an end to even the little he ever knew of that art. She gloried in the attentions of the society and garrison beaus they met and lavishly showered him he was often in the way. She was recklessly extravagant in her tastes and spent his savings with a lavish hand, principally on herself in dress or jewelry. She had been married almost everything of the kind at home, for her parents had been for years in straitened circumstances. Turner, deeply in love, could deny her nothing until his savings were exhausted and they had to come down to his pay. She read nothing but novels. She knew nothing but garrison gossip and how to make herself look fascinating. She had a fund of small talk and a facility of cutting her cap for each new young officer that joined the regiment, speedily fascinating him and attaching him for a term of months, or possibly a year, to her apron strings. She was reckless, kittenish, confidingly, trustingly youthful, this mature dame of 31, when out in society or among the officers of the garrison, but it was anything but a fresh, youthful, radiant girl that came yawning languidly down the stairs this dark March morning and with a "Good morning, dear," to her breakfast carrier if you wanted it" and barely a glance at her spouse passed him by without other salutation and took her seat behind the coffeepot at the head of the table.

"I much preferred to wait for you," said Turner gently. He had never rebuked, rarely attempted to correct her, but there was an initial accent, a well nigh wrecked their honeymoon. He could not scold her now, yet his heart ached at her indifference, and his weary eyes did not fail to notice the marvelous change in her appearance since she left the hoproom the night before, or, rather, at 2 o'clock that morning. The soft pink tips were dry and purple now, the delicately tinted cheek was sallow and coarsened, dark purple circles had formed under her eyes, deep lines seemed cut through their temporary filling and gave the lie to her pretensions to youth. Her hair, so beautifully and becomingly arranged the night before, was simply twisted up into a knot at the back of her head. She wore a loose flowered wrapper, gathered in at the slender waist with a cord. Even her wrists, fragile bands, that trembled as she filled the captain's cup with coffee, looked wrinkled and old, while upon her visage, so radiant with smiles and sunshine a few hours since, there sat an expression of profound and curious discontent. Turner had hard work to repress a second sigh as he glanced furtively at her from over The Leader, which he had picked up again when her footsteps were heard descending the stairs.

"May I help you to steak?" he asked in courteous tones. "I fear you are very tired this morning, Fanny. You had a grand time last night though. You never missed a dance, did you?"

"If? Why how odd that should be! I never do miss a dance. That's one of the advantages of having so many old friends among the young officers."

"But you must ha hungry, dear. Won't you try to eat something?"

"What is there?" she asked languidly. "Steak, stewed potatoes. Bah! Scrambled eggs, cold—rolls dinto. I wish those oldiders next door would make sanh a noise. Captain Turner," she went on, busy toying with her coffee spoon, "did you see that gown of Mrs. Gregg's last night? It was one she had made in Chicago—$200 if it cost a cent. Now you know perfectly well she can't afford that since the failure of their bank."

Turner was studying the advertisements hard and made no answer.

"And his pay isn't a big $2 yours to one forg," she went on. Then as he was still silent she queried, "Is it?"

"Oh—ah! Is it what?"

"I wish you would listen to me instead of losing yourself in that stupid paper, Captain Turner. I asked whether Captain Gregg's pay was not less than yours by a fogy or so?"

"Very probably. He entered service some years after I did and is nearly 10 years youngse."

But Turner talks from behind his paper. He has finished his breakfast, has put the cup of steaming coffee with which she has at last supplied him.

"What did you think of that gown of Mrs. Gregg's? She had it made only two months ago—two months after their bank broke. Seems to me mighty queer she should be 'swelling' in such extravagant garbs. Mrs. Raymond thinks so too."

Turner's eyes are glued to the columns of The Leader. He is apparently deaf to any comments on Mrs. Gregg's costumes.

"Don't you think so?" persists Mrs. Turner, determined to extract an opinion from her liege.

"Why—I'm sure I haven't given the matter any thought. It's none of our affair, anyway. Doubtless they have means that were not involved in the crash of that particular bank."

"They haven't," interposes Mrs. Turner. "Mrs. Wallace is from Cleveland and knows all Mrs. Gregg's people, and she says they lost every penny."

"Oh, well, Gregg has something outside his pay," says Turner, shrugging his shoulders and sinking down into his chair. He hates these personal comments and criticisms on the affairs of his brother officers and their families, but he still loves his shallow pate of a wife and can't bear to scold her. This, too, is her table talk. She has no other.

"There were at least half a dozen bills came in their mail two days ago," persists madam presently. "I couldn't help seeing them when the orderly came here with my letter from the office. I had so many bills coming in, you'd be frantic. I don't see how she can stand being chanued in that way. I couldn't."

Again the captain seeks shelter behind his conventional hemi-proof—the paper—and strives to avoid the discussion.

"Could you?" she asks.

"Well," he answers slowly, "I've had to once or twice. Don't you remember?"

"I might have known, you'd remind me of that," she answers, with tears in her voice if not in her eyes. "I was—much less experienced then. Even to begin and Mrs. Turner does not like to own she had ever been younger.

He notes the symptoms of approaching storm and does give a cheerier tone to the talk drops The Leader and adopts a "chipper," spirited style.

"I thought you looked uncommonly well last night, Fanny, and I thought Mrs. Ray's dress extremely pretty."

"Pretty," said pouting, distastefully. "Why, Captain Turner, she was positively dowdy. The idea of a woman of her wealth and social position coming to one of our swellest hops in a simple china silk! It looked almost like a uniform. If she had nothing bandsome, it would be all well and good, but she has loads of handsome gowns and won't wear them."

"China silk or canton flannel, you know, I couldn't tell 'Jinks from which," says poor Turner. "I only say I thought it pretty and appropriate. Perhaps she wears a simple toilet because so many of the ladies of the regiment cannot afford to dress as expensively."

"Captain Turner, you make me tired," exclaims his hotter half in deep displeasure, without other salutation and took her seat behind the coffeepot at the head of the table.

"I much preferred to wait for you," said Turner gently. He had never rebuked, rarely attempted to correct her, but there was an initial accent, a well nigh wrecked their honeymoon. He could not scold her now, yet his heart ached at her indifference, and his weary eyes did not fail to notice the marvelous change in her appearance since she left the hoproom the night before, or, rather, at 2 o'clock that morning. footstep. The gong boil on the hall door gives a loud, impatient clang, and Nora hastens through into the hall.

"The orderly with the colonel's compliments, I suppose," says Mrs. Turner dejectedly. "They never will let you finish your breakfast in peace."

"They might," thinks Turner, "if I could only get started a little earlier." Then loud enough:

"It's Lcot't-t-Maynard wants to see you, sir."

"Oh, show him into the parlor," answers the captain, dropping The Leader and beginning to fold his napkin.

"Captain Turner, have you no consideration whatever for me?" gasps his lady, as she rises and hastens herself hurriedly to the kitchen.

A very presentable specimen of the young officer type is the junior lieutenant who, forage cap in hand and big cavalry circular, the cape of his overcoat thrown over his arm, stands respectfully in the little entry under which the captain enters and extends a cordial hand.

"Good morning, Maynard. Glad to see you. What brings you over here so early? Nothing amiss, I hope."

"I—didn't mean—I hope I didn't disturb your breakfast, sir," answers the subaltern, a shade of embarrassment on his fine, frank face. "Mrs. Turner was so good as to say I'd usually come around this morning—or—she'd teach me some of her methods at patience, and the adjutant has just detailed me to take a patrol to go to town after some absentees who left on pay day specs. If you'll be kind enough to tell her—I suppose she's not yet down after dancing every dance nntil 2 this morning'—"

"I'll tell her," says Turner. "She'll be disappointed, of course, but come again some other time. Any news of the office?"

"Why, yes, sir. There's quite a little stir there. It seems a gang of the southern Cheyennes have had a row with their agent and have been playing the miesbief about their reservation. The agent has wired for troops, and if they are sent from Leavenworth and Gillem they say the Indians will jump. Spring has sak in down there. The chief believes that in that event we'll be called upon to head them off."

"My the Lord deliver us from a winter campaign," says Turner shuddering. "Well, I'll tell Mrs. Turner. Wish you good luck in catching the runaways. How many are still out?"

"Eight, sir; so I'm told at the office. Then I'll say good morning." And Mr. Maynard starts to go.

But a soft, silvery voice, a voice utterly unlike the petulant tones so recently heard at the breakfast table, comes floating from behind the portiere that hangs from the archway between the parlor and dining room and halts him at the threshold.

"Don't look back, Mr. Maynard. I'm simply a fright this morning, but I couldn't help speaking to you. I'm so sorry you can't be here at 11. Come this afternoon, if you get back in time, won't you? Come at 4. That's give you an hour before stables. Do."

"Ah, yes!" answers Mrs. Turner, "No need to say where. I know who's expecting you at the Barrys'. I'm positively getting jealous, Mr. Maynard."

The young fellow's cheeks are brunette, but it finds that is not caused by the buffetings of the Wyoming winds.

"I'll be glad to come almost any other time," he says, Mrs. Turner. I'm sure it's very good of you. But pardon me, won't you? The patrol is saddling at the stable, and I must hurry down there."

She has no time to fire another shot before he is out of the house and slamming the storm door behind him. Then she comes into the parlor and peers out of the window as he mounts and rides at the double. He does not stop, as she more than half believes he will, at Mrs. Barrys'. The captain is pulling on his "arctics" in the hallway and presently appears at the door, looping the flege of his heavy fur lined coat—one that had once been a handsome garment, but is old and worn and shabby now.

"I think Mrs. Barry ought to put a stop to that affair before it goes any further," says Mrs. Turner, whereat the captain becomes sphinxlike and inscrutable. Apparently he hasn't heard. "Neither of them has a cent in the world except his second lieutenant's pay." She goes on, and Turner finds himself rummaging through his pockets as though in search of some much needed article, he can't for the life of him say. Then she turns and faces him. "You're going, dear?"

"Don't I what?" he replies, in simulated ignorance. He is fencing for time.

"Now, Captain Turner, I know you heard what I asked. You always do have in this absent way when what I am thinking and talking about doesn't happen to suit you. I said, neither Mr. Maynard nor Miss Baird had a cent, and that Mrs. Barry ought to put a stop to their flirtation at once—and you heard it."

"I think it is none of our business, Fanny," says Turner mildly. "Just as I said about Mrs. Gregg's gown. I can't help wishing you concerned yourself less about other people's affairs, my dear child—woman," he adds, after a pause. "You—you haven't said anything to anybody but me as to the letters that came for Mrs. Gregg, have you?" he asks almost timidly.

"Her bills, I suppose you mean. If I have, Captain Turner, it only serves her right. I'm sure she has shown me little mercy or consideration."

"Well, dear, for my sake, then, don't speak of it to anybody. Gregg is one of my funnest friends, and whatever you say of his wife is sure to get around to them sooner or later in aggravated—exaggerated form, and it would hurt him cruelly."

Mrs. Turner was impatiently whirled about and is once more gazing out upon the parade. A petulant exclamation or two and the words are finished. She is black browed—very pretty when—

"You haven't spoken of it to any one, have you, dear?" he asks.

No answer.

Turner walks close up to her as she stands half shrouded by the curtains. "Don't be afraid to tell me, Fan," he pleads. "I think I ought to know."

"I'm afraid!" she flashes indignantly. "What is there to be afraid of? Very possibly I have spoken of it to Mrs. Raymond—she's my best friend—and what I have—and there may have been others when heard, for all I care. They know it's just exactly as I say. How can you be so absurd and make such a fuss over such a little matter? I'd just as lief say it to her face."

"Say it to no one," are Turner's next words. "Your imprudence has cost me two or three friendships I valued, and I should hate to be at odds with Gregg. Now it is time for me to go. Do not expect me until luncheon. The moment court adjourns I must go to the troop office."

She never turns to my goodby. Her sullen face is pressed close to the pane, but she darts back quickly as two tall officers come suddenly in sight—Captain Truscott and Lieutenant Blake. Turner, too, catches sight of them as they march quickly by and waits a moment to let them get well up the row ahead of him. He is in no mood for communicable. He looks sadly, wistfully at the wilful woman before him a moment, but her back is obstinately turned to him. She returns to the window, and without another word he leaves the house. At the gate he glances toward the casement, hopeful of one relenting look or smile, but now she has disappeared, and Turner goes on to his duty with a long sigh and a heavy heart.

"Eight, sir; so I'm told at the office."

"It is my own doing," he says. "If I had set my foot down firmly years ago, she would have learned and forgiven, but it's too late now—too late."

As he is passing Major Barry's quarters the storm door flies open and out comes the senior battalion commander himself, gray mustached, keen eyed, spare of flesh, alert and vigorous. "Ho, Turner," he says; "well met! Have you heard any particulars? Do you know what we're to do?"

"I've heard nothing, major, except a rumor of trouble at the South Cheyenne agency."

"Indeed! Well, the colonel has just sent me word that our battalion is to be put in readiness for immediate field service, and a scrimmage is coming sure."

GRAND JURY'S WORK.

Indictments Returned Chiefly for Grand Larceny.

In the Koelmel case which went to the grand jury Thursday morning, Jan. 5, a verdict of conviction was returned.

The jury was called in the Sorenson and Raudklev vs. Mary Phalen case. It was an action in replevin. The defendant lives in the town of Cheney. One Leon Wichterman worked her land under contract. She on the other hand owed plaintiffs on a note and gave them a mortgage on 100 bushels of grain. Wichterman failing to plow the land back as per contract, 250 bushels of the wheat were turned over to the defendant as security for plowing and expenses. The plaintiffs replevined the wheat and got 20 bushels, the defendant having sold the balance the day before the replevin was served. The case was concluded and given to the jury Friday morning. They returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, that she is the owner of 20 bushels of wheat taken on replevin and that the grain is worth 81c.

The grand jury returned four indictments: Against Dan Casy for grand larceny in the second degree, the accused having stolen a bank check for $68.50 at East Grand Forks.: He was arraigned and Pat Russell appointed to defend him; against Wm. Himmelsbach for grand larceny in the second degree, for having stolen a silver watch from Thomas Kelly at East Grand Forks—D. B. Fisk was appointed to defend him; against Jno. Sullivan for grand larceny in the second degree for stealing a gold watch—J. A. Hendricks was appointed to defend the accused; against Wm. Bunton, for grand larceny in first degree for stealing $75 cash from Henry Miller—Thos. Kiefe, of Perth, was appointed to defend him. As no indictments were found against Wm. Monahan, Ed.; Lahelle, John Lewis and Wm. Williams who were in jail they were discharged.

The case of Martin Nevins vs. Carrie Biederman was settled outof court. Sorenson & Raudlev vs. Mary Phalen was continued. The case of R. R. Howell & Co. vs. Larsen & Carpenter was heard before the Court, the jury being waived. The case had been appealed from the justice court. It will be argued and decided later.

The case of W. F. Powell vs. Bernhard Tiederman was dismissed as the plaintiff did not appear. The case of the State vs. J. J. Molstad, for selling to minors was continued. Those against whom the grand jury had found indictments all pleaded not guilty and the time for their trials was set.

The case of State vs. Alfred Brosseau, the defendant being charged with selling intoxicating liquors to a minor person, came up. L. E. Goss-man appeared for the State and H. Stenerson for the defendant. The jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

The case of Ole Graudvold vs. E. O. Eneberg was next tried. The action was brought on a promissory note for $150. The defendant set up as counter claim an old note given by one Kittilsby to him. It appears that defendant owed Kittilsby and the latter owed the plaintiff. The plaintiff, by another party, sold to defendant the Kittilsby note, taking defendant's note for the same. This last note is the one sued for. The defendant sets up the Kittilsby note as a counter claim and offset against his note to defendant. The case went to the jury about 4 p. m. Saturday. In a short time the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $231.87; A. A. Miller appeared for the plaintiff.

The case of State vs O. Merell, the defendant being charged with selling intoxicating liquors to a minor person, was dismissed. In the case against O. Merell for keeping a saloon open after 11 o'clock at night, the defendant plead guilty and was fined $25 and costs.

The grand jury late Saturday afternoon returned the following indictments: Grand larceny in first degree against George Foster for stealing $76.31 from the house of C. A. Carrish in town of Keystone; assault in first degree against Thomas Prier—the assault was made at Fisher upon Chas. Henderson; grand larceny against Andrew Larson for stealing a gold watch—the defendant plead guilty; malicious destruction of property against John Hoffer, Wm. Asbburn and Frank E. Easton—the accused smashed 40 bottles of whiskey, a mirror, two spittoons and a dozen glasses in Waterbrandt's saloon. One fellow when asked by the judge if he was ready to plead said: "I'll plead guilty to jail sentence." The judge told them he was sorry he could not send them to state's prison, but could not under the law. P. J. Murphy was indicted for grand larceny in the second degree. He is accused of stealing a watch from the house of J. H. McKinnon.

J. C. Stanton plead guilty and was sentenced to six months at Stillwater. W. J. Clark who was his companion in the alleged crime was given 75 days in county jail or a fine of $50.

On Monday the case of Merchants National bank of Crookston vs. Hans C. Sampson et. al. was the first to be taken up. It was a suit on a promissory note for $1382.72 given by Hans C. Sampson and several others. The defendants owed the bank of Fosston in 1895 and a renewal note was given, the plaintiffs in this action furnishing the money to defendants through Al Kaiser to pay the bank of Fosston; the plaintiffs taking the renewal instead of the bank of Fosston taking it.

Individual notes were given by the several defendants to Mr. Kaiser, and when paid were applied on larger note. Several payments were made. Defendant claim they have not been credited for all the payments made.

The case of State vs. Dan Carey was next called, P. J. Russell appearing for defendants. The case of State vs. James Sullivan came up next.

Court convened at 9:00 a. m., Tuesday. The case of State vs. James Sullivan was concluded and given to the jury. Later in the day the jury brought in a verdict of guilty.

The next case called was that of James Dever vs. S. C. Bagley. The action is brought by the plaintiff to recover from defendant for work and service performed in the woods logging, claiming wages have never been paid him. The defendant sets up that he had a contract with the plaintiff to cut, haul and bank logs on Clearwater river, at an agreed upon price of $2.12½ per thousand, and that plaintiff failed to perform all of said work. It appears the supplies were issued to plaintiff's camp from time to time.

This case went to the jury at 4 p. m. Wednesday, and a verdict for $225 for plaintiff was rendered.

The grand jury returned three indictments against Frank Cruikshanks, for assault in second degree; against Chas. Lasher and Nick Burrel, for robbery in second degree and against Henry Ricke, for selling intoxicating liquors without a license.

On Wednesday after the Revor-Bagley case was finished the Court took up the case of State vs. W. M. Himmelsbach, charged from stealing a watch from one Thos. Kelly in Dan Sullivan's saloon in East Grand Forks. Case went to the jury before adjournment.

THAT BOMB BUSINESS.

Reports Much Exagerated—Probable that no Dynamite was Used.

From information which the JOURNAL has received subsequent to last week's issue, from reliable sources, it is evident that the dynamite bomb explosion which was reported to have occurred in the office of Van R. Brown in Red Lake Falls, has been much more of 'than the facts in the case warrant. It is probable that the explosive material was not dynamite at all but gunpowder that had been placed in a bottle. Instead of the county attorney being persecuted, it is possible, if not probable, that an attempt has been made to arouse public sympathy in his behalf. Instead of talking about a quick end for certain supposed dynamiters, it might be well to consider the question of what penalty is due to those who have been scattering sensational reports of the doings at Red Lake Falls.

Polk County Farms in Demand.

S. C. Rice, one of the prosperous and enterprising farmers of the town of Gorden called at the JOURNAL office yesterday. He says he was recently offered $3,500 for his farm of 200 acres.

Ivan P. Tuff, who lives not far from Mr. Rice, the day before yesterday sold his farm, three quarters of a section, the consideration therefor being $6,200.

In the town of Ingar last week, C. F. Peterson sold his farm property, 200 acres, to Herman Loeta, for $3,500 spot cash.

All this shows that farming land in Polk county is valuable and that its value is increasing all the time.

RAILWAY FACILITIES.

High Grade Wheat—Best Farming Lands in the State.

Winter now holds in its icy grasp all nature. The earth is covered with a mantle white as no fuller on earth can white it." The atmosphere is biting and the window panes are decorated with the fantastic but not inartistic work of Jack Frost.

But this condition of affairs will not last very long. Soon the warmth of the sun will melt the snow and ice, the frost bound earth will loosen, the farmer will lead his team afield, and the cattle will graze on a thousand hills.

Now one of the characteristics of the prudent man is foresight. He does not wait, Micawber like, for something to turn up, but makes preparations so that something is bound to turn up. Hundreds of men will within a short time be changing their homes or seeking a location where they may secure a home for the first time. Emigration is bound to set in, not merely from abroad but from state to state, for man has not entirely lost his nomadic nature. In the vast majority of cases doubtless these men will return to the soil, in other words, they will get a plot of land, large or small, as the case may be, in the country—they will get a farm. This change will be made soon, for the best time to take up a claim or buy a piece of land is early in the year, so that one may be ready for spring work, as in that case returns are received within about six months.

The important question, therefore, for these prospective settlers to decide is where shall they go. They will, of course, be influenced in their decision by the advice of friends and relatives and it is with a view to furnishing the settlers, who are already in Polk county, with material which may be used in turning the tide of emigration toward their own section of the country that the JOURNAL has decided to publish a series of articles beginning with this issue in which will be set forth the resources of the county and vicinity, both as to land and as to money, the railway facilities, the general character of the people who live here, for good neighbors are very desirable, the educational advantages, the progress of the county in the past, which is a promise of good fruit in the future, the market facilities, in short, the JOURNAL proposes to show that Polk county is a very desirable place in which for farmers to settle. Extra copies of the JOURNAL will be printed and will be sent to any address or they may be procured at the JOURNAL office.

Polk county lies in the Red River valley, the richest and most fertile stretch of land that lies within the boundaries of Minnesota. But that is not all. No where else can better farming land be secured. It is dark loam with clay sub soil and produces phenomenal crops. Wheat, barley, oats, and flax are raised here in large quantities. The yield of wheat the staple product, is on an average from 15 to 17 bushels an acre. Farmers have grown fifty bushels to the acre, but this was where special care was taken of the soil. Still if a man does not have more land than he can handle this large yield need not be an uncommon one. The average yield over the rest of the state is about 12 bushels to the acre, Polk county thus having four or five bushels to its credit. But in addition to this most of the wheat grades No. 1 Northern, which is of all intents and purposes the highest grade, for hardly any wheat anywhere now-a-days is graded No. 1 hard. One reason for this high grade, leaving out of account the influence of the quality of the soil, is the fact that the further north wheat is grown, the harder it is, though of course one does not want to go too far north or there will be danger of frost destroying the grain. Polk county is in just about the right place. Wheat of a high grade can be grown in large quantities. The next question is, what facilities has this territory for shipping and selling? The answer is the very best. The entire area of land is honey combed with railways so that no farm is more than fifteen miles from a railroad, and few of them that far away. There are elevators along the lines of both the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern railways, and grain can be sold here at the Liverpool price minus the cost of shipping it there. The new line running from Fosston to Duluth furnishes the valley a short route to the head of the lakes, the rate being 5c per hundred. There are boats which ply up and down the Red River and haul to some shipping place the grain that is sold and stored in the numerous elevators that line the banks of the Meander of the North.

Crookston is one of the best, if not the best market, for the competition of the four mills and the elevators is keen and hence the price is raised.

SECOND BAND CONCERT.

The Chief Feature Will be Mrs. Riggs' Piano Playing.

After the day's ceaseless toil, and often agonizing struggle, there is nothing more acceptable, as a general thing, to the tired body and the spent mind, than music. Music hath, indeed, charms to soothe the savage breast. At the playing of Orpheus, in olden times, the wild beasts stood still and listened, and even inanimate nature applauded for the hills and dales echoed and reechoed with the melody of his refrain.

Music is a language that becomes more perfect with time. Through it as a medium greater thoughts are being expressed every day, and in no other way can these particular thoughts be brought to the knowledge of mankind.

But not merely is knowledge gained but culture and refinement are secured through listening to the concord of sweet sounds and it is the same with music as with any thing else, the more one tries to appreciate it, the more capable one becomes of understanding it. One soon learns to grasp the thought of music by listening to music and, if possible, by producing some harmonious sounds himself.

Crookston's band performance in that is has always possessed much musical talent and that talent is being developed all the time. Prof. Riggs is a comparatively new man here, having been with us only a few months, but during that time he has organized the largest and best band Crookston ever had, and this musical company, under his most efficient leadership, is fast becoming one of the leading bands of the state.

By way of entertainment and education they are furnishing a concert in the opera house once a month. The one given last month was a decided success and the public are eagerly looking forward to Wednesday evening, Jan. 18, when the second in the series will be held. The program will consist of numbers by the band, and by the orchestra, violin and cornet solos and duets.

But the special feature of the musical soiree will be the piano work of Mrs. Riggs, a graduate of the Chicago conservatory. Mrs. Riggs has spent the last two years in studying under Emil Liebling, one of Chicago's talented teachers. She comes to Crookston an accomplished musician and will be warmly welcomed into the musical circles of the city. She will play two piano solos and assist in a violin and piano duet, the professor himself being the violin speak. This will be a musical treat that Crookston people will most liberally patronize.

Following is the program:

March—Bumillotus	Hall
	Crookston Band.
Variations on Melodies from the Opera Dunizetti, for piano and violin—Oberon—DeBeriot.	Mrs. C. D. Riggs assisted by Mr. Riggs.
March—(Two step, new)	Mandolier Club.
Cornet solo—"Islington Polka."	Rothbeam
	Mr. Riggs—Band accompaniment.
Pianosolo—Hungarian Dance op. 8 No.	Schumenner
	Mrs. Riggs.
March—(Cake Walk)	Riggs Orchestra.
Concert Waltz	Fischer
	Mandolone Club.
Scene de Ballet for Cornet	DeBeriot
	Mr. Riggs.
Overture—"Sunset"
	Riggs Orchestra.
Piano solo Valse de Concert in E major
	Mrs. Riggs. Mose Kowalt
Souvenir Polka Comique	Casey
Introducing vocal selection, whip music, solos bells and a grand chorus of surprise.
	Crookston Band.

The Royal Entertainers.

The Epworth League of the Methodist church is furnishing a series of entertainments this winter that are worthy of much more patronage than they are receiving. The programs given last Friday and Saturday nights were high class and high toned. The Crayon drawings by Mr. Smith were greatly appreciated and each person in the audience was anxious to secure one after the artist had finished his work. The impersonations by both Mr. Gordon and Mr. Smith were pronounced, by those who have heard the speakers who were impersonated, very accurate. They certainly were both provoking and truly inspiring. If the next entertainments are like unto these, and there is no reason to think they will not be, the audiences that assemblies at the M. E. church should be a large one.

COUNTY SCHOOLS.

The Annual Report of County Superintendent Kanas Makes a Good Report.

SEVEN NEW SCHOOL HOUSES

Many Normal and High School Graduates Teaching in the County.

The report of County Superintendent Kanas was not ready so as to be included in the annual reports of county officials published in the JOURNAL last week. Part of the work done in the educational field in Polk county may be learned from the statistics herewith given. It will be noticed among other interesting facts that there are over 1000 pupils enrolled in the county schools and that almost 1000 new books were purchased. Free text books are used, the books of each pupil costing the county about 30 cents.

A BROKEN RAIL.

Near Hatton, N. D., Causes a Wreck —Several Passengers Injured.

A serious accident occurred near Hatton, N. D., on the Great Northern passenger train about 8 o'clock last Saturday morning. The train struck a broken rail throwing two passenger cars and the baggage and express car from the track, the latter car catching fire and burning up. Six passengers were injured: Conductor Walter O'Kane, Cando, Injury, cheek bone; J. M. Johnson, Northwood; Mrs. P. M. Penniser, Mayville, all seriously; others were slightly injured. A relief train with doctors left at once for the wreck but authorities refused to allow any newspaper men to go with them. The place where the wreck occurred has an embankment about fifteen feet high, down which the coaches plunged. It was a miracle that several were not killed outright.

Progress Like the Crab.

Last Thursday a change went into effect on the Great Northern which is not at all pleasing to the towns along the St. Hilaire line, particularly, Thief River Falls, St. Hilaire and Red Lake Falls. The daily mixed train on that line is discontinued and now one can reach those towns by rail only on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. The reason for the change is that business was not paying.

MANILA FESTIVITIES.

13th Minnesota Entertains 1st California at a Thanksgiving Dinner.

Through the kindness of Mr. Ben Gore whose brother, Wm. Gore, is a United States volunteer now serving in the Philippines, the JOURNAL has received a copy of the programs and menu for a "Thanksgiving Dinner tendered Co. F, 1st California Regiment, by Co. F, 13th Minnesota, at Manila on Nov. 24, 1898." The program is a four page folder printed in first-class style and with up-to-date type. A piece of work that would do credit to the JOURNAL office—and that is saying a good deal. The menu consists of four courses, most of the dishes being given their Spanish name. Among these dishes are noted "Chicken broth, a la Chantecleer," "Prime roast beef, a la grandpowder," "Fricassseed chicken, a la Mauser bullet," and "Apple pie, a la mother-in-law." On the last page is a cut of the American coat of arms and beneath it these words:

We're thankful that the city's ours,
And thanks the stars and stripes,
We're thankful that our cause is one that from these islands ships
The democratic oppression of a brother human life
Who now—humanity Old Glory!
a nation's peace may win
But when our debt's next to the rising of suns's wane
We'll then feel still more thankful than we are "Homeward Bound

NEW BUSINESS FIRM.

D. E. Gorton Buys Half Interest in a Fosston Business.

Mr. D. E. Gorton, who for the past three years has been head bookkeeper for Larsen & Carpenter in this city has deservedly been promoted. He has purchased a half interest in the firm's business in Fosston and left this morning for the scene of his new labors.

The firm at Fosston will henceforth be known as Larsen, Carpenter & Co. This farm implement machinery business will now be under the direct management of Mr. Gorton, though Oscar Olson who has had charge will still be retained as an employee.

Mr. Gorton is a graduate of the Crookston Business College of Minneapolis. He spent two years in business in that city before coming to Crookston. While here he has shown himself possessed of business ability in a marked degree and in his new field of work will without doubt make a great success.

His many friends in Crookston cannot but regret that he is leaving, but what is their loss is Fosston's gain. The JOURNAL is indeed pleased to add upon this latest addition to the number of its young business men.

Black Pattl.

The Black Patti troubadours had a large audience at the Grand Friday night, and judging from the laughter and the applause those in attendance were satisfied with their entertainment. Vocal music was the chief feature, Patti herself singing three solos. But she was by no means the favorite. The full chorus singing was very popular, as was also the funny work of Hogan. Perhaps the music by the soldiers at their camp was the best of the evening, taken together with the base solo where the singer kept time with his banjo on the anvil.

Fatal Fall.

A sad accident occurred at Solway, a station on the Duluth line beyond Fosston, last Monday at o'clock 4 m. The freight would could had stopped for about fifteen minutes at the station but had just got under way, when a man who was on one of the flat cars with some wagon boxes that were piled thereon, and had evidently become very cold, attempted to get off. He, however fell, the wheels going over the body and cutting it in two.

Installations.

The Degree of Honor and the Workmen installed their officers for the new year last Thursday night and later in the evening the members enjoyed a sumptuous feast. Friday evening the Odd Fellows held their new officers, and on the same evening Col. Cobham post of the G. A. R. placed in command these men:

John McLean, commander; C. H. Jefferson, vice commander; J. K. Andrist, jr. vice commander; J. E. Greenhalgh, officer of the day; C. H. Mix, chaplain; I. U. Jennings, surgeon; E. St. Pierre, inside guard; W. L. Davies, quartermaster; Levi Le-Duc was appointed color bearer. The officer of historian and poet, newly created, was filled by the appointment of I. U. Jennings. J. O. Sargent, J. E. Greenhalgh and B. F. Zarracher constitute the finance committee.

PERIL TO AMERICA

COLONEL WARING FOUND CONDITIONS AT HAVANA AWFUL.

This Country Confronted With a Danger More Combined Than War Itself. Prompt Action Necessary—Estimates It Will Cost $6,000,000 to Place the City in Good Condition—Single Epidemic in the South Would Be Many Times More Expensive.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—The war department has made public a synopsis of the late Colonel George A. Waring's report of his visit to Havana under the special instructions of the war department, given him early last autumn, to inspect the sanitary condition of the city and to make such recommendations for the future improvement of the town as might be suggested.

Colonel Waring condemns the street cleaning system as inadequate and those in charge of it as incompetent. No attention, public or private, is paid to the laws of sanitation. To make matters worse, dwellings are the average population for every house in the city being over 10. Broad marshes near the harbor are a constant source of malaria, and into these is dumped the sewage of the city.

The water supply of Havana, says Mr. Waring, is of the purest and most excellent character. This, with the winds of the gulf, save the city from being absolutely and unqualifiedly bad. The conditions, says Mr. Waring, will carry the terrible scourge of yellow fever to our shores unless we rise in a war for humanity and wipe out an enemy with which no military valor can cope.

In conclusion Colonel Waring says: "Would it not be wise to accept the fact at once that we are compared with which war is insignificant and proceed to meet it and conquer it while we may? We cannot afford to wait until we have fed it and strengthened it with the lives of our people. The necessary reforms call for costly work even now. But months of delay will render them more costly and more imperative. We can not abate these reforms now calmly and judiciously. Later, under the impulse of panic, we should work at far greater disadvantage."

The improvements which, in his judgment, are absolutely necessary to make Havana a healthy city are set forth in detail in Colonel Waring's report. They include a well organized under a single commissioner; the construction of a complete sewer system; a completely appointed abattoir; the repaving of all streets with asphalt; a suitable and sufficient cremating plant for garbage and sweepings, and the reclaiming of all the marshes.

Colonel Waring states that 'it is not possible, from the data now available, to estimate the cost of all the work needed, save to say it will be over $5,000,000. It is estimated, says Colonel Waring, that single epidemics introduced into the United States from Havana have cost the Mississippi valley alone $100,000,000 in loss to industry and commerce, aside from the loss of life.

GENERAL WOOD ARRIVES.

Military Governor of Santiago at New York—Fine Things in Good Shape.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The United States transport Mississippi, which sailed from Santiago on the evening of Jan. 4, has arrived. On board the transport are General Leonard Wood, military governor of Santiago, and Lieutenant Hanna, aide-de-camp; Dr. Castillo, a brother of the Cuban General Castillo, and Colonel Gibson, who superintended the distribution of provisions to the starving Cubans.

General Wood, who was interviewed as to the matter regarding the protest of the people of Santiago over the disposal of the funds of that province, said he did not care to talk on that matter before he visited Washington. There was some dissatisfaction, but nothing to amount to anything. When he left Santiago everything was in splendid shape, schools were being organized and would be in session Monday, and nearly 1,000 miles of roads had been constructed in the province. The customs receipts were the largest ever collected and exceeded the amount collected and turned into the Spanish treasury. Funds were available for meeting the expenses of the administration of the province, and the only expense to the United States would be the cost of maintaining her army. The best of feelings prevailed and the general condition of things was all that could be desired. General Wood appeared to be in excellent health.

MASSO WELL PLEASED.

Former Cuban President Praises American Rule at Santiago.

SANTIAGO, Jan. 10.—A luncheon was given during the day to Bartolomo Masso, the former president of the Cuban revolutionary government, prior to his departure for his home at Manzanillo. Replying to the toast of his health Masso said he trusted to see the American flag waving soon from every house in Cuba. He then paid a glowing tribute to the magnificent work done by General Leonard Wood in this province. His remarks were loudly cheered. Senor Masso also said he was not in sympathy with the men who were continually objecting to everything done by the Americans.

"It is only necessary to see Santiago," said he, "to witness the magnificent success of American rule," and he trusted provincial and municipal authority would be granted to the Cubans under a nominal military head at Havana.

—The sheriff and his deputies are keeping pretty busy these days in gathering in the witnesses for the district court. Losey went out to Melrose the morning and sampson in the direction of Keystone.

—Mr. and Mrs. Sun Rosenthal left the city last night and will be gone a month. They will visit in the Eastern and Middle States. Mr. Rusenthal will purchase new stock for the C. O. D.

—Oscar Olson, who has been in charge of Larsen & Carpenter's farm machinery at Fosston, went out on the Duluth line Tuesday morning. He had just returned from St. Hilaire where he has been attending the wedding of his sister.

—A. Wickstrom, ex-register of deeds, has bought an interest in the business of E. S. Peterson & Co., grocers. John Carlson, Peterson's late partner, will remain an employee of the new firm, Peterson & Wickstrom.

—At a show out in Bagley recently there was a voting contest. When it came to voting as to who was the fattest man in town the contest was quite lively. The Bagley Independent, however, claims that such an individual as a lazy man does not exist in that village.

—Hugh Thompson, E. M. Walsh, J. E. O'Brien and S. L. Collins, have a case in the district court against the stockholders of the Northern Minnesota Agricultural and Driving Association. There are about 150 defendants in the case.

—Climax is having rather a hard time of it with that fire engine of theirs. Last fall the piece of machinery which is supposed to furnish fire protection to the village, set fire to a building and the building burned. Now the engine has exploded and several persons have been hurt. But accidents will happen and people must make the best of them.

RECEPTION OF IGLESIAS.

Cordial Greeting in London a Cause For Comment.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The ceremony with which Senor Rafael Iglesias, the president of Costa Rica, has been received here, is causing much speculation.

One paper says: "It is certainly unusual that our eminently haughty foreign office should extend a welcome to such minor potentate. The explanation is that Costa Rica has something to say in the Nicaraguan canal, and the president's official welcome goes to show that the Marquis of Salisbury does not mean to give the United States all its own way."

UNION PACIFIC WRECK.

Four Lives Lost and Much Rolling Stock Destroyed.

SIDNEY, Neb., Jan. 11.—Four deaths and injury to seven people was caused by a wreck on the Union Pacific at Sunial, 15 miles east of here. The dead are: Engineer Dell Bonner, Fireman John C. Coleman, Cresbro, Ia.; young woman, supposed to be Miss Myrtle Armstrong of Paynter, Neb., and an unknown man.

An eastbound passenger train had stopped to take the sidetrack, but had not been able to clear the main track when a westbound passenger train, running at the rate of 45 miles an hour, crashed into it. The engines were piled in a mass of scrap iron, and the cars, which were badly broken up, immediately took fire and four were entirely consumed.

ON REGULAR ARMY BASIS.

Proposal Regarding Reorganization of the Iowa National Guard.

DES MOINES, Jan. 11.—The Iowa national guard will be reorganized on the basis of the regular army. Such is the wish of prominent officers in the state who are engaged at present in forming the new guard. The new regiments will be subject to United States medical examinations and every man will be armed and equipped, ready to be mustered without delay into the service of the national government in case war is declared. The adjutant general believes in the abolition of the standing annual encampment, and the substitution of practice marches as a means of hardening the men and drilling them in rough routine camp life.

NO CHANGE AT YET.

North Dakota Republicans Still Deadlocked on the Senatorship.

BISMARCK, Jan. 11.—There has been no change in the senatorial situation in this state, Johnson maintaining his strength of 31 votes against a Republican vote of 45 for the half dozen field candidates. Johnson's managers are straining every effort to keep his forces intact and the opposition is seeking as eagerly to force a break.

NO CABINET CRISIS.

Sagasta Minister Will Not Ask for a Vote of Confidence.

MADRID, Jan. 11.—The premier, Senor Sagasta, had an hour's audience with the the queen regent, and afterwards announced that there was no cabinet crisis; that he would not submit a vote of confidence, and that he believed the present ministry would present itself to parliament.

Mataafa Elected King.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—A special from Washington says: Mataafa has been elected king of Samoa, to succeed Malietoa. Official information to this effect has been received here. The election was held without trouble, though Tamasese, who was vice king in 1881, backed by a small following, refused to accept the office. The situation, according to the latest advices, is quiet.

Charlemagne Tower for Russian Minister.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The senate confirmed the nominations to the senate: Charlemagne Tower of Pennsylvania, now minister to Austria-Hungary, to be ambassador to Russia. Addison C. Harris of Indiana to be minister to Austria-Hungary. James G. Monahan, collector of internal revenue, Second district of Wisconsin.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The navy department has decided to allow the naval station at Guam a full brass band and the equipment bureau has been authorized to procure the instruments and ship them on the Yosemite when she starts for the island.

Bribery Charges in Montana.

HELENA, Mon., Jan. 11.—The senate and house have appointed a committee of three from each body to investigate the charges of bribery in the interest of candidates for the United States senate. The charges were made and reiterated by the Anaconda Standard.

Japanese Warship on Fire.

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 11.—News by steamer from Japan says: The second-class Japanese cruiser, Kaimon Kan, has reached Amoy, a partial wreck, as a result of a fire that broke out during a storm at sea. Several of the crew of the cruiser were burned to death and many others injured.

Blind Devotion.

The blind devotion with which an old servant did his duty was illustrated on one occasion when his master had a dinner party. During the dinner Henry was very nervous and made two or three blunders.

His master showed his annoyance and cast angry glances at his servant, but the poor man could not settle quietly to his work.

At last, when the dessert had been placed quietly on the table, he stole timidly behind his master's chair and said:

"Please, sir, can you spare me now? My house has been on fire for the last hour and a half!"—London Answers.

BATTLE OF MANILA BAY.

Story of the Combat as Told by a Spanish Officer.

PLUCKY FIGHT OF THE SPANIARDS.

Captain de la Concha of the Cruiser Juan de Austria Describes the Fight Made by Admiral Montijo's Flagship Fired the First Shot. Cruiser Austria Struck Fifty-two Times—Curious Coincidences.

Captain Juan de la Concha, who commanded the Spanish cruiser Juan de Austria during the battle of May 1 in Manila bay, has kindly given me the story of the battle from a Spanish standpoint. It differs in many details from the stories that have gone out from American sources, but, excepting for a natural inclination on the part of Captain de la Concha to minimize the fighting abilities of the Spanish fleet, the narrative is thought to be fairly correct. In considering the historical value of the account, it must be remembered that the Spaniards were too busy on that memorable occasion that there was very little time and opportunity calmly to prepare accurate, historical data.

Very early in the morning, before the dawn had begun to show in the east, the dim lights of the American ships were descried far over on the northern part of the bay slowly moving toward Manila. There was an instant call to quarters, and a few minutes later, as the gray mist of daylight spread over the bay, the guns on Sangley point began firing at the distant line of the enemy. At almost the same time the guns at the breakwater battery in Manila opened up, so nearly at the same time that Captain de la Concha, like many of the officers of the American fleet, is in doubt as to which battery began the firing. It was his impression, however, that the Sangley point battery opened the engagement. The Spanish ships held their fire as the six leading ships left the line and, wheeling, started straight for the Spanish line across Canacao bay.

The Spanish vessels mustered in battle file approach of Commodore Dewey's ships until several minutes after the Sangley point battery and the Manila batteries had been firing. Then at about 5:25 the Reina Cristina fired the first shot from Montijo's flagship. Captain de la Concha says that there is a general belief among the Spanish naval officers that this shot, fired from the Olympia, but there is no doubt that they are mistaken in this belief, the Olympia not having been hit until several minutes after the engagement had opened.

Immediately following the Reina Cristina's shot there began a general firing from each of the seven vessels composing Montijo's fighting line. At the same time the Sangley point battery of two heavy 9 2-10 inch rifles kept up a sustained firing, but the battery's poor gun down to which he was able to fire only one shot. At the first discharge the gun, which was ineffectually mounted, recoiled so violently on the discharge that it dismounted itself and was useless during the remainder of the engagement.

During the heavy firing of the Spanish ships the Ulloa, which was at anchor with her two guns on the side facing the Americans and with only 18 men on board, was not able to add a great deal to the effectiveness of the Spanish fight, but she worked her two guns continuously during the entire engagement. At the end of the fight four of her men were dead and ten wounded, which about accords with her devoted crew stuck to the guns. It will be remembered by the Americans who saw the battle that at the close of the early morning fight her ensigns were still flying, the only ones in sight in Canacao bay.

The Austria, which was a 13 knot cruiser and the second in command of fleet, did some of the hardest fighting and was struck, according to Captain de la Concha's narrative, 52 times, none of the shells being large ones and the remainder small ones. It was the Austria which at one time steamed out of Canacao bay within the American line of battle, and at the eastern end of the ellipse and started toward the McCulloch, at that time unprotected. She was noticed in her attempt to get out, and the fire of the Americans was concentrated on her, with the result that she was driven back within the bay.

The Reina Cristina ventured out later with the intention of meeting the Olympia, but she, too, was driven back under a heavy fire, receiving in the attempt her deathblow. Admiral Montijo was slightly wounded on the forehead. Captain Cadarso was instantly killed, but the number of killed and wounded, according to Captain de la Concha's figures, is not as great as that given in Montijo's official report. De la Concha says that Montijo's report included those who were killed outright and 100 wounded on the Reina, but of the latter several died after the battle, and if we take what Montijo's report included them the list of battle, while fairly correct, is not so along the entire line with apparently no established place in the fighting formation. These three smaller vessels were not greatly damaged in the action, as the American gunners directed nearly all their fire on the Reina Cristina, the Castilla, the Ulloa and the Austria.

The Cuba is not thought to have been struck once, and only two men wounded and none killed is the extent of her damage. The Luzon had only one man wounded, but the fact that her auxiliary battery only one gun was serviceable at the conclusion of the engagement indicates that Captain de la Concha's information may not have been accurate. The Duero had two men killed and one wounded, but, like the Luzon, her guns were so damaged at the end of the action that only one of her three guns was of use. Of the Austrin's four guns only one was damaged so much as to be useless, but a temporary derangement in her engines, which happened about the middle of the fight, made it impossible for her to maneuver, and during the remainder of the battle she could fire only the one gun on the heavy gun on the starboard side. The two port guns were useless, owing to the inability of the ship to use her engines quickly. Her smaller guns on the starboard side were used until the end. There was no one killed on the Austria, but 20 men were wounded, one of whom died 40 days after the battle.

The Castilla, large and high sided, was battered fearfully. She was a good target, for she was at anchor and could use only her starboard guns. Twenty-two men were killed on her and 94 wounded, and the vessel was simply riddled. She caught fire after an hour of fighting, but was able to keep up a gradually diminishing firing until the American ships moved off for "breakfast." When the American ships did move off, the Reina Cristina was in a bad way. The captain writes:

The Castilla, large and high sided, was battered fearfully. She was a good target, for she was at anchor and could use only her starboard guns. Twenty-two men were killed on her and 94 wounded, and the vessel was simply riddled. She caught fire after an hour of fighting, but was able to keep up a gradually diminishing firing until the American ships moved off for "breakfast." When the American ships did move off, the Reina Cristina was in a bad way. The captain writes:

"The first ship that approached the Ulloa was a furnace and the Ulloa was very badly damaged. The Duero, Cuba and Luzon were still steaming back and forth, and Captain de la Concha tells of shouting a joking remark to the captain of the Duero when he saw the American ships retire. The Spaniards could not imagine what motive Dewey could have in withdrawing at a time when it seemed that victory was almost in hand, but they thought he saw that the largest Spanish ships were burning and that he had decided to let fire finish what he had begun. They still were firing when the Americans withdrew.

At the time when Commodore Dewey hauled off his ships the Spaniards were in this condition: The Reina Cristian and Castilla were burning. The Ulloa had lost the guns she brandished nearly all of her little crew. The Luzon and Duero were with only one serviceable gun each. The Austria's engines were disabled. The Cuba was unhurt. On the shore batteries were wounded over of its own accord and the two big guns on Sangley point were untouched.

Coming when it did, the intermission caused by the cessation of firing by the American ships was a humane thing for the Spaniards. Captain de la Concha says that the Spanish sailors would have continued their fight as long as one of their ships was afloat or a gun in service if the Americans had not withdrawn. As it was, however, Admiral Montijo took the opportunity to change his flag to the Cuba, and after a short consultation determined to give up the fight. He ordered the captains of the Austria, Cuba, Luzon and Duero to steam behind the arsenal, scuttle their ships and go ashore. This was done, the Austria moving back with much difficulty. The ships were all scuttled, and they sank in a little bunch back in shoal water. The Spaniards had in addition to the four ships of the fighting force that came back the General Lezo, the Argos and Velasco were also sunk in the shallow water, but the transport Manila, with a number of cattle on board, was left to fall into the Americans' hands, unharmed and uninjured. Captain de la Concha states positively that the Spaniards did not set fire to their ships when they left them in Baler bay.

A curious coincidence of the battle developed as the captain told his story. It is something I had not previously known, and it is certainly very singular. The captain said that a sailor named Bean had a brother on board the Olympia, neither of whom knew of the fact until after the battle.

This is the story of the battle of Manila Bay as told by the captain of the Spanish flagship Don Antonio. According to his story, it is apparent that Admiral Montijo's seven vessels that engaged the enemy were greatly inferior to Admiral Dewey's ships. The fact that the land batteries were in comparatively good order explains the discrepancy in strength between the two fleets, for it is proved that even the two guns on Sangley point, if properly manned, could have held off or destroyed the American fleet—John T. McCutcheon in Chicago Record.

Pickled Pigs' Feet Crop.

One young friend, Mr. Rae Bross of Thomson, Ga., showed me recently a sketch he had made of a Limestone county hog, the property of Mr. W. F. Tatom, which is certainly a freak of nature. This remarkable swine is about 2 years old, weighs about 150 pounds and has eight well developed feet, two on each leg, branching out below the knee joints. Mr. Bross says the hog is not at all vicious in disposition. He does not grunt any louder or run faster than an ordinary four footed swine, but it is said he was the real boss of the world in the way of souse.—Thomson (Ga.) Journal.

ON LONE ATLANTIC ISLE

Hard Lot of Castaway Sailors at Tristan d'Acunha.

CREW LIVED ON PENGUINS' EGGS.

Captain Shaw of the Wrecked Bark Glenhanley Writes of His Experience—The English Governor of the Island Is Ninety—One of the Colonists Fought With Nelson.

A friend of Captain R. R. Shaw of the British bark Glenhanley, which was wrecked in the south Atlantic in a tempest while on her way from New York to Australia, has received a letter from the skipper telling of his experience on the rugged rocks of Tristan d'Acunha, one of three islets about 1,000 miles west by south of the Cape of Good Hope. Captain Shaw and nearly all his crew were 154 days on the island, which they reached in a lifeboat after abandoning their vessel. They were taken from the island by the British warship Tiarnis and landed at Cape Town. The captain writes:

"The first ship that approached the island and was boarded by us was the American vessel S. D. Carlton, on Sept. 16, from New York to Hongkong. I wanted the captain to take us to the Cape of Good Hope, but he could not. Our second mate, however, went on the Carlton. Three days afterward we sighted a sail from the high land at the foot of a mountain. That afternoon eight men and myself left in a small boat and got to her, sailing and rowing until about 10 p. m. She proved to be the four masted bark Strathgryfe of Greenock, from New York for Melbourne. They also could not take us, but the captain gave us 70 pounds of bread, 30 pounds of flour, 14 pounds of coffee and some tobacco. That was the first substantial food and the first tobacco we got since we reached the island. As the population of the place with our 11 had been increased to 83, the supply did not last long.

"I never thought that there were white people in such a place as the one made Tristan d'Acunha their home. The natives have houses built of stone, and these are thatched with a grass called tussock. They are but one story high, and the people cook, eat and sleep in a single apartment. Along the inside walls of some of these apartments are bunks like those on ships. There are three make trips in their little boats to inaccessible island, 20 miles distant in a southwesterly direction, for wood to be used in thatching. The islands are overrun with rats, which get scant food excepting when the natives try to raise a little grain. Then the rats dig up the seed almost as soon as planted. The people grow very little of anything, but once in a while they succeed in raising a few potatoes. There are also a few apple and pear trees, but the rats which climb them eat the fruit before it can ripen.

"The governor of the island gave me shelter, and the rest of the crew were quartered at the houses of the natives, who divided their stock of eaglets and penguin flesh and eggs with them. Sea eaglets are about the size of a duck. Their flesh was too strong for me to eat. The raising of hamper is a terrible task, and to satisfy it it are penguin eggs for breakfast, dinner and supper. They were cooked in all styles, but the worst by, such as it was, could not disguise the egg to my taste.

"The sea eagles lay their eggs in holes on the sides of the mountains, and when new ones are to be had by the aid of pigeon the natives take their dogs in a boat and go around the island. The dogs smell out the holes, and then the natives get the young birds and bring them home and cook them. The eaglets have a strong and fishy taste, and one has to be hungry to eat their flesh. There are several penguins' rookeries, where we got eggs, which furnished the main part of our daily food while we were on the island. The little colony is out of the sea fowl, and the oil secured in the cooking we used in our lamps.

"Occupying the little cottage that I obtained from the Carlton, that was all that had been on the island for three months. The inhabitants own a fair sized sailboat between them, and whatever supplies they secure from a passing vessel they divide equally. They were given no shoes, and when a beast is killed its skin is pegged to the ground and dried. Then it is cut up into strips and used for the skin a sort of moccasin is made.

"The governor of the island is a ward of 90 years old, and his wife is 83. One of the people, named Thomas Bill Swains, was with Lord Nelson on the Victory at Trafalgar. When the government had a battery on the island of Tristan d'Acunha. Swains came as a corporal, and after the military force was abolished he remained in this (God forsaken) place. The inhabitants, both male and female, are sadly in need of clothing. The men sometimes secure cast off garments from the crews of passing ships, but the women rarely get a petticoat.

"As a sort of home amusement the members of the poor colony on this faraway island make grotesque bonnets and caps from the fleece and skins of the albatross and fancy work from the feathers of the penguins. The governor told me that he landed first on the island in 1836, and that during the last 62 years he had made only two trips to St. Helena, which is over 1,000 miles away. He had never been to the Cape of Good Hope ''—New York Sun.

MEXICO'S CASTLE CHAMBER.

Magnificent Presentation of Ambassador Clayton to President Diaz.

Morning dispatches from the city of Mexico tell of the presentation of Ambassador Clayton to President Diaz. This ceremony took place in what is known as the hall of ambassadors—a chamber of state which has no counterpart in Washington. The scene is described in the dispatches as being magnificent. The description can hardly be appreciated by those who have not seen what is considered the most remarkable apartment in the national palace.

Lofty ceilings have no place in Mexican architecture except in the churches. They are considered too dangerous for a country of frequent earthquakes. This hall of ambassadors is only 18 feet "in the clear." The width is about 50 feet. But the great length of this room is its distinguishing characteristic. At one end of the hall is the main entrance, at the other is the dais before which each ambassador as he performed the other day takes place. The first impression upon entering the hall is that proportions are all wrong, that the apartment ought to be nothing else but a bowling alley. But there are circumstances under which the hall of embassadors improves.

Upon a state occasion the great room makes an entirely different impression. Diplomatic functions of the highest importance always take place in this hall. The president, the cabinet, the diplomatic corps, the generals, the admiral, the senators and representatives assemble at the appointed time. They take their places along the walls, from which the portraits of the Mexican presidents look down. All stand, leaving a lane down the middle of the room from one end to the other, a distance of over 400 feet—as much as a long city block. The president and the cabinet ministers stand upon the dais.

The new representative of another country is brought in at the main entrance. Accompanied by his secretaries and military and naval attaches he walks slowly the full length of the hall to the dais and presents his credentials. The secretaries and attaches who stand in full dress uniforms for those entitled to wear them are the rule and fall even-handed upon the new native envoy at the time of day. The presentation of Ambassador Clayton was undoubtedly magnificent and in keeping with everything.—Washington Cor. Chicago Record.

NEW JERSEY GIRL'S FEAT.

She Climbs Out of a Carriage on to the Back of a Runaway Horse.

Miss Violetta Gibson, a young woman of Newark, N. J., distinguished herself the other afternoon by an attempt to stop a runaway horse in Elizabeth, N. J. The runaway was attached to a buggy in which she, with her mother, Mrs. Sarah Gibson, and a young girl, was driving. As Third street the horse became frightened at a trolley car and ran away. One of the reins soon broke and the horse was free. The woman and Elizabeth avenue and turned into First avenue, which is a narrow street.

While the horse was running at breakneck speed along the avenue Miss Gibson climbed out over the dashboard to one of the shafts and then upon the horse's back in an endeavor to secure the reins. She pulled upon them and tightly to the animal for two blocks before she succeeded in reaching the rein. Then she pulled upon it until the animal suddenly swerved to one side and succeeded in reaching the rein. Then she pulled upon it until the animal suddenly swerved to one side and succeeded in reaching the rein. Then she pulled upon it until the animal suddenly swerved to one side and succeeded in reaching the rein. The horse was not dangerously hurt.

The horse ran for over a mile and a half on Elizabeth street, where it dodged trolley cars for a block. Half a dozen times the carriage narrowly escaped being overturned. Among them was James Furrey, who is a sprinter. He outstripped the others and ran ahead of the runaway in front of the First Presbyterian church. Mrs. Gibson and the girl were still in the carriage, but Furrey succeeded in stopping the horse before it could run over the seats and ont on the horse's back like a circus rider and secured the rein. Furrey brought the horse to a stop at Jersey street. Neither Mrs. Gibson nor the girl was hurt, but Furrey had a sprained ankle and a severely cut leg. How he got hurt he cannot explain. The horse was not injured.—Newark Dispatch.

The Proper Dress For Dogs.

In spite of the ridicule that has been cast upon it, the absurd practice of providing costumes for canine pets still prevails in Paris. In the winter many of the dog tailors may be seen little astrakhan overcoats with linings of pink or blue satin and edged with ermine or sheepskin. For traveling there are lighter coats of fantastic cut, reaching to the waist, if a dog has a waist, by belts of tanned leather. Cambric shirts with lace frillings are mounted at intervals, and real leather shoes—where is the French S. P. C. A.—complete the costume. Evening dress for dogs is also in vogue, appropriate to his breed. A great Dane should wear Mexican iguana skin lined with white satin, while a toy spaniel in such fashion dictates a white calfskin necklet set with turquoises, while four footed dogs appear in gauze and lace trimmed with precious stones and hung round with locket.—London Chronicle.

Costliest Bean on Earth.

It is a curious fact known that the vanilla bean is the costliest bean on earth. It grows wild and is gathered by the natives in Papantla and Misantla, Mex. When brought from the forests, these beans are sold at the rate of about $11.00 per 1,000, but when dried and cured they cost about $11 per pound. They are mainly used by druggists, and last year over 90,000,000 beans were imported into the United States.—Boston Traveler.

KEELY MOTOR MYSTERY

Startling Discovery Made In the Late Inventor's Laboratory.

BURIED CAST IRON SPHERE FOUND.

It Lay Concealed in the Earth Beneath the Room In Which the Motor Stood—Workmen Frightened by Weird Sounds Which Vibrated Through the Building When the Sphere Was Struck With a Hammer.

It was through mere accident that Robert Williams of Philadelphia broke through the worn flooring of the laboratory of the late John W. Keely, at 1423 North Twentieth street, in Philadelphia, the other morning, and it is through this accident that the mystery of the Keely motor, one of the greatest mysteries of modern times, may be solved.

Underneath the floor, carefully buried and completely concealed in the ground, a cast iron sphere was found. The sphere was four feet in diameter. It rested on a firm stone foundation. The sphere was hollow, and on its upper surface were protruding brass screw sections that were evidently joined at one time to delicate brass pipes that ran beneath the floor and led to different parts of the building where the remarkable inventor secretly conducted experiments that made his name known throughout the world.

Keely's motor, the machine that has puzzled scientists for a decade, stood almost immediately above the buried sphere. Whether or not the sphere has anything to do with the operation of the Keely motor is a matter for conjecture. The presence of the sphere under the building, completely covered by the floor and inaccessible, is past explanation. Mechanics who saw the curious contrivance say that the sphere has no known use in mechanical arts. They say that under working conditions it is capable of generating and imparting magnetic influence. They say it might be hidden in the earth is a secret that only the dead inventor knew.

Since C. B. Kinrade, the Boston scientist, assumed charge of the so called motor, on which Mr. Keely spent thousands of dollars and to which he devoted his entire life, the projectile laboratory of the dead inventor has stood just as Mr. Keely left it. It is a two story brick building on Twentieth street above Master. The front of the building is without windows, and the whole air of the builder seems to have been their object. There are no means of communication with the outside world excepting a large door at the front that is double locked and barred.

A short time ago the new company that has been organized to further the development of the motor began to remove the effects of the inventor to another part of the city. The work began in machinery and tools were taken away and nothing was left. The other day Williams, who is the owner of the house of 1716 Spring Garden street, put men at work cleaning out the building in anticipation of new tenants. The workmen at work was Robert Williams.

In the middle room in which the strange motor has been kept Mr. Williams noticed a break in the flooring. Trying it with his foot the boards gave away, and his foot struck a metallic surface. He called in wonder to the other men. The floor was ripped up enough to expose the ground below. By brushing aside the dust the men discovered a huge convex surface of iron. One of the men struck it with his hammer, and a most curious thing happened.

From different parts of the room sounded the most horrible dull noises, as the iron beneath the floor was struck, and again the same peculiar echoes would be heard. All efforts to locate the origin of the sounds were in vain. The room was almost dark, and the men were in such an explosion or some kind of a scheme of the inventor to protect his secrets, left the uncanny place and locked the door.

Williams' curiosity was aroused, however, and he returned later in the day. He tore up the floor, and with pick and spade dug until the mysterious object was completely unearthed. The sphere had no visible connection with water mains or gas pipes. It weighed at least two tons and could not be moved. A foundation had been made for it, but the casting in position the inventor had allowed it to settle slightly sideways. The massive iron knib had then been secured in a manner that, according to Williams, would defy earthquakes.

The floor of the workroom contains a number of trapdoors which are fitted to their places so tightly that they can be lifted only with a chisel. There is no cellar under the workroom, and the purpose of the traps is a mystery. Another curious fact concerning the interior of the laboratory is that the floor of a small addition to the workroom, which was built in later years by the inventor, is raised three feet above the main floor of the building, thus leaving a hidden space, the contents and extent of which are not known.—Philadelphia Press.

Big Game In Africa.

An international conference will probably soon be held to consider the question of preserving the big game of Africa, which is being rapidly exterminated. Major von Wiesman, governor of German East Africa, has decreed that hunters must pay from 500 to 800 rupees for shooting licenses and elephant hunters must surrender to the government one tusk from each animal. —New York World.

TIME LOCKS EASILY OPENED.

Two John Wilkes Plans of Wood Mastered One of Them.

Not a little wonder has been caused in banking circles in Chicago at the ease with which the vaults were opened at the time the bank at Lima, O., was robbed recently. So direct an impression did the success of the job make on Henry B. Clarke, vice president of the Illinois Banking Association, in declaring that he came down to the bank the other day and tried his hand at forcing the time locks. He was successful beyond his fondest dreams. In fact, he was greatly alarmed at his success.

Taking simply a good sized piece of wood he made a couple of vigorous jabs at the time lock, and, presto, the bolts were thrown back and nearly $400,000 in good, hard cash lay within his reach. Dumfounded at the ease with which a burglary might have been committed, despite the supposedly burglar proof locks, he informed the president of the bank. The latter was as much surprised as his informant, and immediately began a search began for the resident manager of the company which installed the safes in the bank. After a few hours' hunt he was located and informed of what had been done and told that all the locks must be changed. Messengers were dispatched for skilled locksmiths, and about 4 o'clock that night the men began work putting on new doors and locks to all the vaults. Their task was not completed till late the next morning.

Mr. J. V. Clarke, the president of the bank, says that at least ten of the big Chicago banks are equipped with the same kind of time locks, and there is no telling how many millions at this moment might be secured by anyone who could get access to the vaults with a good sized club. Doubtless there will be some wholesale changing of bank locks in the next few days.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

LABOR LEADERS' COLLEGE.

Two Young Americans Organize an Educational Scheme in London.

W. Vrooman and C. A. Baird, young Americans of Oxford university, are inaugurating a scheme for a college for labor leaders, which is attracting much attention. They came especially from America to carry out the project. The college will be called Ruskin Hall. They have leased Kibble's House, a mansion built in 1648, near Christ Church college. It will be opened on Washington's birthday by a meeting in Oxford Town hall.

Ruskin Hall will accommodate 40 men. There will be no college servants, but among the students will be cooks and other servants who will get their board free in return for four hours' daily work. The remainder of their time will be available for study. The entire expense of the students for board, lodging and tuition will be $8 a week.

Fifty gratuitous tuitions will be given during the first two years, and 50 others have already been applied for for the first year. They are, in the words of the organizers, "men aspiring to be lawgivers, county councilors, members of parliament, trade unionists and fellow workmen who will engage crowds in the street and who organize clubs." The funds for the scheme are provided by American admirers of John Ruskin, the lecturer and author.—New York Journal.

LIKES A VEGETABLE DIET.

Chauncey Rice Charmed With the "Angel Dancers'" Ways.

Chauncey Rice, who has been living on Mr. Cadd's Farm, Fort Lee, Bergen, N. J., with Munson's band of "Angel Dancers," has written a long letter to Editor Buchin of the Englewood Times, telling why the members of that band do not eat meat. He says the longer he stays on the farm the better he likes the vegetarian diet. They eat vegetables, bread, buckwheat cakes and fruit.

"We use coffee, but not as a vegetable product, in place of loaf or grease," says the writer. "For breakfast this morning we have buckwheat cakes large, light, thick and substantial, smoking hot, with a dish of apples better than flesh, grease and hot drinks. I suffered the torments of the damned from indigestion when I was a meat eater, but now I feel as though I could live forever."—New York World.

American Athletic Club in San Juan.

An athletic club was formed in San Juan, Porto Rico, the other evening which will come into possession of a $5,000 bicycle track. Some years ago a German bicycle firm sent a representative to San Juan and created much excitement in a morning by erecting several hundred wheels and engineering the construction of the track. It is a succession of a mile and a half record, of which is 23 seconds. The war broke up the club, and its property has been passed over to the American club.—Exchange.

Lo, Agnimidol!

With respects to you, Aginaldo,
I'd recall to you the bibulge:
We have issued a query, Aginaldo,
Now he's humble, prostrate, pliant.
As we've work cut for him, Aginaldo,
So after you we surely shall go
If you survive in your present
Violently to exempt
Any part of the Philippines
From authority which means
To them and you
A better life and a broader view.
The liberty for which you get strive
Is much more likely to arrive
By peaceful means
Than through the bloody scenes
Of battlefields
As to the justice of your cause,
Let this connection give you pause:
The struggling patriot who yields
Obedience to his liberal laws
That's written with the eagle's claw
Advances at once, with definite stroke,
Eternal freedom from the despot's yoke.

If, after reading these few lines,
Your disposition still inclines
To deeds of turbulence and strife,
Then you may safely bet your life
The hand that raised our flag above
Manila
Will leave of you and yours not one solitaire.

FILIPINOS FREE.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY has sent instructions with reference to the government of the Philippinesto General Otis who is in command of the United States forces in those islands. The Filipinos are to be recognized as a free people. The government is to be carried no for their benefit. It is to be made plain that we go there "as friends to protect the natives in their homes, in their employments and in their personal and religious rights." Order, however, must be preserved at all hazards. Until the legislation of the United States shall otherwise provide. The present municipal laws are to be enforced by the ordinary tribunals if possible. Private property whether belonging to individuals or corporations is to be respected. All ports notually in the possession of the United States forces are to be opened to the commerce of friendly nations. "Finally," says the president," it should be the earnest and paramount aim of the military to win the confidence, respect and affection of the inhabitants of the Philippines by assuring to them in every possible way that full measure of individual rights and liberty will be the heritage of free people, and by proving to them that the mission of the United Stated is one of benevolence, substituting the mild sway of justice and right for arbitrary rule. These instructions express well the spirit of the people of the United States toward those who have lately come under their protection. For the first time in their history the Filipinos are called a "free people." We propose to treat them as men and this is undoubtedly the best way to take to improve their condition.

FIRE at Lakota, N. D., Monday night destroyed the high school building.

THE democrats are becoming more divided every day on the question of expansion. Boss Croker, of New York, is opposed to the attitude taken by Bryan on this momentous question.

JOSEPH H. CHOATE, one of the ablest menbers of the bar in New York, has been nominated by the president as ambassador to the court at St. James.

BENJAMIN F. FIFIELD, of Montpelier, has been appointed by the governor of Vermont as United States senator to succeed the late Justin D. Morrill, "the father of the senate." Senator Fifield is a prominent attorney of the state.

CHARLEMAGNE TOWNER, of Pennsylvania, now minister to Austria-Hungary, has been nominated by the president as ambassador to Russia, Addison C. Harris of Indiana to fill the place at Vienna.

THE opponents of the present divorce law in North Dakota are making a strong effort to have the law amended. Bishop Shanley of Fargo, and Rev. W. P. MacVey of Grand Forks, are the leaders in the movement.

JOHNSON is making the fight of his life for the United States senatorship from North Dakota. The public sentiment of the state is beginning to demand that the senatorial contest be brought to a close and the legislators get down to legislative work.

DEWEY is the great national hero of today, in consequence of what he did at Manila, and yet there are those who advocate that the United States throw away the territory that he gained and the opportunities he secured for them of helping to better the conditions of mankind.

THE anti-expansionists in the country are encouraging Aguinaldo and other leaders in their course of opposition to American rule in the Philippines. If force has to be used and in consequence American soldiers be killed, some of our own citizens will be partly responsible.

THE trustees of the hospital for the insane at St. Peter, as soon as certain charges against the institution were made public, sent to investigate the matter. Many witnesses were examined, but, says the St. Peter Tribune, "nothing developed to sustain charges of cruelty or ill-treatment."

THE peace treaty is now before the senate and the prospects for its ultimate ratification are growing brighter every day. Some able senators, however, such as Hoar, Hale, White and Caffery, are opposing the treaty. What New England opposition there is, is due to their traditionalism and ultra conservatism.

A BILL has been introduced into the legislature providing for the election of the railroad and warehouse commissioners by direct vote of the people. We doubt very much whether this is a good move. Let the people elect as governor a man who is capable and conscientious and he will not abuse the appointive power.

J. T. MCCLEARY, congressman from the second district of Minnesota, bids fair to become the chairman of the house committee on banking and currency. There is no man in the country better posted on the financial question than is Prof. McCleary, and this appointment will add another to the many honors which Minnesota congressmen are receiving.

THE great question of the ratification of the peace treaty with Spain is now being discussed in the United States senate. The senate committee on foreign relations yesterday authorized Senator Davis to report the pence treaty favorable without amendment. It is a time when all prejudice and passion ought to be laid aside. If ever statesmen were needed they are needed now.

THE conservative tone of Governor Lind's message is in marked contrast with the speeches which were delivered by the demo-populist orators during the last campaign. It seems to us that there is only one conclusion to be drawn from this fact and that is, either Mr. Lind does not voice the sentiments of the fusion party or most that was said on the stump last fall was insincere and spoken for political effect.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY will not appoint a new minister to Spain until the treaty of peace has been ratified. He says that General Woodford, who was our minister to Spain when the war began, still holds that position, is wrong. The position became vacant as soon as General Woodford returned to Washington and submitted his report. It is understood that General Woodford has no desire to hold the position again.

PARIS is all excitement again. The president of the civil section of the court of cassation has resigned and is accusing the judge of the criminal section of the same court, before which the Dreyfus case is now being retried, of unfairness and partiality. It seems almost likely that Dreyfus would be declared innocent and this action of Beaurepaire is evidently intended to arouse public opinion against the Dreyfusites.

JUDGE DAY struck the key note of the situation when he said "Whether or not we have so willed, the days of our international isolation are past." No short-sighted policy of ex-Colonel Bryan will prevent our onward movement. Entangling alliances need not necessarily follow, still in union there is strength. United States, Great Britain and Japan would make such a powerful combination that the peace of the world would be assured.

SENATOR QUAY'S petition for a writ of certiorari requiring the trial of the conspiracy case against himself and others from the local courts to the Supreme court has been dismissed by the Supreme court. As this decision is against Quay his fight for re-election to the United States senate will be all the harder. The election certainly ought to be deferred until the trial is completed and then if he is proved guilty he ought to be kept away from Washington as the representative of the state of Pennsylvania.

WHILE you are talking about your republicanism don't forget that the northern part of this state has joined the hosts of those who march under the banner of the G. O. P. In the present state legislature the seventh congressional district makes an excellent showing, say as compared with the second district. The latter has seven republican senators out of ten and the thirteen representatives out of seventeen, while the former has seven senators out of nine and twelve representatives out of nineteen.

MISS ESTELLE REEL, superintendent of Indian schools, in her report says: "Industrial training schools should have the foremost place in Indian education." Miss Reel's conclusions are based upon personal experience among the Indians. If her recommendations are followed the boys will be given manual training, and be taught how to farm, the girls will learn sewing, cooking, household work, etc. The future would see less trouble among the red skins if they were under an educational regime of this kind.

DEWEY has made requisitions for more gunboats for his Asiatic squadron. When all the vessels reach him which he says are intended to send him, he will have the largest squadron that an American officer was ever in command of in time of peace. The fact that Admiral Dewey is calling for more war vessels is evidence that the Filipinos may give some trouble, but if Dewey ever finds it necessary to get after them their fate will be something like that which overtook the Spaniards in Manila harbor. The commander of our Asiatic fleet always means business.

ONE of the last official acts of Governor Clough was to cancel the deed for 271,666 acres of land made by ex-Auditor Bierman in 1895, and tendered in full to fill the grant of the state to the Great Northern railroad. The road refused to accept the land as they said it was almost worthless. In place of the deed cancelled Clough gave a deed for 1,023 acres which the railroad accepted. Auditor Dunn has refused to recognize the new deed. The matter will go to the courts, indeed it seems that Clough's action was taken that the question might be judicially settled.

SENATOR HOAR, of Massachusetts, delivered an address in the senate last Monday on the question of expansion. He takes the ground that it is in opposition to the constitution of the country to acquire foreign territory that is to be governed independently as colonies. If this be true—we omit any discussion of the question now—then we wish to say that the constitution was made for the people of the United States and not the people for the constitution. A free and progressive people must change their ideas.

THE sentiment against the acquirement of the Philippines is growing day by day, and it is not confined to any one party either, says the Minneapolis Times. We think the Times is rather in error. The Philippines are now in the possession of the United States. Whether or not we will keep them may be a question, but even upon this question the sentiment of the majority of the people is decidedly in favor of their retention. President McKinley before taking definite action on any public matter has always consulted the wishes of the people and in accordance with their desire he is pursuing his present policy.

THE superlatively prosperous conditions now prevailing in this broad and bounding land of ours are such as to excite the wonder and admiration of our friends among competitive nations and the jealousy of our rivals. Americans may well be boastful of the record which this country has established for the year just closed. We are no longer dependent upon foreign nations for material or for an export. We have emerged from our position of dependency, and are boldly aggressive, conscious of our power, ready to demand and enforce our rights and defiant of interference in any form with our privileges.

THE republican members of the state legislature in caucus unanimously selected C. K. Davis to succeed himself as United States senator. Mr. Davis was himself at Washington at the time and telegraphed to his acknowledgments. The spectacle of a man being nominated to such a high position without his being present to fight his own battle is an unusual one. Such an action is a great honor to Senator Davis, and an evidence of the intelligence and common sense of our republican legislators. Now let the fusionists join them and make Senator Davis' election by the legislature unanimous.

THE United States senate has passed a resolution, offered by Senator Hoar, calling upon the president to furnish the senate with the correspondence between the state department and the peace commission at Paris, "if not incompatible with public interest." It is altogether likely that President McKinley will consider this correspondence of a confidential nature and hence not send it to the senate. There are precedents for such a course on his part. The expansion policy supporters permitted the resolutions to be passed thinking that perhaps thereby Senator Hoar might be placated.

DURING all times of the year, says the Minneapolis Journal, the big game in the northern counties of the state is being killed. All winter the deer are hunted and venison in large quantities is publicly sold in many places. In the summer, too, these fleet footed animals are slaughtered for the sake of the hides, and the timber wolves yearly devour large numbers of them. It is high time, in consequence of these facts, that the game business it is to protect these animals should perform their duty. The wolves rather than the deer ought to be destroyed, and the men who are breaking the law with impunity ought to be put where they cannot continue their present lawless career.

ROBERTS of Utah, recently elected to congress, will wish he had remained in private life, before the people of the land get through with him. The latest opposition to his becoming a national law maker, comes from the state legislatures which are quite generally passing resolutions suggesting to the congressmen of their respective states that they vote against the seating of Congressman-elect Roberts. Would it not be a wise set for our own legislature to put itself on record, in some way, as opposed to this attempt on the part of the state of Utah to put a polygamist in the nation's capitol? The state of Utah, we say, for Mr. Roberts should not be receiving all the blame. The people of a part of that state elected him, knowing at the same time what he was.

Notes From Exchanges.

Thief River Falls Press: Odolf Eklund went to Crookston the first of the week where he will spend some time.

Marshall county Leader: Crookston has organized a hockey club and will try conclusions with all the clubs on the line. Better not run up against Stephen.

Cannon Falls Beacon: Miss Sexson will not, as we understand, act as stenographer to Gov. Lind, but will hold her position as the stenographer of the Democratic state committee.

Fergus Falls Journal: The Moorhead News announces that its editor has gone to St. Paul to attend the Lind reception and to ascertain whether the aforesaid editor is to be a part of the next administration. There are others attending the reception for the same purpose.

Fosston Thirteen Towns: Shortly before Christmas one of the progressive farmers of the town of Badger, this county, brought a load of forty-five turkeys to Fosston and sold them to A. F. Helfand, the butcher. They were all raised by him and were in prime condition. It is not often in this part of the country that a single farmer can sell forty turkeys at one time, although they are profitable, always bringing a good price.

Red Lake County Courier: Here we are, a city of nearly 2,000 people, yet without an much fire protection as a country postoffice should have. The hook and ladder truck which we have is well enough in its way, but it takes water to put out fires, and the property which might have been saved through its use with proper appliances, at the recent fires, would have more than paid for fire appuratus.

Red Wing Republican: Goodhue county appears to be a favorite place whereform to secure private secretaries for the governors of this state. L. A. Rowing, who has just been selected by Gov. Lind for his private secretary, is the third Goodhue county man to serve in that capacity. Gen. S. P. Jennison was private secretary to three governors—Merriam from 1890 to 1893; to Gov. Nelson from 1893 to 1895; and to Gov. Clough from 1895 to 1897.

Norman County Herald: Will Carlisle last week secured his connection with the firm of C. B. Hayes & Co. and, together with his family, left Saturday for Crookston where they will make their future home. Mr. Carlisle has erected a very desirable position with the wholesale house of Finch, Smith & Co., and has a large share of their city trade. Mr. Carlisle has been a resident of Ada for about seven years, first being connected with the Thorpe Brothers' business man of Red Lake Falls. The wedding trip to the Pacific coast to visit Mr. LaBissoniere's father, has been postponed till the spring time. The HERALD extends its best wishes to the bride and congratulations to the groom.

—O. K. Borget and Miss Jennie Lee were married last evening in the Mathews house on the hill where the bridal couple expect to go to housekeeping. It was a quiet affair, only very near friends witnessing the ceremony. Mr. Borget is one of the employes of the county treasurer's office, a young man of fine literary tastes, the bride is one of Crookston's captivating and amiable young ladies. The JOURNAL extends its best wishes and congratulations.

A Strong Nation.

Consists of strong men and healthy women, and health and strength depend upon pure, rich blood which is given by Hood's Sarsaparilla. A nation which takes millions of bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla every year is laying the foundation for health, as it does, most of which will show itself in years to come.

Hood's Pills are prompt, efficient, always reliable, easy to take, easy to operate. 25c.

Notice For Bids.

Notice is hereby given that bids will be received by the undersigned until Tuesday the 17th inst., at 8:00 o'clock p. m., for furnishing and placing of street signs and numbers, as required for the proper free delivery of the mails, in the city.

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Wedding Bells.

—Miss Rose Cartier is to be married to Armand Couvrette next Tuesday night.

—Paul J. Kops, a former resident of Grand Forks, was recently married at Oshkosh, Wis., to Miss Mary Fisher.

—Miss Dagmar Peterson and Joseph Quesnell were married by Father Murphy at the church, Tuesday afternoon.

—Tuesday night at 7:30 at the home of the bride's parents in the town of Hammond, Miss Letitia Hanna was married to Nelson Miller.

—Miss Minnie Olson and Mr. O. F. Post were married last week at St. Hilaire. The groom is a prominent merchant of that village and the bride one of the society young ladies.

—Miss Laura Miekrad, one of Crookston's attractive young ladies, and Mr. August Munn, a young man in the carriage making business in this city, will be married next Sunday night at 8 o'clock at the French Roman Catholic church. After the ceremony the bridal party will repair to the Grand Central hotel, where at 8:30 a dinner will be served.

Miss Minnie Martin was married at the home of her parents in this city yesterday at high noon to Mr. Theodore Lafleur, both of Red Lake Falls. The ceremony was performed by Father Murphy. It was a quiet wedding only the near relatives being present. Miss Martin is a charming young lady well known in society circles in Crookston. The groom is a popular young business man of Red Lake Falls. The wedding trip to the Pacific coast to visit Mr. LaBissoniere's father, has been postponed till the spring time. The JOURNAL extends its best wishes to the bride and congratulations to the groom.

Kind Words from Brother Scribes.

We wish some of our brother editors would try to see ourself as others see us.

Austin Register: N. S. Gordon, formerly one of the editors of the Transcript of this city, has purchased the Polk County Journal of Crookston. The Journal is already an excellent paper, but under the skillful supervision of Mr. Gordon, it will undoubtedly take a new lease of life. We many friends in Mr. Gordon in this city unite in wishing him all possible good fortune in his new field.

Moorhead News: The Polk County Journal with its issue of December 29, changes management, and is now in the hands of N. S. Gordon, late of the Nowy County Transcript. The paper will continue as Republican in politics. Mr. Gordon is welcome in the field of Northern Minnesota journalism, and the News trusts he will make a business and literary success of his paper.

Fertile Journal: N. S. Gordon, late of the Austin Transcript, has purchased the Crookston Journal from Mrs. H. E. Cooks. Mr. Gordon is an experienced newspaper man and the Journal will not suffer by his ownership.

Minneapolis Times: N. S. Gordon has decided that he does not want to be postmaster in the legislature. He has returned to his first love, having bought a newspaper in Crookston and determined to assume its management at once.

Detroit Record: The late H. E. Cooke's paper, the Crookston Journal, has been sold to N. S. Gordon, an experienced newspaper man from the southern part of the state, who Curzon's Bad Writing.

It is said of Mr. George Curzon, the governor general of India, that his handwriting became quite illegible at one period of his Oxford career. At this time he wrote two letters, one to a relative, one to a chum with whom he always discussed the faults of their respective relations, and accidentally put these letters into the wrong envelopes. He was about to write a profound apology for his failure when he received the following note from him, "Don't read a word of your four pages, but guess you want some money, you young rascal." Inclosed was a handsome "tin."

Samson secured the prize for the best gentleman's dress, while Lutie Palmer was awarded the honor of being decked out the most comically.

BEYOND THE RIVER.

The Remains of Mrs. Reynolds Laid To Rest At Alexandria.

Mrs. Reynolds passed from this life about eight o'clock last Thursday evening. She had been sick for about two months but hopes were entertained of her recovery till two or three days before the end came. She was seventy-four years old when she died, having been a resident of Crookston for twenty years.

Her sons, Geo. H. Reynolds of St. Cloud, and Fred Reynolds of Duluth, arrived in the city a few hours after death had come.

The funeral services were held at the Congregational church on Saturday afternoon, Revs. It. S. Loring of St. Cloud, and H. P. Fisher of this city being in charge, the former delivering the funeral address. A large number of citizens were present to pay a last tribute to the memory of one who was held in the highest esteem by all. The remains were several hours in the church. A guard of honor from the Women's Relief Corps was unable to be present, but a floral piece was taken to the Great Northern station to be brought thence to Alexandria and laid in the grave near where Mrs. Reynolds' husband was buried.

Your Doctor Knows

Your doctor knows all about foods and medicines.

The next time you see him, just ask him what he thinks of of Cod-Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. We are willing to leave it in his answer.

For twenty-five years doctors have prescribed our Emulsion for paleness, weakness, nervous exhaustion, and for all diseases that cause loss in flesh.

Its creamy color and its pleasant taste make it especially useful for thin and delicate children.

No other preparation of cod-liver oil is like it. Don't lose time and risk your health by taking something unknown and untried. Keep in mind that SCOTT'S EMULSION has stood the test, for a quarter of a century.

Prepared and for sale by druggists.

Ideal and Real Marriage.

The lover is an idealist. He is not to love with a living reality, though he thinks he is. His happiness as an ideal consists in believing a poem to be not only poetical, but a fact. True love is a religion—that is a believed poem —but it is inferior to the celestial religious in expecting its ideal fruition on the earth. The lover seeks this fruition in marriage. If his marriage is unhappy, it is a disappointment, and there is no more to be said; but even the happiest marriage is different from the lover's ideal. It is inferior as to perfectious because it is full of great or trifling annoyances which are incompatible with perfection and which the lover had not foreseen, but it is incomparably superior to any ideal in richness and in interest. The woman must have a poor nature who does not after marriage reveal qualities that her lover had not included in his conception of her gifts.

It is like going to live in some beautiful place that hitherto we have only read about. We had imagined for it a certain pure and simple charm. Living there, we find unexpected inconveniences, but the neighborhood has become far more interesting to us since it has been our home, as we have made a hundred discoveries that our imagination was unable to foresee. Finally, we perceive that the interest of the place, which the tourist thinks he has exhausted in one visit, is in reality inexhaustible. Nevertheless, in spite of the superior variety of interest in the reality, on comparing it with an imaginative conception we know that it has one inferiority. The ideal is still the ideal, and from time to time the first impression (which was not true) may recur to us in memory with a magic that no reality can equal.—Hammerton's "The Quest of Happiness."

Cost of Russian Coronations.

Alexander III was parsimonious. On his deathbed he advised his son to be strictly economical. His own coronation, he said, had only cost 13,000,000 rubles ($6,500,000), but the coronation expenses ought to be and could be further reduced to 7,000,000 rubles. Nicholas II has preferred, on the contrary, to squander so that unfortunate display more than 60,000,000 rubles ($30,000,000), taken from the already overburdened state budget.

Strict economy in state expenditure was the rule during the previous reign, and this much must be said of Alexander III, that he succeeded in putting an end to the wholesale plundering of Russia which was going on during the second half of Alexander II's rule. He undoubtedly created a certain atmosphere of honesty in the management of the state's moneys. Under the present czar the reverse is the contrary: "Do just as you like. Steal and plunder, but don't worry me."—Prince Kraposhin in Nineteenth.

A LITTLE SUFFERER

Face, Hands and Arms Covered With Scrofulous Humors—How a Cure Was Effected.

"When five years old my little boy bed scrofula on his face, hands and arms. It was worst on his chin, although the sores on his cheeks and hands were very bad. It appeared in the form of watery blisters which would fester, break open and run for a thick yeash sore. After scratching they would break out again. They caused intense itching and the little sufferer had to be watched continually to keep him from scratching the sores. We became greatly alarmed at his condition. My wife's mother had had scrofula and the only medicine which had helped her was Hood's Sarsaparilla. We decided to give it to our boy and we noted an improvement in his case very soon. After giving him four bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla her humor had all been driven out of his blood and it has never since returned." WILLIAM BATES, 416 South Williams St., South Bend, Indiana.

DEPUTIES MET

French Chamber in Session and There Is Excitement in Paris.

Crowds Abont the Entrance of the Palais Bourbon Held in Check

By a Large Force of Police and Detachments of Republican Guards.

Another Sensation in the Dreyfus Case—Another Conspiracy Alleged.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—The French chambers have reopened. The Palais Bourbon, where the chamber of deputies sits, was crowded.

Everything points to a stormy sitting of the chamber. It is expected that a vote of confidence will be taken, and that it will possibly lead to the fall of the ministry.

All the streets in the vicinity of the Palais Bourbon are lined with excited crowds, which are kept in order by an imposing force of police and republican guards.

The session was opened at 2:15 p. m., under the presidency of M. Charles Boisset, Radical Republican.

Addressing the deputies, M. Boisset implored them to put an end to the "painful and dangerous divisions," and to again become "calm and self reliant, side by side with our valiant army."

The chamber subsequently re-elected M. Deschanel to the presidency of the house, by a vote of 373 against 181 votes cast for M. Brisson.

Senator Wallon, the senior member, presided at the opening of the senate. He made a speech, pointing out that the present international troubles of France were not attributable to the constitution, and that the moment was very inopportune for a convocation of the "constituent assembly."

WORST BLOW YET.

Resignation of M. de Beaurepaire Is the Submission of the Dreyfus Affair.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Paris correspondent of The Times says: Of all the scandals produced by the Dreyfus affair this of the resignation of M. Quesnay de Beaurepaire is certainly the greatest. What is beyond doubt is that the Nationalists, who have not a single man whose name was imposing or whose ability was dangerous, now appear to have found a chief, although his aim is still far from clear. With Quesnay de Beaurepaire leading the Nationalists and anti-Semites, Paul Deroulede leading the League of Patriots and Godefroy Cavaignac at the head of the Patrie Fancaise, the republic, if it escapes, will have a hard time.

COURT ITSELF DIVIDED.

Two Fiercely Opposing Camps Make Up Its Membership.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Paris correspondent of The Daily Mail says:

The day's revelations of various kinds tend to show that the members of the court of cassation are themselves divided into two fiercely opposing camps of Dreyfusards and anti-Dreyfusards. M. Quesnay de Beaurepaire's explanation of the cause of his resignation will probably lead to the fall of the cabinet, since he complains bitterly of the way M. le Bret, minister of justice, conducted the interview with him when he offered to the minister a statement of the relations between M. Bard of the common branch of cassation and Colonel Picquart.

TO EXONERATE DREYFUS.

Charged a Conspiracy Exists in the Court of Cassation.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—The Echo de Paris publishes a statement by M. Quesnay Beaurepaire of the reason for his resignation of the presidency of the civil section of the court of cassation. In a long document he virtually protests against what he suggests is a conspiracy on the part of the court of cassation to exonerate Dreyfus. But he practically admits his partiality by declaring that his resignation was intended to avenge the army and its generals for the sufferings they have had to endure in silence.

MINNEAPOLIS MILLS OUT.

Not Included in the Combine Organized by McIntyre.

DULUTH, Jan. 11.—Little has been heard of Thomas McIntyre, the great organizer of New York, during the past fortnight, but he has not been asleep. He now has a deal on through which, in all probability, he will acquire for himself and associates every flour mill at the head of the lakes, except the Minnetonka and the Grand Republic mills. The deal includes not only the Ogilvie mills in Superior, but the Freeman mill as well, the Allis mills at Milwaukee and the New York city mills. The mills at Minneapolis are not included in the present plans, nor is it likely that they will be.

Monopoly of the Wire Business.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—The Post says: Official announcement has been made of the completion of a deal which will give the American Steel and Wire company a practical monopoly of the wire business of the country. Already controlling 14 large plants it has concluded negotiations for the purchase of 15 more.

CUBAN FUTURE

Practical Problems That Confront Us Discussed by Mr. Porter,

Who Investigated Conditions as Special Commissioner For the President.

The Labor Problem Will Be One of the Hardest of All to Solve.

General Wood, Governor of Santiago, Arrives at New York.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Robert P. Porter, President McKinley's special commissioner to Cuba and Porto Rico spoke at Cooper Union on "Practical Problems that confront us in Cuba." The meeting was held under the auspices of the People's Institute and Charles Sprague Smith, Director of the Institute, introduced Mr. Porter, who said that Cuba has now, under the occupation of the United States, everything she ever fought for, industrial and commercial freedom. The United States wants not a foot of her soil without paying hard cash and will expend every penny of Cuban revenues on Cuba.

He said the political future of Cuba is a difficult problem to dispose of, and thought it advisable for the present to let matters stand as they are. He said the intelligent Cubans favor annexation but it seemed to be a question whether this country could constitutionally hold islands as colonies. He is firmly convinced that the Cubans can govern themselves, and that they will make application for admission to the Union at once. From military and strategical points of view, he said it would be insanity to let Cuba go, and the question, therefore, is in what state shall it be held.

Mr. Porter, in answer to questions, said the labor problem is the most puzzling one in Cuba. He could not say what the solution to be. He said the island has a capacity of 1,250,000 tons of sugar annually, but because of lack of labor, the planters can produce but 300,000 tons annually. He said that he thought large capitalists will find profitable investment in the islands, but he would not advise clerks or men of small means to go there.

He said the future of the island depended altogether upon the upbuilding of the three great industries, sugar, tobacco and iron ore. He prophesied an era of peace and prosperity for both Cuba and Porto Rico.

GENERAL WOOD ARRIVES.

Military Governor of Santiago at New York—His Things in Good Shape.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The United States transport Mississippi, which sailed from Santiago on the evening of Jan. 4 has arrived. On board the transport were General Leonard Wood, military governor of Santiago, and Lieutenant Hanna, aide-de-camp; Dr. Castillo, a brother of the Cuban General Castillo, and Colonel Gibson, who superintended the distribution of provisions to the starving Cubans.

General Wood, who was interviewed at quarantine regarding the protest of the people of Santiago over the disposal of the funds of that province, said he did not care to talk on that matter before he visited Washington. There was some dissatisfaction, but nothing to amount to anything. When he left Santiago everything was in splendid shape, schools were being organized and ready to receive scholars, and nearly 3,000 miles of roads had been constructed in the province. The custome receipts were the largest ever collected and exceeded the amount collected and turned into the Spanish treasury. Funds were available for meeting the expenses of the administration of the province, and the only expense to the United States would be the cost of maintaining her army. The best of feeling prvailed and the general condition of things was all that could be desired. General Wood appeared to be in excellent health.

MASSO WELL PLEASED.

Former Cuban President Praises American Rule at Santiago.

SANTIAGO, Jan. 11.—A luncheon was given during the day to Bartolome Masso, the former president of the Cuban revolutionary government, prior to his departure for his home at Manzanille. Replying to the toast of his health Masso said he trusted to see the American flag waving soon from every house in Cuba. He then paid a glowing tribute to the magnificent work done by General Leonard Wood in this province. His remarks were loudly cheered. Senor Masso also said he was not in sympathy with the men who were continually objecting to everything done by the Americans.

"It is only necessary to see Santiago," said he, "to witness the magnificent success of American rule," and he has trusted provincial and municipal authority would be granted to the Cubans under a nominal military head at Havana."

Nicaragua Canal Debate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The senate has agreed that after 2 o'clock next Tuesday, debate on the Nicaragua canal bill shall be limited to 15 minutes on each amendment, the senate to be under the 5-minute rule. No time has been fixed for a final vote.

COURTS MUST DECIDE.

Governor Clough Cancelled the Biermann Deeds to the Great Northern.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 11.—One of the last official acts of Governor Clough before his retirement from office was to cancel the deed for 371,598 acres of land, made by ex-Auditor and Land Commissioner Biermann, and tendered in full to fill the grant of the state to that road.

The company claimed that the lands were worthless, and refused to accept them, asking that new selections be made.

Accompanying the cancellation was a deed by the governor for 1,000 acres of land selected by the company "for the purpose of making a test case in the courts to settle the question as to whether or not the lands conveyed in this Biermann deed were in fact valueless as claimed, and whether or not the company was entitled to valuable lands as a consideration for the improvements made."

Auditor Dunn has refused to record the deed executed by Governor Clough, and recognizing the Biermann deeds as valid until the courts decide the matter.

WERE GUESTS OF HONOR.

Elaborate Dinner at the White House for the Peace Commissioners.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—President and Mrs. McKinley gave an elaborate dinner at the White House last night at which the members of the Paris peace commission were the guests of honor. Invited to meet them were the members of the cabinet, senators and representatives in congress and a number of the officers of the army and navy who took prominent parts in the war, including Major Generals Shafter and Wheeler and Admirals Sampson and Schley and Captain Robley D. Evans.

GERMAN ARMY INCREASE.

Emperor William Has Little Faith in the Czar's Disarmament Plan.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Berlin correspondent of The Daily News says:

Discussing the czar's disarmament proposals at a reception given by the presidents of the reichstag recently, Emperor William said he appreciated the loftiness of the ideas and the nobility of the motives of the Russian emperor, but he did not expect them to yield practical results in this direction. Therefore, the increase in the German army was no less indispensible than before.

QUAY'S PETITION DENIED.

His Case Remanded to the Court of Quarter Sessions For Trial.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 11.—The petition of United States Senator Quay, his son Richard S. Quay, and ex-State Treasurer Benjamin P. Haywood, for a writ of certiorari, removing the trial of the conspiracy case against them from the local court to the supreme court, was dismissed by the supreme court. The case was remanded to the quarter sessions court of this city for trial, and the costs of the proceedings were placed on the petitioners.

FAILED TO AGREE.

Difference of Opinion in Committee on the Nicaragua Canal.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The house committee on interstate and foreign commerce failed to agree upon the basis of a Nicaragua bill and voted down two propositions for special meetings. The whole question now goes over until the regular meeting on Friday.

Combine to Lower Prices.

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 11.—W. H. Lawrence, president of the National Carbon company of this city, confirms the report that his concern has been absorbed by the carbon combine now being organized. He also confirms the report from Chicago of the other companies which will become members of the new organization. He asserted that it is not the intention of the new company to raise prices, but to reduce them through cheaper methods of doing business.

House Members Greet Shafter.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—General Shafter appeared in the corridor of the house of representatives during the day and was soon surrounded by a large number of members of the house, who were introduced by General Wheeler. For a time the floor of the house was well nigh deserted while members accompanied General Wheeler to meet the commander of the Santiago expedition.

Report Favorably on Pensions.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The senate committee on naval affairs agreed to report favorably the promotion of naval officers who participated in the war with Spain over others who are their seniors. The list includes Admirals Sampson and Schley, and a long list of other officers. No opposition was developed in committee.

Ordered to Report or Snatling.

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 11.—Captain W. L. Cooke, in charge of the Third infantry recruiting station in this city, has been ordered, together with his party, to report to headquarters at Fort Snelling as soon as possible. It is believed the order is a forerunner to the immediate removal of the Third regiment to the Philippines.

President Will Speak.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—Chicago members of the National Association of Manufacturers have received news that President McKinley will visit the annual convention of that body to be held in Cincinnati, Jan. 24, 25 and 26, and will deliver an address to the members.

John R. McLean Seriously Ill.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—John R. McLean, owner of the Cincinnati Enquirer, is dangerously sick at his home on Fifteenth street of hiccough. Doctors and nurses are in constant attendance.

Channel Service Suspended.

DOVER, Jan. 11.—The channel service between this port and Calais has been suspended, owing to the heavy seas which are running.

WHAT CURED HIM.

Chivers had no definite occupation, but his nerves were shattered. That was his companion.

"What do you think is the matter?" says he to Sir Andrew Leech of Wimpole street.

"Do you drink tea," asked the doctor, eying him inquisitorially—"afternoon tea?"

"Yes," says Chivers anxiously.

"With cream?"

"Why, yes."

"Think the mischief! It is the cream that is wrecking your gastrics, my friend!"

Off goes poor Chivers at once to Sir Bolus Mortgrue in Harley street.

"Doctor," says he, "I'm feeling very poorly. Should you say, now, ten was bad for me?"

"My dear sir, that depends. Take plenty of cream with your tea and it will do you no great harm."

Chivers then looks in on the celebrated bonesopath, Dr. Dodgem of Welbeck street —quite the rising man on digestion, you know.

"Doctor, pray tell me the truth about tea!"

"Tea!" says Dodgem. "The most insidious of poisons!"

"Wine—with plenty of cream?"

"With or without; nothing can make it wholesome."

Chivers took to coffee. As he felt no better he consulted Katterplasm, M. D., the family doctor, who asked him cheerily:

"Enjoy your food? Sleep sound?"

"Neither," said poor Chivers.

"If you slept, you'd eat. Do you drink coffee?"

"I do, in preference to tea."

"At night?"

"Yes."

"Then so—it's the coffee keeps you awake. Want of sleep naturally weakens the stomach."

So he left off coffee and took cocoa.

Chivers had never smoked, but now he felt a sort of craving that he could not allay, and, a friend offering him a cigarette, he tried it, and it seemed to do him good but his appetite did not improve. He called his dog by a little better, but Rosebud's quite docile, so he called in Dr. No. 5 and explained his sad case.

"Do you smoke?" said the great specialist, whose acute nose had detected a faint aroma of tobacco while feeling his pulse.

"Yes. Is it bad?" inquired the invalid timidly.

"Bad! Are you aware that Sir Benjamin Brodie proved that a few drops of the liquid sediment of the tobacco pipe would instantly destroy a full grown cat!"

"Lor'—but," urged Chivers, "I'm not a full grown cat."

"No, sir; you haven't the vitality of a kitten. Give up tobacco!"

Chivers does it up. But he still felt very low. He thought he would ask old Katterplasm, M. D., the family practitioner, to come and confide to him his perplexity—no tea, no coffee, no tobacco and getting weaker every day!

"Oh, take a glass of wine! You're feeling low, that's all. You want a fillip. Take two glasses once in awhile—can't see you do harm—do you good."

Chivers took two and felt better, but the next day he received a pamphlet issued by the Society For the Total Abolition of Hops and Wines, which proved that indulgence in alcohol tempted the best men to commit crimes of violence and shame and hurried thousands into lunatic asylums!

Then Chivers met a friend who persuaded Him to become a vegetarian, after which he declined more rapidly than ever.

"Come up to Scotland, old man. A little yachting around the Hebrides—do you all the good in the world; see sir, you know."

So Chivers went on board the Skylark. She was rather rigged, and ran 9 knots. She had not been out more than two hours when she struck on a rock, and, as it was evident that she was fast sinking, they had just time to haul to the boat that was towed astern and pull in—all four of them—with a pint of rum and a biscuit.

The weather was fairly good, but there was six hours of hard rowing between them and land, no mistake.

Well, they struck coast Chivers. After seven hours' battling with a strong current they made out a fishing village and were greeted the shingle.

The natives conducted them over to Sloggers' "shanty," as he called his elegant highland abode. A splendid collation had been prepared, including a fine fat haggis, mutton, boiled with capar sauce. Chivers forgot that he was a vegetarian.

"Lord, how dry rowing makes one!" he exclaimed, and they had a drop from the flowing basket of brown ale. Chivers forgot that he was a teetotaler, and drank it off. As they sat by the fire Sloggers, Sandy Sassenach and Batson lit up and offered Chivers a cigar. He forgot the doctor's warning about tobacco and smoked it. Later on they danced the ladies in the little round walled drawing room looking over the brink of a precipice right onto the sea.

Sloggers' pretty young wife discovered the dramatic Soucbong in dainty cups of biscuit colophia, while her sprightly youngest sister offered cream, and plenty of it too.

Next day Sloggers said: "Chivers, my boy, we're old friends, and I want to do you a good turn. There's nothing really the matter with you, on if there was the shipwreck cured you. All you want is fresh air, an active life, something to do, and eat and drink what you like. You shall be my highland agent, steward, overseer—call it what you will. Try it for a year."

Chivers clasped Sloggers by the hand.

"Sloggers," said he, "you understand me. You are my friend. I don't think you much worse than we with me. The doctors mean well, but they don't understand my complaint. You alone have discovered the physic that suits me."—New York World.

A Clever Manager.

The Groom (very wealthy)—Why did you marry an ordinary chap like me?

The Bride—I haven't the slightest idea. Mamma managed the whole affair.—Harlem Life.

Caught In a Box.

"Why is it," he asked, "that bonifaces' waiters are always the most stupid?"

"Sir," she replied, "am I to understand that you desire to cast reflections upon my mental capacity?"

"Oh, no!" he hurriedly returned. "I have always said that you were one of the brightest girls I ever"—

But he didn't finish. Before he could do so he realized that he had said the wrong thing and could never make it right.—London Fun.

TO DISCUSS POLICIES

AMERICAN AND FILIPINO COMMITTEES CONFER AT MANILA.

Attempt to Reach an Understanding by a Full and Free Discussion—Situation More Reassuring—Late Dispatches From General Otis Make No Allusion to Hostilities—Has Been Instructed to Use Gentleness Towards the Insurgents.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Manila correspondent of The Morning Post says:

There was an important conference during the evening between daily authorized American and Filipino committees at the instance of Aguinaldo. The latter appointed General Flores, Colonel Aguilles and Senor Torres. Major General Otis appointed General Hughes, Colonel Smith of the California regiment and Judge Advocate Crowder. General Otis said the purpose of the conference was a mutual understanding of the policies, aims and desires of the people of the United States and the Philippines. There was a full and free discussion.

NO FEAR OF HOSTILITIES.

Latest Dispatches From General Otis More Reassuring.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—It can be stated on authority that such news as has been received from General Otis is rather reassuring than otherwise as to the situation in the Philippines and that he made no allusion as to a hostile collision. He has been instructed to use gentleness to deal with the insurgents and to advise and co-operate with Admiral Dewey. There is some reason to believe that the present situation may be protracted longer than would be naturally expected and that there will be no open hostilities immediately if at all. The question is what is to be done at Iloilo. Originally it was intended to release the Spanish force there besieged, but by their evacuation of that place they have removed that incentive, and were it not for the false encouragement it would give the insurgents there is little doubt the United States troops would not be moved against Iloilo. Meanwhile the navy is expected to draw a cordon around the island of Panay, and also Luzon, should it be deemed necessary to do so to prevent the further supply of arms and munitions of war to the insurgents. Reports of disturbances now here or en route will be reinforced by the Machias, Annapolis and Vicksburg.

FILIPINOS AFTER WILDMAN.

American Consul at Hong Kong Sued for Recovery of Money.

HONG KONG, Jan. 17.—The Filipino committee here has broken off all relations with United States Consul Wildman. The committee issued a writ in the supreme court to recover the sum of $47,000 which the Filipinos claim to have deposited with Mr. Wildman, as treasurer of the Filipino independence fund, in June last. The members of the committee further allege that sensational disclosures will be made showing, they add, that the American government recognized the Filipinos as belligerents, affording them assistance in arms and moral influence to co-operate against Spain, "thus endorsing the agreement made with Aguinaldo at Singapore in April."

Yorktown Sails for Manila.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 11.—The gunboat Yorktown has sailed for Manila via Honolulu. She will go all the way under a full head of steam and should make the run in three weeks if she is not delayed at Honolulu. She is bearer of full instructions to Admiral Dewey and General Otis in regard to the situation in the Philippines.

RECEPTION OF IGLESIAS.

Cordial Greeting in London a Cause For Comment.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The ceremony with which Senor Rafael Iglesias, the president of Costa Rica, has been received here, is causing much speculation.

One paper says: "It is certainly unusual that our eminently haughty foreign office should extend a welcome to such minor potentate. The explanation is that Costa Rica has something to say in the Nicaraguan canal, and the president's official welcome goes to show that the Marquis of Salisbury does not mean to give the United States all its own way."

LEGISLATIVE OFFICERS.

Wisconsin Republicans in Caucus Select Candidates.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 11.—The Republican legislative assembly caucus has chosen George H. Ray, La Crosse, speaker; W. A. Nowell, Milwaukee, chief clerk, and James H. Agen, West Superior, sergeant-at-arms. In the senatorial caucus L. W. Theyer of Ripon was chosen president pro tem., Welter L. Bowser, Mondovi, chief clerk, and C. A. Pettibone, Oconomowoc, sergeant-at-arms.

POPE IS CHAGRINED.

Archbishop Ireland Must Explain His Conduct During the War.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Rome correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says:

Archbishop Ireland is coming to Rome to explain his conduct during the Hispano-American war. The influence he was supposed to possess with President McKinley will be utilized to take certain steps which proved abortive, to the great chagrin of the pope.

President Will Speak.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—Chicago members of the National Association of Manufacturers have received news that President McKinley will visit the annual convention of that body to be held in Cincinnati, Jan. 24, 25 and 26, and will deliver an address to the members.

WILL KEEP UP THE FIGHT.

Republican Opposition to Senator Quay Organizes.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Jan. 5.—The Republican senators and members who signed the pledge not to take part in the senatorial caucus have organized to keep up the fight against Senator Quay until after the supreme court has disposed of the People's bank conspiracy case. The meeting was attended by nearly all the signers and two others who did not sign but kept away from the caucus.

Senator William H. Koontz of Somerset called the meeting to order and nominated Senator William Flynn of Allegheny for chairman and Senator Henry of Philadelphia and Representative Robert K. Young of Tioga for secretaries. Senator Flynn said there was no necessity for holding a senatorial caucus, and that so long as those who stayed away stood together there would be no election of a United States senator. What he wanted was more light on the charges pending against Senator Quay, to ascertain whether he is a proper person to be elected to the United States senate. Mr. Flynn also said that he interpreted the pledge binding the independents to keep out of the caucus to mean that they would not vote for Mr. Quay until the supreme court had disposed of the conspiracy case, and that if the senator was not in a better position after its action than he is now they cannot vote for his re-election.

QUAY'S PETITION DENIED.

His Case Remanded to the Court of Quarter Sessions For Trial.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 11.—The petition of United States Senator Quay, his son Richard S. Quay, and ex-State Treasurer Benjamin F. Haywood, for a writ of certiorari, removing the trial of the conspiracy cases against them from the local court to the supreme court, was dismissed by the supreme court. The case was remanded to the quarter sessions court of this city for trial, and the costs of the proceedings were placed on the petitioners.

AWFUL BLUNDER.

Mistake in Orders Causes a Serious Wreck on the Lehigh Valley Road.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—The Herald says that five of those injured in the Lehigh collision at Dunolen have since died, making the total dead 18.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—By a headend collision between two passenger trains on the Lehigh Valley railroad at West Dunolen, N. J., 13 persons were killed and over 35 wereinjured. The dead are: Martin Keenan, W. H. Hinkel, Jacob Heller, H. E. Weikel, Frank Fischer, William H. Leader, James Jarvis, all of Mount Carmel, Pa.; Frank Markel, William H. Markel, Theodora S. Kehn, Shamokin, Pa.; Abner S. Kiefer, Pottsville, Pa., and two women who are still to be identified.

West Dunolen is three miles from Bound Brook and about 30 miles from New York city. At the spot where the disaster occurred there is a sharp curve in the Lehigh Valley tracks, but the accident was due in the first place to some terrible mistake in orders and that of the second place to another accident that occurred at Bound Brook earlier in the day.

ON REGULAR ARMY BASIS.

Proposal Regarding Reorganization of the Iowa National Guard.

DES MOINES, Jan. 10.—The Iowa national guard will be reorganized on the basis of the regular army. Such is the wish of prominent officers in the state who are engaged at present in forming the new guard. The new regimants will have to pass the states medical examinations and every man will be armed and equipped, ready to be mustered without delay into the service of the national government in case war is declared. The adjutant general believes in the abolition of the stationary annual encampment, and the substitution of practice marches and tours of hardening the men and drilling them in rough routine camp life.

Brooke Expresses Astonishment.

HAVANA, Jan. 10.—General Brooke has telegraphed to Washington an expression of his astonishment that General Wood, military governor of the department of Santiago, should have permitted the recent demonstrations at Santiago against the proposed order for concentrating cnstoms at Havana to take the place of those of the government of the island.

Massachusetts Bank Robbed.

ASHBURNHAM, Mass., Jan. 10.—The safe of the First National bank of Ashburnham was blown to pieces by dynamite about 4 a. m. The interior of the bank was badly wrecked and all windows were blown in. A sum of money estimated at from $1,500 to $2,000 is missing. There is no clue to the robbers.

Bill for Naval Bonus.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Senator Gallinger offered an emendment to the naval appropriation bill, appropriating $5,000,000 to pay officers and men of the navy and marine corps the bounty or other compensation now given soldiers by section 4635 of the Revised Statutes for the capture or destruction of ships or vessels of war during the war with Spain.

Fans Riot Trials Begin.

PANA, Ills., Jan. 10.—Seventy miners and citizens charged with riot were arraigned in court here. State's Attorney Humphreys nolled 59 of the cases, while 11 pleaded guilty and were given sentences. The trial of nine operators Orville and Maxwell Penwell for inciting riot will come on in the morning. Over 50 witnesses have been summoned.

Respect the Europeans.

MADRID, Jan. 9.—Advices received here from a leading merchant at Iloilo to the effect that agricultural operations in the vicinity of Iloilo have not been interrupted and that all the insurgents respect the Europeans both at Iloilo and on the island of Negros.

A report has been made to Governor Lind of the management of the Minnesota exhibit at Omaha by the commissioners. There was raised from the counties $20,000 of the $50,000 proposed and $5,000 was unspent. The legislature will be asked to reimburse the contributors for the $25,000 spent. Secretary Danforth shows that the exhibit attracted a great deal of attention and were notably successful, especially the butter exhibits that won all the prizes in sight in four out of the five contests. The live stock, agricultural, honey, flax, mineral and wool exhibits also took high rank. There were more than 12 gold medals taken by Minnesota exhibits, and twice as many silver.

MINNEAPOLIS MILLS OUT.

Not Included in the Combine Organized at Duluth.

DULUTH, Jan. 11.—Little has been heard of Thomas McIntyre, the great organizer of New York, during the past fortnight, but he has not been asleep. He now has a deal on strongly which, in all probability, he will acquire for himself and associates every flour mill at the head of the lakes, except that Minneota and the Grand Republic mills. The deal includes not only the Allis mills in Superior, but the Freeman mill, as well, the Allis mills at Milwaukee and the New York city mills. The mills at Minneapolis are not included in the present plans, nor is it likely that they will be.

An Iowa Bank Burglary.

IRWOOD, Ia., Jan. 11.—The Farmers' Bank was burglarized during the night. The safe was blown open and $1,500 taken and some papers damaged. The robbers escaped on a handcar. Andersen Bros.' hardware store was also entered and several guns and ammunition taken.

SHARKEY WINNER.

Easily Defeats Kid McCoy in a Bout of Ten Rounds at New City.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Tom Sharkey, the American sailor, is now the only heavyweight possibility for championship honors and the title held by Bob Fitzsimmons. He whipped Kid McCoy good and hard in the 10th round of what was to have been a 20-round battle, and by doing so the Irish-American has earned the right to meet Corbett immediately to the front that Fitzsimmons must consider the sailor pugilist's claim without delay.

Sharkey was a revelation to those who saw him a couple of years ago. His ring work and generalship are also vastly superior to his exhibitions when he first came to the East as a fighter, that the improvement is almost incredible.

Fight Witnessed by Thousands.

The terms of the Lenox Athletic club was crowded to the doors when McCoy and Sharkey entered the ring at 10:26, accompanied by their seconds. Tim Hurst was referee. As soon as the fighting began it was evident that McCoy intended to try and tire his heavy opponent and his marvelous foot work was a revelation to the spectators. He used every artifice known to the advanced school of pugilism and his defense was so scientific as to keep a host of close sandy on his part of every trick in the boxing game. For the first few rounds McCoy seemed to have the advantage, as he managed to keep out of Sharkey's reach and at the same time get in several telling blows. In the third the Kid sent his right to the sailor's face, felling him to the floor. Sharkey jumped up at once and the dose was repeated. Many then thought he had the sailor at his mercy, but this idea was dispelled as soon as the latter began to get at his men.

Sharkey Has His Turn.

At the opening of the sixth round McCoy showed weariness and Sharkey was not slow to discover it. From this time he forced the fighting, getting in many telling blows on his opponent, especially in the wind. In the fourth round Sharkey forced McCoy to one side of the ring and landed such a terrific right hand swing on the neck floored the Kid. He lay there helplessly while the referee counted ten, but when he arose he struggled to his feet and Sharkey, not knowing that the limit had expired, rushed at him once more, but time saving his left on the neck just below the jaw, McCoy falling again. The referee did not trouble himself in counting seconds, but waved his right hand to Sharkey to retire to his corner, saying at the same time, "I counted McCoy out on the other fall; you've won." McCoy struggled to his feet and staggered to his corner, where his seconds placed him on his feet.

McCoy weighed 138 pounds and Sharkey 172.

Fitz Ready to Meet Sharkey.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 11.—Bob Fitzsimmons declares that he will fight Sharkey within any time after three weeks provided the latter will put up a side bet of $10,000. The champion admitted that Sharkey was a better man than he had counted him. Tom Francis says that said he would have little trouble in putting him out.

On a Large Scale.

"I have heard some very romantic stories about your successes," said the young man who was looking out of the corners of her eyes and adjusted her mouth so as to make dimples.

"Yes," replied the successful cigar Sorghum with a complacent smile.

"It has been intimated to me that you have made money out of politics. But, of course, one doesn't have to be in every fight to make liars."

"Well, these silver people did so hadly when they tried to divide politics out of money I thought it was a crime to blame for tanning the experiments the other way around."

And the man another person told me that you got your very first start in life as a carbineer, fairly."

"That's the liars."

"I thought so."

"A confounded false. The way I got my first start was this. I had a farm left me, which wasn't good for anything else, so I got it surveyed and had maps printed and opened up an office and sold the whole thing off in lots. She Kept Her Appointment.

A woa a young man in a cavalry regiment who fell in love with Ba, the daughter of an opulent merchant. He grew tired of her, and when his regiment was ordered to the east he left her without explanations.

Returning home with more dust than credit he called on his fair one and gave a to a bell, when B. was the daintiest among the beauties. They danced, and she showed an interest in his affairs and part of unfaithfulness. Pressed by A., she gave him an appointment as a certain obanah near her father's house, which had been their trysting place in other days.

A went happily to his club, and bit old friend, Major C., offered him a cigar.

"I met Lucy B. this evening," said A., and he told his friend of the appointment and his forgiveness.

The major expressed no surprise, but said Lucy was a good and forgiving girl—for he knew what had gone before.

A went to the church on the day named, and there was a wedding. When the ceremony was over, B., the bride, came out of the church on the arm of Major C., the bridegroom.

A went home to his lodgings.—Pearson's Weekly.

HAZING A SENIOR.

During my senior year at college the freshmen and sophomores were constantly trying to get the better of each other as is their prerogative. We seniors of course maintained a dignified neutrality. We were surprised to hear, however, that one of our class, Osborne, had sided with the freshmen.

A council was immediately called of which our half dozen choice spirits, presided over by Teddy Langdh, the strategics of the council. It so happened that Barlow, who was one of the members of the self constituted vigilance committee, was rooming with Osborne at that time. The first difficulty we encountered was in deciding on the nature of the punishment.

"I'll tell you what we'll do," suggested Teddy, "We don't want to give him any more than a good scare, so we'll just duck him at the college pump, and then let him out for the rest of the night. It'll do him as much good as though we had killed him and it won't be so risky for us."

"But hold on a minute," interposed Barlow. "He keeps a big revolver in his bureau drawer, and if he should happen to hear us coming up the stairs he might make things unpleasant. He'd be just fool enough to shoot, and none of us is good enough to die yet."

"We can fix that all right," responded Teddy. "We'll send you down ahead. You can pretend to be in the human sacrificing and in the meanwhile get hold of the gun. Then you can easily make some excuse for going out again, and we'll be waiting for you at the corner."

This plan met with approval, and the next night, being moonless, was selected. Each member of the crowd bent round on the one above the house waiting the return of Barlow, who had gone in search of the revolver.

In the meantime, the latter, as we discovered later, was encountering some unexpected obstacles. When he entered the room he found that Osborne was not asleep, but was pretending to be. Osborne, however, was not long in becoming aware of the fact that Barlow was not asleep, but was pretending to be. Osborne, however, was not long in becoming aware of the fact that Barlow was not asleep, but was pretending to be. Osborne, however, was not long in becoming aware of the fact that Barlow was not asleep, but was pretending to be.

Suddenly he heard a sound from the bed, turning round, he found that the self gazing straight into the muzzle of a big 44 caliber revolver. He had found the object of his search, but in the grasp of Osborne, now very much awake.

"You'd better come to bed," the latter remarked in a quiet voice, and Barlow, for once subdued and silent, obeyed without a murmur, but even stopping to remove his shoes or hat.

While all this was going on we were cooling our heels on the corner and wondering at the delay. Finally Smith broke out:

"What's the use waiting here! Barlow's got the revolver and won't come out now at all. Let's go ahead and do it without him."

The front door was unlocked, but the stairs were as dark as plish, and in our efforts to get up quietly we made about as much noise as a squadron of cavalry. Up stairs we found Osborne and Barlow in a state of much groping found our way into our victim's study. Here he huddled with one or two crowded together and Osborne at bay.

Somehow we didn't like the looks of things a little bit.

The room was as dark and quiet as the hall and there was something supernatural and inexplicable about Barlow's quiescent appearance. We whispered to each other and he didn't seem to stir. Then Teddy, who was the bravest and coolest of us all, stepped forward and felt for Barlow's head. It was there, but it was not where it had started out to do didn't seem so very much and heroic now that we were fairly into it, and seemed to couldn't help wishing that the odds weren't so fearfully against poor Osborne.

The silence was broken by that odious Smith exclaiming in a hoot whisper:

"Pshaw! What are you fellows waiting for?" and he stepped forward and boldly opened the door into the bedroom.

As he did so a shot rang out from the darkness of the room, and Smith gave a cry of mortal agony, threw up his arms, spun half round, turned and fell face-forward on the floor. The two men nearest the door half ran and half fell down the stairs in search for dear life, one of them never stopping till he had put a mile and a half between him and the scene of action.

Laughli and I were too much horrified to move, and stood stock still for a moment that seemed an age. Then Teddy, in an unnatural whisper, suggested that we get a light. After a good deal of blundering around in the dark the gas was lit, and there lay Smith, unconscious on his face in the doorway between the two rooms, still as death itself. In the next room the same gruesome darkness and silence prevailed.

We knelt by Smith's side, and with trembling fingers began to search for the wound. A number were no visible signs of injury, but we were too badly frightened to notice this, and our examination was indescribable when the man who by all rights and reason ought to have been killed as a stone sat up and laughed in our faces.

From the bedroom now came signs of life, and Barlow and Osborne appeared on the scene, the latter still clutching the revolver that had caused such consternation.

"You're a pretty pair, you are!" he remarked scornfully. "If I were as smooth as you fellows, I'd leave college and set myself up for a strategy board."

"That's right. Rub it in," Teddy meekly replied. "I know we were in the wrong, but all the same I'd like to know how it happened."

"Easiest thing in the world," said Osborne. "Smith here was sore on you because his advice for me to avoid fooling me wasn't received in the proper spirit, and he came around this afternoon and gave the whole scheme dead away. Then when you fellows were waiting for Barlow to go Barlow a pumah in the ribs with his revolver, 'cause he tonight I reduced him to retire early, and there you are. Now you fellows had followed his example and gone to bed early, there wouldn't have been any trouble."

The joke was clearly on us, and we could do nothing but grin and bear it.—Albert Brill in Boston Globe.

CHAPTER II.

When the little two company post of Fort Fred Winthrop was broken up, Major Barry of the —th cavalry was left without a command, and so was sent to the headquarters of the regiment at Russell. The junior major, Stannard, was already there, but eight troops had been crowded within the rickety fenced inclosure, and that gave each major four troops—what was then called a battalion. Stannard were a little after his explosive fashion. He had been second in command ever since their service on the Sioux campaign of 1876, and he hated to see an officer come in between him and the top. Not that he disliked Barry. They were on very good terms, though not exactly intimate. But Barry was getting uncomfortable a general shaking up as to quarters, for he had to turn out a senior captain in order to get the house to which his rank entitled him, and there were several more unbidwinter mornings as a consequence. "I'm sorry," he said, "heartily sorry, but you all know Mrs. Barry is an invalid, and I have to find comfortable quarters for her."

Mrs. Barry was indeed an invalid. She lay for hours every day on a couch especially prepared for her, nicely even drove in the open air and was in bed every night by 9 o'clock. Her mania entertainments consisted in being read to, and this duty was divided between her devoted husband and her companion, Miss Nathalie Baird. Mrs. Barry was essentially a gentlewoman, courteous and considerate by nature, and refined with that almost ultra refinement that is the product of long protracted physical suffering. The few relatives left to Miss Baird considered her a very fortunate girl when she was offered the position of companion to Mrs. Barry, even though the salary was not large, and indeed her lot, for an orphan girl practically homeless, was anything but a hard one.

She had been teaching in the village school and leading a life of almost thankless drudgery. Her health was suffering. She had not even nourishing food, boarding around, first in one family, then in another, in the narrow New England circle, and she hailed with delight the change that took her to the broad, free frontier, to a little army home where there were sympathy, kindness and comfort. Her duties were light. She read aloud from books of Mrs. Barry's selection each morning from 10 to 1, but was given most of the afternoon for exercise and recreation. From 2 to 4 the major himself sat by the side of the gentle invalid, and in the evening, as a rule, both were with her. Mrs. Barry's tastes were scholarly, and the morning readings were a liberal education to the village girl whose previous life had been so cramped and restricted. She proved most faithful and indeed most grateful. She grew and thrived and blossomed in the society of her protectors and friends. She grew to love Mrs. Barry as she had loved none of her own kith and kin since the death of her mother, five years gone by. Her father she could remember only vaguely. She was barely 4 years old when his coffined remains, draped in the flag he had died to defend, were brought back from Virginia and laid away in the little churchyard. She was a gentle, pure hearted maid, only 19 this stormy spring of '78. She had been somewhat angular and bony and hollowed eyed and sallow cheeked when first she came to the Barrys, but healthful food and exercise and the bracing mountain air and sound sleep and sweet companionship and freedom from care and worry one and all had done their work, and Mrs. Barry woke up one fine day to the realization that they had a genuine New England beauty under their roof—a winsome girl, whose features and coloring were as dainty and fair as those of the Puritan maid Priscilla. The thin neck and long shoulders and arms had given place to firm, rounded, dimpled members, beneath a skin so white as to be almost dazzling. The hollow eyes were gone, for a tender light burned in their blue depths, a delicate flush played over the well rounded cheeks, and a smile of sweet content hovered about the corners of her rosy mouth, that, a year gone by, marved, pale and piteous.

"How that girl has improved since you brought her out, dear!" said the major one wintry afternoon as he made ready for her brisk walk over the prairie.

"Then you've noticed it," answered the invalid, patting his big, brown hand. "It has been very sweet to me to watch it. She's a good, true hearted girl, Arthur."

"Oh, I'm not the only one to notice it, Mary! Several people have spoken of it to me, and as for young Maynard, I'm afraid it's getting serious."

"My responsibility is a very grave one where she is concerned," said Mrs. Barry after a thoughtful pause. "Of course I could not but know that Mr. Maynard was greatly attracted, she he wouldn't have managed to walk with her or to call here so often. Do you know anything of his people?"

"Nothing whatever, and little of him except that he acts like a gentleman on all occasions, attends to his duties, does not drink or gamble and lives within his means. Stannard and Truscott say he's one of the best of the young fellows, and Blake says he stood the initiatory six months at Mrs. Turner's apron strings without a sign of 'angelag his wings.'"

"Well, that thraldom is at an end certainly," said Mrs. Barry. "He came here and asked her to go to the next hop with him and begged me to intercede. I did. I told her I'd like to have her go if only to look on, but she would not do it. She says she never danced in her life. Mrs. Stannard came in awhile ago, and she talked with her—offered to be her chaperon and was as kind and sweet as possible, but Nathalie shook her head and compressed her lips, and I'm afraid was restless. But others admire her besides Mr. Maynard. Hunter and Dana visit as frequently, and Dana has invited her to drive, but she declined. Why, do you suppose?"

"Love spellbound bringing up pecuniary. Dana isn't half a bad fellow and rumors of good stock. Hunter doesn't amount to much. He's feather brained. Well, let's get at our book."

And meantime the object of this household chat was picking her way among the drifts and walking blithely and briskly over the barren prairie wall to the north of the post, singing solemn little songs to herself—sober, old fashioned hymn tunes as a rule, yet catching herself now and then humming some one of the stirring quickstep or waltzes she had heard at the band concerts, whereat she would suddenly break off and return to "Beatrice Strasse" or "Coronation." "Gerusalem the Golden," it seems, had been deemed too jubilant, consequently too cur-

sal, by the elders of her village church—elders, several of whom came, as did her paternal ancestors, from the old Scotch covenanting stock. She dearly loved music and had a quick and accurate ear was manifest the moment she opened her pretty mouth and gave voice to her favorites. So, too, was it apparent that all her childhood and young womanhood had been spent under the strict tutelage of the descendants of a Puritan ancestry to whom a smile upon the Sabbath day were akin to sacrilege. One of Mrs. Barry's amusing stories, told when Nathalie was out for her daily exercise, was of the girl's timidity and distress when, the very first Sunday after their arrival at Russell, the band played its jolliest "double time" for its detail's marching out to guard mounting. "She ran to her room and stopped her ears," said Mrs. Barry, laughing at the reminiscence, "said could not be induced to come to the window and watch the ceremony, nor would she come out of her room until I assured her the band had gone and then she looked as though she have been named Prudence or Rachel or Patience or Charity. How on earth could such a little Puritan have come by the name of Nathalie. One would imagine Sunday to be a day of penance with her. I'm sure she is shocked to see on Sunday, but she puts it away until Monday morning. I never knew her name to use on Sunday. She goes to services morning and evening, reads her Bible and some very edifying old church library volumes between times and is so solemn, not to say lugubrious, that I am heartily sorry when Saturday night comes and correspondingly rejoiced when the sun goes down on Sunday. Then she can smile again. Think what her childhood must have been."

Solemn and sedate as she had been taught to be on Sunday there was no question as to her elasticity and health and spirits the rest of the week. She skimmed away over the prairie fast and free, glorying in the upland breeze, the crisp and exhilarating atmosphere, the radiant sunshine and her own exuberant strength and vitality. "How that girl can dance if she only would dance!" said Mr. Tommy Hollis, whose highest ideas of garrison life was a german every week and a hop every night.

Up at Winthrop all the officers were married, and, this being her first experience with them, Nathalie was very shy and constrained. She thought both men and women frivolous in the extreme, utterly lacking in that serious, meditative quality which at her home was accepted as evidence of uroligious nature and a reasonable hope of ultimate salvation. Elder Pease, she was sure, would have comprehensively stamped them all, except perhaps Mrs. Barry and possibly the major, as unreal. But she was physically in a sort of state of transition then, being still angular and sallow for the first few weeks and only slowly evolving into the lilylike beauty that manifested itself at Russell. She had had no one to interrupt her prairie tramps at Winthrop.

Fun here at Russell in the new world burst upon her astonished vision. Here she found herself followed, sought, waylaid by three or four very presentable and pleasant young men in most becoming uniforms—"regimentals," she called them, as she had learned to for her New England home—and all the Puritanism in the world was not proof against the woman intent in her. Do what she could to shame it, beat it down, abjure it as "carnal and worldly," this homage was sweet to her fresh girlish heart. It made her deliciously happy in spite of herself. She tried to overcome it by dressing in still more somber shades and styles at first, but her kind friend and protector protested. Mrs. Barry told her emphatically that no girl should be allowed to make herself hideous when nature manifestly intended her to look radiantly pretty. The Quakerlike hood and cloak were consequently discarded, not without prickings of conscience on Nathalie's part, and yet, with easier resignation than she had deemed possible, she allowed herself to be attired in the hat and jacket and gloves Mrs. Barry had ordered from Chicago, and then as Easter drew near, she was simply as stunning as anything he had ever seen at West Point.

Then, too, she had at first been grievously embarrassed by the attentions of the bachelor officers. No gentleman had ever asked her to walk or drive or ride, much less to dance, before, although it had often seemed that Elder Pease or Deacon Drummond would happen along about the time she dismissed her scholars and started on her long, lonely walk in the wintry gloaming, and whichever one it was he would accompany her much of the way and talk in most edifying fashion of the world, the flesh and the devil. Twice it came to pass that these two pillars of the church appeared upon the scene as they had not come—together. They seemed to have concentrated on the little stone schoolhouse from widely different directions, each seemingly unconscious of the other's movements. These two worthy men, it is remembered, were most vehemently opposed to Nathalie's acceptance of the Barrys' offer. She ought never to be allowed to live among the godless men and women who dwelt in army barracks. They were children of wrath whose presence was contaminating. But there was a hard headed old uncle, a scoffer, said Elder Pease, who loved Nathalie and for herself and her dead mother's sake—an uncle who had a painfully big and dependent brood of his own, who in the ends her go by all means, though he nearly broke down at parting. Yet when she was gone he turned upon elder and deacon both with triumph in his eyes.

At first, too, Nathalie shrank from accepting these invitations to walk, and so for going driving Mrs. Barry had almost to order her. She was painfully shy and embarrassed for a few days, and then that began to wear off and keen enjoyment replaced the shyness. Even when she started out alone she specially became aware of Maynard scouring the prairie on his spirited horse, leaping the broad acequia again and again and finally riding up in surprise to see her and dismounting to walk by her side, while Ranger, with mincing gait, came towing along behind.

But for this keen, raw, darksome afternoon the engagement had been made beforehand. "The boys" were feeling each other very much in the way. To get a walk or chat with Miss Baird now was to see her several days ahead and make an appointment. There had been no very cold weather since the Barrow came, and she rarely missed her weekday exercise of a three mile tramp each afternoon, and the man who walked with her need not hope to walk much less to "spoon." Miss Baird was "out for business" as Dana said, and it was quick march, 120 to the minute, and a good, swinging stride from start to finish.

Then Mrs. Barry was becoming interested in Maynard's devotions. When she first arrived in the post and spoke of him and heard him referred to as "Mrs. Turner's latest," she was not disposed to like him. She had heard of Mrs. Turner, but never before had been stationed at the same post with her. She forgot at first that every young officer on reporting for duty at regimental headquarters was immediately "annexed" by this fair, volatile and wealthy if youthful matron. She forgot until lamingly reminded by Mrs. Stannard that Hunter, Dana, Hollis—almost all the boys in fact—had served; their apprenticeship. Then the regimental jester, said that plebehood in the regiment had its infallibly visible signs just as it had at West Point. In his case the most prominent symptom was dancing attendance on Mrs. Turner. But Maynard had barely been well settled down into the traces—had served much less than half the allotted twelvemonths—when the Barrys came to Winthrop, and with them this blue eyed, fair haired, peachy cheeked little Puritan maid, and Mrs. Turner's sway became instantaneous. She still assumed airs of proprietorship —Maynard still had to call for and escort her to the weekly hops, and only the night before, seeing him making for the pretty, but undeserved sorrow. "Let us go and sit down somewhere. I don't think I care to dance this set."

And Maynard strode away across the dark parade toward the distant lights of officers' row, feeling as though he must have inflicted something in the heartiness on a winsome and appealing woman, yet vaguely conscious that he ought not to be held to the species of servitude or subjected to the surveillance which seemed to be his lot since falling within the sphere of Mrs. Turner's attractions. His own quarters were well down toward the east end of the row. Major Barry's were just as far toward the west, but no sooner was he beyond the range of the lamplight glints than the young officer veered toward the west end and presently brought up at the picket fence that fronted the entire line. The Barrys' parlor lights were extinguished, but a faint glimmer came through the shades of the front dormer window of the second floor and that was her room, Mrs. Barry's was on the ground floor. The night, as has been said, was dark and overcast. The Cheyenne zephyr, a stiff gale that blew three days out of four down from the mountain pass to the northwest and across the open prairie, had died away at nightfall, and all was as still as the night was dark. Over across the parade the string band of the —th was playing rollicking open lawn music for the lancers which Mrs. Turner had to be fatigued or hurt to dance. They were whirling through the final figure now, and, even though the doors and windows were closed against the keen wintry air, so still and breathless was nature that the soft hum of voices or occasional burst of silvery laughter was borne by the music upon the wings of night. Leaning there upon the fence, young Maynard had turned his back to the sounds of merriment and was gazing fixedly at that upper window. For nearly an hour he had realized that within that little room, behind that screening shade, there dwelt the one fair girl who held in her fate, for weal or woe, in the hollow of her soft white hand.

Then the music suddenly ceased. The lancers were over. The musicians could have a five minutes' breathing spell before they struck up the waltz, and then, as if she had only been waiting for the stopping of that profane and frivolous dance tune, the fair casement, or at least her faint shadow, appeared at the window. Maynard started with joy. He would feel the intense beaming of her heart. Quickly the shade was raised. Up went the window, and the outlines of the pretty head and the slender, girlish form that were the object of his idolatry appeared at the casement. Resting her elbows on the sill, her cheeks upon her hands, Nathalie leaned out into the night, drinking in the mountain air. It was just 10 o'clock, and the trumpeter from the adjutant's office had formed on the dark parade and was sounding, as was the custom at that time, "lights out" at that comparatively late hour. Every officer and man raised Maynard was sure he heard the sound of footsteps across the road, the crunching of hard heels in the snow and frozen ground, and dark it was as Erebus, but No! He's coming across—coming steadily, too, for the footfalls though audible, told the practiced ear his stepping as well as he could in heavy, high soled boots. What could that mean?

From his post at the fence opposite the open space and to the left of the house Maynard listened, breathless. The footfalls ceased, but still no form could be seen. Then a strange thing happened. He could have sworn he heard in hoarse whisper her name, "Nathalie." Straining his ears, he heard it, beyond possibility of doubt, again. But she remained immovable, except that now her face was turned upward as though she were communing with the spirits of those she loved who had been taken from earth. Marveling, wondering, stricken with a jealous dread, Maynard felt that he was growing suddenly cold, that his knees were trembling, or was it a her partner with an air of patient, pa-

"I think you are very mean to want to leave me the moment you've had your chance. You haven't been as kind as you were before Miss Baird came. Come, Mr. Crane," she said, turning to her partner with an air of patient, pa-

VOL. XXII. CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY JANUARY 19, 1899 NO 41

TEMPLES OF LEARNING

More than 200 in Polk County—Much Interest Taken by Patrons.

MOST INTELLIGENT TEACHERS.

Four High Schools—Normal School and University Quite Near.

"You have the most intelligent class of teachers in Polk county that I have met anywhere." Thus spoke the professor of history of the Moorhead Normal school, Henry Johnson, who for several years has taught in the summer school held in Crookston, and who last year was the conductor of this school. In the course of a conversation that the JOURNAL had with County Superintendent Kanss he remarked that he felt sure that there was more interest being taken in the common and graded schools throughout the county by the school boards and by the patrons of the schools in general than there was in any other section of the state. The JOURNAL readers will remember from the report of the county schools published in this paper that during the year 1898 there were almost ten thousand pupils that attended school. Here then are the three elements which are essential in educational work in any community is to be carried on satisfactorily: high grade teachers, liberal patronage from the public and large attendance of pupils.

In these days of enlightenment and advancement one of the first questions that a man asks himself when he is considering the advisability of building for himself and family a home in a certain community is: "What are the educational advantages and facilities of this place?" He recognizes that both his boys and girls will be handicapped for life if they do not receive a common school education, not to speak of a high school course, or still higher up the ladder, a college training.

Now in the matter of educational facilities at present the outlook in this field—Polk county—is not unfavored. There are now two hundred young men and young women engaged in the work of common schools. Of these half have been students in Normal schools and high schools and many of them are graduates from these institutions. Those who have not had these privileges are by no means incompetent, for before being granted a permit to teach they must pass a rigid examination and the fact that more than one hundred were last year refused certificates that would entitle them to teach, is evidence that only those qualified to assist in the development of the young are being given that noble privilege.

The citizens of the county, too, both themselves and through their representatives on the school boards are aiding in the work of keeping up the standing of the teaching force. Higher wages on an average are being paid here than elsewhere, but the patrons of the schools are demanding in return competent teachers. It is an encouraging sign when those who have spent time and money in training themselves can afford to teach in country schools.

It follows naturally from the large number of teachers that are employed in the county that there must be at least an equal number of school buildings, or rather many school buildings, must have been erected ere the educators were needed. This section of the state is indeed dotted with little school houses, or perhaps it would be better to say starred with them, for each of these small institutions is a center of light for the community around it. From one to eight schools are in each township, the number of course depending upon the population. Where the farms are small the school houses are thickest. While these schools are not equipped with all the conveniences of a university, still any reasonable demand in the way of supplies made upon the school authorities is usually granted. In the new buildings that are going up from time to time more attention is being paid than formerly to the matter of lighting and ventilation. As an evidence of the rapidity with which the school house follows the settler, within five months after the reservation land in Polk county was opened for settlement in May 1896, school buildings were being erected on the territory and school was being kept—the wielder of the birch rod rides on the cowcatcher of the engine so, to speak.

But besides the common schools there are also eleven graded schools, four of these having high schools. These graded schools have all the way from two to twenty teachers. Crookston and Fosston built additions last year and this summer Fertile, South Crookston and Elda expect to increase their school capacity. Pupils who have completed the course in the rural schools are thus given a chance to attend the graded schools, as these latter are scattered in different parts of the county. There are now in the Crookston high school students from all over the county. This high school stands in the first-class, has a course that is in accordance with the latest recommendations of the state high school board and a faculty with a membership of five—three assistants, the principal, and superintendent, John Moore, who supervises the work.

In addition to the above-mentioned graded schools there is now a movement on foot for two or three or more common school districts that are quite close together to combine and form a graded school. This is an advanced idea but one that is practical and is only another instance of the progressive spirit of the people and that the present county superintendent, S. L. Kanss, is the right man in the right place.

Though there is no doubt the State University of Minnesota located at Minneapolis, is the leading institution of the Northwest, still it is a fact that one can sometimes attend college if it is not far from home, whereas otherwise he would not be able to do so. For such Polk county is a desirable location. It is almost under the shadow of the state university of North Dakota, situated at Grand Forks, North Dakota. Soon will have also a city of sixty miles, at Moorhead, is one of the State Normal schools of Minnesota.

MACCABEES.

The Knights and Ladies Install Their Officers—Banquet Follows.

One of the most pleasant gatherings of the winter was at the I. O. O. F. hall last Monday night. The occasion was the installation of the officers of the Sir Knights and Lady Maccabees. After the formal part of the program was over then came the informal part. A most delicious lunch was served to the company who numbered about 150.

The floor was cleared and the dancers had a right merry time. The Maccabees are indeed a very hospitable lot of people. They know how to enjoy themselves and how to make others feel at home. District Deputy Mrs. N. J. Bemis installed these as the officers of the Lady Maccabees: Mrs. G. A. Chesterman, lady commander: Mrs. Clysdale, lieutenant commander: Mrs. E. P. Pierce, finance keeper: Mrs. Braley, record keeper: Mrs. J. E. Harris, chaplain: Mrs. Tillie Nelson, sergeant; Miss Bjorge, mistress-at-arms: Mrs. Thos. Young, sentinel; Dr. A. A. Just, test physician.

These are the Sir Knight Maccabees: E. L. Kinder, commander: E. P. McIntyre, lieutenant commander: G. S. Chesterman, record keeper; I. U. Kinder, finance keeper; P. L. Reaas, sergeant; E. S. Peterson, master-at-arms; Carl Jorgenson, inside sentinel; D. F. Peterson, outside sentinel: Dr. A. A. Just, test physician.

PRAISES PRESIDENT.

Senator Gray has Confidence in McKinley's Patriotism.

United States Senator Gray, one of the members of the Paris Peace Commission, in speaking at a complimentary dinner tendered him at Wilmington, Del., said among other things:

"Without assuming for a moment the right to speak for the president, I think I can assure you with full knowledge of what I speak, that President McKinley appreciates the difficulties and dangers of the situation, and that he is committed to no policy intended to discourage, much less strike down, the aspirations of liberty-loving people all over the world.

"I belong to a different political party, but I should be false to my sense of justice and to that pride which I feel as an American if I did not express my confidence in the patriotism and purity of purpose of Wm. McKinley. He is no usurper of power, no stranger to American institutions, but one of the American people called to his high office by their suffrages; and it would be strange indeed if he did not share to the fullest extent in the love of our constitution and the principles that underlie it. When less than this can be truthfully said of an American president it will be the beginning of the end of our great career as a nation."

Will Stone is spending a week at home. He is now located at Minneapolis in the employ of Aultman Taylor Threshing Machine Company.

CROWDED QUARTERS.

There is urgent need for a new court house in Polk county. As it is there is not room for court proceedings, for the grand jury at the present term of court had to do its work at the new city hall. There is not room enough for the county officials for many of them are scattered about the city in various offices. There is not room enough for the county officials who are at the court house as any one may see by going to that building. The grand jurors, representative men from all over the county, saw the bad condition of affairs, for they say that the "county officials occupying offices in the court house" are discharging their duties "as faithfully and satisfactorily as possible under the DISADVANTAGE of the CROWDED QUARTERS." Many of the county records kept at the court house would be destroyed in case of fire as the present building is far from fire proof. This last fact is itself is sufficient reason for a change.

Again, what kind of an impression does the present capitol of the county make upon strangers who may judge of the county, to a certain extent, from its court house? It certainly cannot make a favorable impression and the county at large, not simply Crookston, is interested in having others think well of us. For a rich and prosperous county, the building where its official business is done is assuredly no credit to it. Indeed the Thief River Towns admits this when it refers to the erection of "a CREDITABLE new court house building."

Inquiries have elicited the fact that there is now in the county treasury more than $130,000, so that the finances of the county are in such a condition as to enable it to build. And furthermore let it be understood that it is the country that needs the new building, and not the city of Crookston.

Fertile.

(Fertile Journal.)

Mr. and Mrs. Nick Hoss left last Thursday night for Philadelphia on a visit to relatives.

The enrollment in our schools is now 256. There is standing room only for those who come in now.

Over eleven thousand dollars, all in cash, changed hands here Tuesday by the sale of real estate. Pretty good business for one day and it was a poor day for business at that.

The young folks had a surprise party on Miss Minnie Hiltvorson at the residence of Mrs. A. L. Spurry Tuesday evening. A most enjoyable time is reported by those present.

We learn from a reliable source that the Northern Pacific railroad company have started a surveying party out of Staples to make a survey of the Staples-Fertile cut off.

County Commissioners McCarthy and Eastman are in town today looking over the bridges in this vicinity. The old Aldal bridge will probably be replaced by a new one.

The young folks to the number of about twenty had a surprise party on Miss Lydia Gulton at Mr. G. G. Thomson's Saturday night. A pleasant time is reported by all present.

Considerable land has been sold in the town of Lockhart this winter. A colony of about thirty Dunkards from the east have bought farms there and will emigrate to this country in the spring.

Erik Sortby, of Gordon, while out hunting rabits last Friday, had the little finger of his right hand shot off by the accidental discharge of his gun. Dr. A. Nelson dressed the wound and the patient is getting along nicely.

Lincoln's Birthday.

The members of the McKinley club of Crookston are arranging for their annual celebration of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. A banquet will be held at Hotel Crookston the evening of that day. J. Adam Bede and Senator J. J. Ryder will be guests of the evening and it is probable that Senator Young, chairman of the senate judiciary committee, will also be present.

Tax Tempest.

Quite a tempest has been created among village authorities at Bemidji by the discovery that County Auditor Hanner has refused to recognize the village incorporation in making up the tax rolls for 1898, and has included only the bare townsite and an "addition" of forty acres in the village assessment roll. The matter is important in view of the issue by the village authorities of $7,000 in bonds for water works purposes, and it will be impossible for the auditor to levy a tax for interest on the bonds until the expiration of two years.

FORENSIC BATTLE.

The District Court Continues to Settle Points in Dispute.

THE GRAND JURY ADJOURNS.

Judge Watts Sends Several Prisoners to Sojourn in Stillwater.

The jury in the case of State vs. Hiummelsbach returned, Thursday, a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment. He was sentenced to eighteen months at Stillwater.

Frank Cruikshanks, who was charged with assault in the second degree for having on Oct. 27, 1898, in the town of Angus, struck Wm. McLemon with a wagon spreader and broken his arm, through his attorney, Judge Montague, plead guilty, and was sentenced by the Court to two years in the state prison.

A jury was called in the case of State vs. Wm. Bunton. Bunton was charged with having taken $75 from one Henry Miller on July 7, last, while Miller slept in a box car near East Grand Forks. The jury returned a verdict of guilty and a sentence of eighteen months at Stillwater was imposed.

James Sullivan, convicted of grand larceny in the second degree, was given an opportunity to reside at Stillwater for eighteen months. He decided that the penalty was not strong enough to base conviction but the objection was overruled.

In the case of State vs. Hans Samuelson and State vs. Andrew Olson, both charged with selling intoxicating liquors to minors, the defendants plead guilty and each paid a fine of $25. The same two men were accused of keeping their saloons open on Sunday but both their cases were dismissed.

The case of Haselgen Bros. vs. E. G. Borgen, et al, appealed from the justice court, was tried before the jury. The father of the defendant gave his note to the plaintiffs for goods purchased, the defendant then twenty years old signed the note with the father. Thos. Kiefe of Fertile appeared for defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendants.

Friday morning the case of State vs. Conrad Arnaas was taken up. The defendant is accused of having had carnal knowledge of a female child under sixteen. The parties live in the town of Roome. The complaining witness is Miss Jensina Hilmas. The defendant is a law student at the state university; was with Sampson's bicycling party in Havana; and was in the engagement off Manzanillo, Cuba. He was discharged from service Oct. 28, 1898.

The case was given to the jury Saturday afternoon at 3:30. They disagreed and were discharged Sunday morning. The case has been found out that there were eight for conviction and four for acquittal. The county attorney wished to call a special venire and try the case over again and the question was deferred until Wednesday.

The case of State vs. Geo. Foster, indicted for grand larceny for taking $76.30 from Archie Chisholm on Oct. 13, come next. After the evidence was in the case was dismissed on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain a conviction.

Court convened at 9 a. m., Monday. Ten cases in which Judge Watts was interested as counsel before election, were continued until the first week of the next term. So far Judge Watts has been unable to secure a judge to try these cases this term, hence it was necessary to continue them.

The case of P. Lucobelle vs. P. Loveland was settled.

The case of Vassau Bros. vs. Campbell & Soderberg was next taken up. The action was brought by plaintiff to recover damages for breach of contract in purchasing cattle. The defendants entered into a contract to purchase cattle of a certain kind and for a certain price for plaintiffs. Plaintiffs claim the cattle were not up to standard and refused to accept them. Some money had been advanced on contract. Defendants sue to recover damages, profits on cattle had contract been fulfilled. The jury returned a verdict for defendant.

Dan Carey, who plead guilty of grand larceny in second degree, was sentenced to nine months at Stillwater.

The case of State of Minnesota vs. Chas. Lasher charged with robbery in the second degree, was taken up Tuesday. It is alleged that on the 16th of November last this defendant and one Nick Bural in East Grand Forks, knocked down one James Baker and took from his pockets about $66.

In the case of Shaw vs. Purvis the judge appointed John Crumb as referee to receive the evidence.

ENGINEERS AND SURVEYORS

Held a Meeting in St. Paul—Elect Ralph Chairman on Legislation.

Mr. George A. Ralph, city engineer, returned Tuesday morning from St. Paul where he has been in attendance at a meeting of the State Board of Engineers and Surveyors. Interesting and instructive papers were there read on good roads, bridges, best methods of drainage, etc. Mr. Ralph was appointed chairman of the committee on drainage and also chairman of the committee on legislation. The business of the committee will be to persuade the legislature to create a board of examiners for engineering and surveying, similar to the board of dentistry and the medical board. If such a board existed it would prevent ill-qualified engineers and surveyors from doing work in the state.

An effort will also be made to have the state legislature send a memorial to congress asking that the balance of government surveying in the state be finished as soon as possible and the office of surveyor general be discontinued.

All survey work on the Red Lake reservation. Mr. Ralph says, has been let and will be completed next spring.

THE BAND CONCERT.

A Large Audience Greets Professor Riggs and His Musicians.

Music lovers—and there were several hundred of them, for every seat in the opera house was taken—were given a treat last night. The program was varied—band, orchestra, violin, mandolin, guitar, and piano,—all of these contributed to the harmony of the evening. The Mandolin and guitar club—six instruments—made its first appearance and was well received. The band and orchestra, under Professor Riggs' able leadership are steadily improving, as was evidenced by their work last night. Prof. Riggs' cornet solo, with band accompaniment, was one of the most skillfully rendered pieces of the evening. Mrs. Riggs, as a pianist, fully satisfied the most critically inclined, and showed herself an artist. As an extra attraction at the next concert a chorus of fifty ladies' voices is promised. Mrs. Riggs will direct the chorus.

Burns' Celebration.

The Scotchmen of the Valley, almost to a man, will meet at Crookston the next Wednesday to celebrate in fitting style the anniversary of the birth of the great Scotch poet, Robbie Burns. The temporary organization in the city numbering about 25 will entertain their fellow Scots from out of town with a banquet at the Crookston hotel. At the gathering of the clans a permanent organization will be formed. The menu will doubtless contain among other palatable dishes a haggis, "great chieftain o' the puddin'-race," and "the healsome parritch, chief o' Scotia's food," and the caterers are now struggling with some of these old fashioned but wholesome dishes. It is expected that more than 125 will be in attendance.

These Will Set the Price.

W. D. Scott, C. C. Strauder and L. Ellington have been appointed by Judge Watts to set a value on certain property in Jerome's addition through which the mains in connection with the new intake pipe run. The property is owned by several persons together and two of these refused to sell except for an exorbitant price which the Waterworks, Power & Light company refused to pay. What the appointees of the court say will be final in the matter. They meet next Saturday to appraise the land.

Remember the Maine.

The attraction at the Grand Opera house on Saturday evening, Jan. 21, will be Lincoln J. Carter's latest naval drama, "Remember the Maine." This is a new play and has scored a tremendous success everywhere it has been presented. Consul-General Weyler, the Spanish monster, and several others who have become famous through the late war, are prominent characters, and the character drawing is true to life. One of the greatest scenes in the play is that of Dewey's glorious victory in Manila Bay, and the blowing up of the Maine is a masterpiece of stagecraft. This play is probably the best that Lincoln Carter has yet produced, and those who are familiar with his other successes eagerly await it. The seat sale opens tomorrow morning. Prices are 25, 35, 50 and 75 cents.

—Dr. Forbes, of Duluth, will preach at the Methodist church next Sunday morning.

STATE FAIR BOARD.

The New Board Met Tuesday and Organized—Randall Re-Elected.

A NEW DEPARTURE PROPOSED.

Superintendents of Divisions and Standing Committees Appointed.

The annual meeting of the Minnesota State Agricultural society was held at St. Paul last week, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. The program was very elaborate, and it was easily the most successful meeting ever held in the history of the organization, both from a point of general interest and attendance. The election of officers occurred on Thursday, with the following result.

President—John Cooper, St. Cloud.

First Vice President—Charles H. Smith, St. Paul.

Second Vice President—Geo. K. Partridge, Minneapolis.

Directors—N. S. Gordon, Crookston, and Dr. J. G. Cooper, Mankato.

The new board met at the Merchants Hotel on Tuesday, Jan. 17, and organized. E. W. Randall was elected secretary and F. J. Wilcox of Northfield, treasurer.

The plan of the old board recommending that the fair grounds be kept open both day and evening and that evening entertainment be provided was approved by the new board. Elaborate preparations will be provided and the evening entertainments promise to be an attractive feature of the State fair. It is safe to say that they will be in every way successful.

The following superintendents of divisions and standing committees were appointed by President Cooper:

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DIVISIONS.

A—Horses, J. C. Curryer.

B—Cattle, W. M. Liggett.

C and D—Sheep and swine. J. H. Letson.

—The towns along the St. Hilaire line have placed their case against Jim Hill, for discontinuing the mixed train three days in the week, before the railroad commission and that body has ordered the Great Northern to appear before them and explain their cause of the cutting off these towns from daily service.

—As the St. Vincent train south bound was pulling into the station at Stephen Saturday night a drunken man fell in front of the engine. The train was quickly stopped and as the pilot of the engine was very low and the man had on a large fur coat he did not get under the wheels, though one leg was pinched a little.

—Mr. and Mrs. John Cromb leave probably tomorrow night for the Pacific coast where they will spend the rest of the winter.

Weddings.

Miss Laura Michaud and August Munn were married last Sunday even ing at seven o'clock at the bride's residence. A wedding feast was served at the Grand Central hotel after the ceremony, the wedding party consisting of almost a hundred. Professor Juliet played on his harp while the happy company partook of the delicious viands prepared by Landlord and Mrs. Morin.

William Hamilton and Miss Annie Rattray were married at high noon on Monday the 16th inst., at the home of Mrs. Lerium in this city. Judge Holt pronounced the oft repeated words which made them man and wife. Mr. Hamilton has been in the employ of Vance & Stone for some time, and the bride is one of Polk county's efficient teachers. She is the daughter of Mr. Rattray a prominent farmer in the town of Hammond.

MR. DINGLEY'S FUNERAL.

Impressive Ceremonies in the House of Representatives Yesterday.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—A state funeral, almost majestic in its impressiveness, was given the late Nelson Dingley at noon today in the house of representatives, where for more than a generation he has so long been a commanding figure. Distinguished members of the diplomatic corps, members of the supreme court, members of the cabinet, members of the house and distinguished members of the senate and house, men in military and civil life, were assembled in the hall, while in the gallery, to which admission could be obtained only by cards issued by the families of the dead statesman, hundreds invited to be present.

The remains were brought to the capitol at 11 o'clock and were received by the committee of representatives appointed for the purpose, which took charge of the body and escorted it to the public, which was given opportunity to witness the ceremonies. The committee and view the features of the funeral services, which, simple, were conducted by Rev. Dr. Newman of the First Congregational church, assisted by Dr. Coyden, chaplain of the house. At the conclusion the house adjourned and later the senate took similar action. The body lay in state until 3:30 p.m. and at 4:10 was placed on a special train and started for Lewiston, Me., where interment will take place.

THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

Programme Outlining Proposals Agreed Upon Issued Yesterday.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times, who confirms Friday's statement of the correspondent of The Standard as to the issuance of a circular stating the powers engaged in the proposed conference on the armaments, says the purposes of discussion are given in detail. He cites for example the limitation of employment of forces, of the use of explosives, vessels and the practice of vessels. The programme, he says, a discussion of the use of recourse to arbitration possible.

NO VALID LAW.

Recent Kansas Legislature Declared to Be Illegal.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 18.—Attorney General A. G. Godard has rendered a decision holding that the work of the legislature called by Governor Lewelling was illegal and all the laws passed at that session were void. This decision is legal only when necessitated by an extraordinary state of affairs and was no extraordinary reason for Governor Lewelling calling the legislature together. Mandamus proceedings instituted and the legality of the special session tested.

STORIES OF MEN RIGHT IN IT.

Selection of Leader and Picked Troops—Inside History of the Expedition—How Shafter Warded Off Disaster—Trying Voyage on Transports—The Fighting Regiments.

I.

This is the first of a series of 15 articles comprising the history of the Santiago campaign by Captain George L. Kilmer, late United States volunteers. Captain Kilmer holds the highest rank in his specialty—deeds of heroism and daring—and is well fitted for the important work he is doing. He has had access to the very best sources of information, has interviewed every officer of importance from General Shafter down, and the men in the ranks have also told him their stories. His articles are the first actually authentic articles on the great historical struggle around Santiago.

WITH the single exception of Napoleon's Russian campaign, there has never been a military expedition fraught with personal distress and suffering equal to that endured by Shafter's army. The case is all the more striking from the fact that after a most brilliant victory the army was compelled to retreat in the face of an enemy more terrible than Spanish bullets. The physical wrecks of this army which had been spared by the Manzera Hills reached Camp Wikoff, Long Island, between the 15th of August and the end of that month, and I consider it the happiest episode of my career as a writer that I was commissioned to go to Montauk and, spare neither time nor money, to meet later in covering the camp from end to end in order to glean from the lips of participants of all ranks the true story of Shafter's campaign at Santiago.

The moment I stepped from the cars into the living and pan of war worn figures I seemed that I was a soldier again, touching elbows with heroes, shaking their thoughts and sharing with them the after excitement of events seldom finding parallel in the life of one man. From that time on until the last day I was practically abandoned I lived among the soldiers, sharing the tents and the fare of officers and men. Around their campfires on the chilly nights and under the welcome shade of canvas in the heat of the August days they told me of the battle, made sketches of the position and explained the movements of the various divisions and brigades and the vantage ground of batteries. There came together to take part in these informal officers who had not compared notes since the fight of July 1.

Whenever there was doubt or controversy upon any point, absent officers or soldiers who could testify in the matter were summoned. Moreover, soldiers of every rank finding the stress of work lifted at last were in the mood to recall stirring incidents which, when passed, had left no impress except as they hurt or startled. In point of fact, I found the army emerging from a horrible nightmare and for the first time feeling that it was all over and time to take an account of what had happened.

I was conscious from the first moment of my entrance to Camp Wikoff that I was in the midst of a superior body of soldiers. The type I could recognize as that existing in 1864-5, but the army has kept pace with the march of improvement, and the ideal soldier of 1865 is the finished and universal product of Shafter's regular regiments today. There was no posing in the camp, no standing hat in hand to be petted and applauded as hero, but a bristling, head earnest, soldierly activity, which, with cool and rational, was indeed one of long enough to sit down and discuss the details of the campaign. There was no difference apparent between the men interviewed was the leader of a battalion or a regiment or a commander of a brigade or division; no grasping for the credit of the corps, two of whom were in command during my stay in camp—but all to say, General Shafter and General Wheeler.

As this is to be a story of the fighting as the soldiers in line of battle remember it, it is not necessary to discuss many questions, but I could not well preface the stories of the marvelous deeds of Shafter's army than by saying a few words as to the leader who in the opinion of a host of the best soldiers in the service was in every way worthy of it. Whatever he may be or may not be, whatever he may have or lack, he has qualifications for a high command. William R. Shafter is no accident.

I was so fortunate as to pass a whole afternoon in General Shafter's headquarters' tent the second day after his took command of the camp at Wikoff, where I could witness his method of administering affairs calling for prompt and energetic action. The business of the administration being over, he devoted more than an hour to a general and offhand discussion of the difficulties of the Santiago campaign.

As to Shafter's army in the Santiago campaign, I could not help saying to myself again and again at Camp Wikoff that the equal of his corps as I saw it, barring the fewer wrecks lying on the ground and in the hospitals, could not have been paralleled by any single corps in the army of the Potomac in 1864. This notwithstanding the fact that at the beginning of the Wilderness campaign the Army of the Potomac was thoroughly reorganized and consolidated.

In the first place, this country has progressed more than a quarter of a century since that time. Military ideals have been fostered and followed up to their very highest point, and the very elements of choice American bone and blood and sinew and brain which went to the creation of the crack corps of 1864 have entered into the make up of those matchless regiments of regulars who stormed and carried the heights of El Caney and San Juan in the face of a fire like equal in courage, in equipment, in position, of any troops that ever stood for battle.

Shafter had the pick of the regular army with him at Santiago. This was stated to me again and again at Camp Wikoff, and I think no discrimination was intended against the regiments that were not there. The fact seems to be that those regiments which were selected happened to be, without a single exception, up to the very highest standard of efficiency. The soldiers had passed through just the experiences in the west which would fit them for a hard campaign. They were well officered, well disciplined, rugged, "gritty" men. In the Army of the Potomac in 1864 the very best of the army corps had regiments and sometimes whole brigades of raw and untried material and scores and scores of green officers. One needed but to see the regulars in Camp Wikoff to recognize at once the fact that the veterans there had not evolved in a single month's campaign from the standard of the militia volunteer.

In the twenty and odd regiments whose camps I lingered round and on a single occasion I was entertained by a veteran of the civil war. In many cases these commanders were majors. The field officers above them, absent on account of wounds or promotion were also veterans, and in several instances the commanders held the rank of captain who were war veterans. It follows that there are now something like 65 captains in the regular army who served in the civil war. The importance of all this will appear during the battle narrative, where the leaders will be named in connection with their war record.

General Shafter says that after Sampson located Cervera's fleet in the harbor of Santiago and had looked the ground over he cabled to Washington that an army of 10,000 men could take the city at one blow. Shafter was already getting together an expedition for the invasion of Cuba somewhere. He was directed to embark 10,000 men and proceed at once to Santiago. Owing to some difficulty in the way of procuring certain supplies or other elements in the expedition the point of embarkation at Tampa there were empty transports in the harbor after the 10,000 had gone on board. Shafter ordered these empty transports to be filled with troops, and as a result he took something like 16, 000 or 17,000 men to Santiago. He and General Wheeler, who was present at the conversation, agreed with him, that had the expedition gone with 10, 000 men it would have ended in a horrible disaster. In confirmation of the statement about embarkation is the story of the Ninth infantry, of San Juan fame. On the night that it boarded at Tampa an orderly dashed up to the headquarters with a message to the effect that if the Ninth regiment was not on board the transport within a limited time given it would be left behind at Tampa and not go to Cuba. The point was that the material which had been ordered forward to Tampa might arrive and be loaded ahead of the regiment, and so it was really a race between soldiers and some other necessary part of the expedition.

The Fifth corps as it fought at Santiago on July 1 was as follows:

WHEELER'S CAVALRY DIVISION.
Sumner's Brigade.—3d U. S. cavalry, 6th U. S. cavalry, 9th U. S. cavalry (colored), Young's Brigade.—1st U. S. cavalry, 10th U. S. cavalry (colored), 1st U. S. volunteer cavalry (rough riders).

There were only two squadrons of each regiment at Santiago, seven troops being left at Tampa with the horses and baggage.

FIRST DIVISION OF INFANTRY, GENERAL J. F. KENT.
Hawkins' 1st Brigade.—2d U. S., 16th U. S., 71st N. Y.
Pearson's 2d Brigade.—2d U. S., 10th U. S., 21st U. S.
Wikoff's 3d Brigade.—6th U. S., 12th U. S., 24th U. S. (colored).
GENERAL H. W. LAWTON'S SECOND DIVISION.
Ludlow's 1st Brigade.—2d U. S., 22d U. S., 25 Mass.
Miles' 2d Brigade.—3d U. S. (colored), 4th U. S., 1st U. S.
Chaffee's 3d Brigade.—13th U. S., 17th U. S., 7th U. S.
Wyeth's about 12,000 in line at battle.
ARTILLERY AND MACHINE GUNS.
Grimes', Parkhurst's, Rent's and Capron's batteries of light artillery.
Hinch's Capt. Watson's, 4 Hotchkiss guns.
Lieutenant Fenner's, 4 Gatling guns.

These troops figured conspicuously in the battles to be described in the articles upon the Santiago campaign.

Advices From Samoa Tell of a Battle For the Succession to Malietoa.

Decision of Chief Justice Chambers in Favor of Malietoas Tanu

Resented by the Followers of Mataafa, the Rival Aspirant.

Mataafa's Men Said to Be Victors. Seventy-three Killed and Wounded.

MELBOURNE, Victoria, Jan. 19.—Advices received here from Samoa under date of Jan. 15, say there has been fighting there over the decision of Chief Justice Chambers in favor of Malietoas Tanu, one of the candidates to the throne in succession to the late King Malietoa. It is added that the native followers of Mataafa, the rival aspirant to the kingship, were victorious. Seventy-three men were killed and wounded.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 19.—A cablegram to The Call from Auckland, N. Z., under date of Jan. 15, says: When the Oceanic steamship Alameda left Apia, on Jan. 12, a revolution had broken out on the Samoan islands and was being waged with much bloodshed and great destruction of property. The warships Falke and Porpoise, the latter in command of Captain Sturde, were then at the islands and were taking part in suppressing the rising.

On Dec. 31, the chief justice determined in favor of Malietoa Tanus, claiming Mataafa was barred by the treaty of Berlin. On Jan. 1, 6,000 of Mataafa's followers rose in rebellion and defeated 2,000 of Malietoas' men, ambushing them and killing 73 natives and wounding many. The rebels have burned 400 houses and razed the town of Upolu. The dead fruit trees have been cut down in many places. The foreigners are uninjured.

BOLIVIAN REVOLUTION.

Insurgents Are in Possession of an Impregnable Position.

LIMA, Peru (via Galveston, Tex.), Jan. 19.—Well authenticated advices from Bolivia say that the president of the republic, General Cerron Fernandez Alonzo, with his troops, is still at Viacha awaiting reinforcements before advancing upon the capital, La Paz, which is in the hands of the revolutionists. The revolutionary commanders have 2,500 well armed men and can count on the enthusiastic support of the population of the city. They believe that the fortifications are impregnable and that in the event of a siege victory is assured to the revolutionary cause.

ALLIANCE WITH GERMANY.

Idea Given the Approval of Certain Factions in France.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—Ever since the much discussed conference in Berlin on Jan. 8 between Emperor William and the Marquis de Noailles, French ambassador to Germany, a section of the French press has been actively discussing the possibility of a French alliance with Germany. The idea is meeting with approval in certain quarters, now that Frenchmen have come to regard England rather than Germany as the national enemy.

Ernest Judet, the novelist, is an earnest advocate of such an entente, which the Courier du Soir considers "quite possible."

PERSONNEL BILL PASSED.

Naval Officers Have Worked for the Measure for a Decade.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The house passed the naval personnel bill without division on the final passage, thus accomplishing what the officers of the navy have striven for during more than a decade. By its provisions the line and engineer corps are welded into an amalgamated line, staff officers are given positive rank, but their command is limited to their own corps and a system of voluntary and compulsory retirement on three-quarters pay is established, which is designed to remove the congestion in the lower rank at 45. The bill also practically equalizes their pay with that of army officers.

Three important amendments were adopted. One creates a judge advocate's court, another abolishes prize money and a third provides for the retirement on three-quarters pay of enlisted men and petty officers in the navy after 30 years' service. But the most important change in the bill as reported was the adoption after a hard fight of a substitute for the organization of the marine corps, by which the corps is to consist of 6,000 enlisted men and petty officers, with general officers and staff. This will increase the marine corps by 1,800 men and increase the cost of its maintenance $1,000,000.

Northwestern Electricians.

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 19.—The seventh annual meeting of the Northwest Electrical association opened at the Hotel Pfister at noon with about 300 delegates in attendance. The meeting will last three days.

Ahmed Fedil Surrenders.

CAIRO, Jan. 19.—The whole remaining force of Ahmed Fedil, the only unconquered Soudan chieftain, soon setting about 1,000 men, has surrendered to the British on the Blue Nile. Fedil accepted terms which allow him to retain

SPOKE TO LARGE CROWDS.

Colonel Bryan Makes Two Public Addresses in Denver.

DENVER, Jan. 19.—Colonel William J. Bryan made two public speeches in Denver during the day, both of which were listened to by audiences many times united by the capacity of the auditoriums. The first was at 2 o'clock in the hall of the house of representatives, to which only the fortunate ones who held tickets were admitted. The other was at 8 o'clock at Coliseum hall, the largest roofs in the city, where thousands struggled for standing room, while other thousands turned away disappointed in not even getting a glimpse of the great silver champion.

In his address before the legislature Mr. Bryan devoted most of his time to a discussion of the duties of legislators and other public officers, whom he designated servants, not masters, of the people. At the Coliseum his subject was "Naboth's Vineyard," an argument against the policy of expansion.

GEORGE DIXON THE WINNER.

Defeats Young Fitzo of South Africa in a One-Sided Affair.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—George Dixon has again proved his cleverness and skill in the ring by the Union League Athletic club, where he met and defeated Young Fitzo of South Africa in the 10th round of what was to have been a 20-round bout.

The knockout came in the shape of a left swing in the stomach, which crushed the wind out of the latest arrival among the short-haired fraternity in this country. Fitzo was heralded as a world beater by his friends, but, although he is very clever in defensive work and undoubtedly game, he was never dangerous.

Engine House Disappeared.

APPLETON, Wis., Jan. 19.—A boiler at Willy Bros.' flour mill exploded, killing Engineer W. H. Kramer and injuring A. Sorenson, Charles Kispert, Albert Hilbarg and Otto Kargus. The interior of the mill was demolished and the engine house was lifted into the air.

WOOD ON CUBA

Military Governor of Santiago Tells About Affairs in His Province.

People Have Demonstrated They Appreciate All That Has Been Done.

And Their Response to the Liberty Given Them Has Been Prompt.

Good Deal of Feeling Over the Misunderstanding With the Army in July.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—Major General Leonard Wood, military governor of Santiago, was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the Union League athletic club, where he met and defeated Young Fitzo of South Africa in the 10th round of what was to have been a 20-round bout.

The knockout came in the shape of a left swing in the stomach, which crushed the wind out of the latest arrival among the short-haired fraternity in this country. Fitzo was heralded as a world beater by his friends, but, although he is very clever in defensive work and undoubtedly game, he was never dangerous.

Engine House Disappeared.

APPLETON, Wis., Jan. 19.—A boiler at Willy Bros.' flour mill exploded, killing Engineer W. H. Kramer and injuring A. Sorenson, Charles Kispert, Albert Hilbarg and Otto Kargus. The interior of the mill was demolished and the engine house was lifted into the air.

DAM GAVE WAY.

Torrent of Water Let Loose at Cleveland. Two Collapsed.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 19.—About 8:15 a. m. a dam under the Wilson avenue bridge gave way. Back of the dam is a body of water a mile and one-half long, hundreds of feet wide, and in places 25 to 30 feet deep.

The break in the dam has already allowed a torrent of water to pour down on the flats below it. The property loss is already large, and if the entire dam gives way, which seems inevitable, it will be enormous. Along the lines where the flood, if it comes, must flow, are the big plants of the Standard Oil company, the Cleveland Paper Mills, the Fitch slaughter house and other manufacturing plants. There are but few people living in the track of the flood and those were all warned and have sought safety on higher ground.

The cause of the flood is the recent heavy rains, the melting snow from the hill-sides and a pond of several acres overflowing.

Streams for several miles up the gully have added their quota of water.

The Wilson avenue bridge is a structure 700 feet long and has been built but a few months. It cost $250,000

The break in the dam, which was an unsubstantial mass of earth, occurred while 50 men were at work in the artificial sand bank just back of the city engineers to allow the pent-up water to find a gradual and safe outlet. Every man had a most harrowing experience and escaped with their lives, with not one second to spare.

The north end of the Wilson avenue bridge has been moved from its foundation half an inch and engineers have given up hope of saving the structure. Five of the piers have crumbled away and sunk beneath the surface of the water.

The stone abutments on opposite sides of the dam, on the west side of the bridge were at the very brink at 10 o'clock this morning, and were rapidly giving way on all sides.

A terrific collapse of the earth on the south side of the dam near the abutments, occurred early in the day, carrying away 15 feet of earth, carrying several telegraph poles along with it. A few moments later the water undermined the abutments and a section 50 feet in area, sweeping it down into the raging flood.

Shortly after 10 o'clock the sixth abutment of the big bridge gave way. The structure is already in a most precarious condition, and, with a tremendous report, plunged into the river. About 150 feet of the bridge formed an incline plane to the ground.

SEES MUCH TROUBLE AHEAD.

John Morley on the Prevailing Spirit of Imperialism.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—Rt. Hon. John Morley, Liberal member of parliament, addressing his constituents at Brechin, criticised the "prevailing spirit of Anglicism and imperialism. He disclaimed it as entirely opposed to all the lessons of Mr. Gladstone"—lessons for which he said: "Liberal statesmen were he to allow himself to drift in acquiescence with a course of policy which he believed to be dangerous to material prosperity, to the national character and to the strength and safety of his imperial state."

He frankly admitted that he took a pessimistic view of the difficulties threatening throughout the world. "I think," he exclaimed, "we are nearer the beginning of them than the end." It was his firm conviction that "the prevailing spirit of imperialism must inevitably lead to militarism, to heavy daily growing expenditure, increased power to aristocrats and privileged classes, and war."

TREATY IN SIGHT.

Joint High Commission Will Probably Agree Upon One.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The joint high commission, after taking a recess was in session during the forenoon and after the commission proper adjourned the representatives of the Alaskan boundary and on bonding privileges met in session. There is still some minor differences to be settled on these on other subjects, but the members of the commission express the opinion that they will be able to conclude their labors within the next two weeks. They are very close together on all questions at issue, and the opinion is now freely expressed that a treaty covering the entire questions will be agreed upon. Nov. 28, with a man named Lippmann, having in their possession a considerable quantity of jewelry stolen from the Dowager Duchess of Sutherland, early in October last, on board a train running between Paris and Calais, has been sentenced to seven years penal servitude.

Expert Accountants for Havana.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Secretary Gage has ordered A. L. Lowsha, of the treasury department, to proceed at once to Cuba and organize a system of the method of government accounting in that island. Mr. Lowsha has left for Havana with half a dozen clerks.

Praise for the Crew of the Bear.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—President McKinley has sent a message to congress recounting an "incident of stirring interest in the history of American seamen," the valorous deeds of the officers and men of the revenue cutter Bear in rescuing the imprisoned whaling fleet in Arctic waters last winter.

Irish Municipal Elections.

DUBLIN, Jan. 19.—Judging from the results already known the Irish elections have been remarkable for the success of the Labor party and the waning power of Parnellism. The new feature is that women are allowed to vote for the first time.

Will Not Be Divided Again.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The president has submitted to the senate for confirmation the nomination of Miss Clara Barton to be a member of the International Red Cross committee, to represent the United States. Miss Barton was appointed to the position by President Garfield, but her appointment was not confirmed by the senate, and she has since been acting without authority.

William a Double Dragoon.

BERLIN, Jan. 19.—Emperor William received the Chinese minister, Lu Hai Hoisan, who presented his majesty with the insignia of the double dragon, conferred upon the German emperor by the emperor of China.

Over 200 Will Go to the Riviera.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—The Soleil publishes a report to the effect that the czar, in May next, will spend a fortnight on the Riviera. The czar's party will number 200 persons, including the empress, Grand Duke Michael and Grand Duchess Xenia. The czar will travel incognito as Colonel Romanoff. The czar's yacht Standart will accompany the party.

VERY SIMPLE

General Whittier Says Nothing Is Easier Than the Philippine Question.

It Could All Be Settled in Three Days If It Were Properly Managed.

Account of an Interview With Aguinaldo and Other Leaders.

Should Be Given a Measure of Autonomy Until Able to Go Alone.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—General Charles A. Whittier, who returned recently from Manila, says:

"Nothing in the world is easier of settlement than the situation in the Philippines. It could be settled in three days."

General Whittier went to Manila with General Merrit, and there served as collector until the end of October. He returned by way of Paris, and on his arrival in this country recently, his first duty was to make his report to the officials in Washington. This done, he now feels that he is sufficiently free from official obligations to speak of affairs in the Philippines. His position there gave him ample opportunities for observing the conditions in the islands.

"In the first place," General Whittier continued, "there is a wide ignorance of the Philippines and the character of the Filipinos. The natives are not ignorant, they are not savages. They are adept at manufacturing and as accountants, mariners, and railroad operatives. They are quiet, most temperate and display great ability in their military affairs.

"With firmness, accompanied by diplomacy and tact, I think it the simplest matter possible to bring them under our control.

"We may give them offices of minor importance, both military and civil, and try the experiment. For whatever number of years may be necessary, until they develop their capacity for governing, and we can then be guided by that.

He Visited Aguinaldo.

"I saw Aguinaldo on Oct. 27, three days before leaving Manila. I found his people were about equally divided, one-half favoring absolute independence, the other half favoring an American protectorate. I said to him in reply to those favoring independence:

"'The United States is not going to withdraw from the islands. It will be the will of all of you to develop the country. To this end roads must be built on scientific principles; railroads must be constructed; sanitation will be necessary. You have no money or credit, and you have no navy. The islands are so rich a prize that, apart from quarrels and schisms between the different tribes, foreigners are most likely to take from you portions of the possessions from time to time.'

"Aguinaldo replied: 'The civilized powers will never permit such a thing,' to which I returned: 'How has it been in China, where England, Russia, France and Germany are strong enough at once to take parts of the country? He had no answer for this.

What They Can Control Them.

"A confidential friend of Aguinaldo, Buan Camino, joined the conference at this point, and after talking a while with Aguinaldo, expressed very strongly his opinion that the two could move about the country in the acceptance of a protectorate.

"Aguinaldo and Buan Camino added expressions of pleasure at my visit, as they felt they had been neglected and after given the cold shoulder by Americans since the day after the fall of Manila, when they were assured of our friendship.

"My view is that after the signing of the treaty in Paris, communication should have been established with them, and I have no doubt that an understanding could have been arrived at with no impairment of our dignity, and with no suggestion that we were going to give up the islands, at least for the present."

Asked his opinion of the appointment by President McKinley of the commission to investigate conditions in the Philippines, General Whittier replied:

"I think it a most excellent thing. It's a letter to the secretary of state, bearing date last September, I recommended such a commission be sent there to study and report upon the conditions, political, social and moral of the Philippines, and later, in my testimony before the peace commission in Paris, I made a similar recommendation."

Advices Received at the War Department From General Otis.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The advices received at the war department from General Otis at Manila continue reassuring in character. They show that the relations between the military officials and the insurgents are less strained than they have been, which leads the administration here to hope that a peaceful solution of the difficulties confronting the government in the islands will be reached. What troops may have been landed by General Miller in the vicinity of Iloilo have not been with a hostile purpose, but to carry out the instructions of the government in the organization of the provincial forces. Considerable feeling was aroused in the vicinity of Iloilo by the landing of these troops, which was the occasion of the cablegram sent to General Otis, to which reference is made.

CARLISM GROWING.

Chances of the Pretender Have Heightened Greatly in the Past Few Months.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—The Times publishes from a correspondent in Spain a column article on the chances of the pretender, Don Carlos. Among other things the correspondent says: The Conservatives are dismisted to a greater degree than the Liberals, and amongst them it has been openly asserted that unless the present difficulties are solved by the end of the month they will themselves take the lead in persuading the people to call Don Carlos to the throne.

It is surprising to what an extent the feeling that the triumph of Carlism is the only chance for the regeneration of Spain has Carlist books and pamphlets are widely sold and in political circles there is talk of suggesting a compromise—Don Carlos to mount the throne on the understanding of a speedy abdication in favor of his son Don Jaime who would marry the Infanta Maria. It is certain, however, that Don Carlos would reject such an offer.

Many officers do not hesitate to declare in favor of Don Carlos, but the army waits for a leader. Nobody understands General Weyler's intentions and the generals hesitate to take a pronunciamento. The opinion of the Carlists and many non-Carlists is that if Don Carlos should land in Spain the army would go over to him in overwhelming numbers.

THE WISCONSIN CONTEST.

Quarles Men Claim His Election, But Others Do Not Concede It.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 19.—Brief sessions were held in both houses of the legislature, but few of the members being absorbed by the senatorial contest. The Republican caucus to nominate United States senator meets in the evening. The Quarles caucus was held this morning at which all but seven members of the legislature were present, and the Quarles men claim six more as certain. Fifty-seven votes are necessary to nominate. Other candidates claim there were two Babcock and two Stephenson men in the Quarles caucus.

UNLUCKY FOR QUAY.

Pennsylvania Senator Lacks Thirteen Votes in Joint Session.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Jan. 19.—The vote in joint session for United States senator was: Quay, (Rep.) 113; Jenks, (Dem.) 82; Bardsli, (Rep.) 1; Delamater, (Rep.) 1; Stewart, (Rep.) 9; Huff, (Rep.) 3; Rice, (Rep.) 2; J. E. Downing (Rep.) 2; Grow, (Rep.) 1; Markle, (Rep.) 1. Necessary to choice 126. No election.

Senator Hale's Fourth Term.

AUGUSTA, Me., Jan. 19.—Eugene Hale was re-elected senator by the state legislature in joint session. The coming term will be Mr. Hale's fourth term in the senate. Many Republicans were not present and quite a large number refrained from voting as a mere expression of their disapproval of Mr. Hale's course on expansion and in regard to the peace treaty.

Badly Split in Delaware.

DOVER, Del., Jan. 19.—A separate ballot was taken for United States senator and I have no doubt that an understanding could have been arrived at with no impairment of our dignity, and with no suggestion that we were going to give up the islands, at least for the present."

THERE is developing considerable opposition to the usual custom of the legislature of giving the newspaper reporters $150.00 a piece at the end of the session. It is claimed that there are many ostensible reporters there who are really doing no newspaper work.

J. J. HEINRICH, of Minneapolis, oil inspector; F. W. Johnson, of New Ulm, state librarian, and G. W. Goodrich, of Anoka, member of the State Board of Pharmacy, these are some of the governor's nominations and the senate confirmed them. Mr. Johnson is the editor of the New Ulm Review.

THE proposed changes in the general election laws incorporated in a bill now before the legislature are desirable ones. One provides for a duplicate set of ballot boxes so that the ballots may be counted every hour. Schools are to be furnished with sample ballots. It is certainly a most excellent plan to arrange that the returns after an election may be in within an hour after the polls are closed.

THE JOURNAL stated last week that B. F. Fifield had been appointed United States senator from Vermont to succeed the late Senator Morrill. Mr. Fifield, however, declined the appointment. Jonathan Ross, present chief justice of the Supreme Court of Vermont has accepted the governor's appointment of him to the United States senate. He will of course have to resign his place on the bench.

WASHINGTON reports reveal the fact that Congressman Eddy is continually looking after the interest of his district. He recently suggested with regard to the matter of logging on the unceded part of the Chippewa reservation that white employes in each lumber camp be limited to foreman, assistant foreman and cook, and that the amount of timber to be cut each year be limited to 10,000,000 feet on the White Earth and 5,000,000 feet on the Red Lake reservation.

SOME populist papers are calling attention to the fact that Mr. Lind has been governor for several weeks and yet the state is not visibly disturbed nor is money being withdrawn, and they claim that this is further evidence that populism is all right. Mr. Lind, it is true, was elected by demo-populist votes, but the conservative tone of his message was clear proof that he does not rightly belong to the populist camp. The very qualities for which his message is praised by republican papers are unpopulistic.

THE republicans of the legislature have determined that if there has been anything wrong about the grain inspection and the binding twine industry at the state's prison, the wrong will not continue. A committee will investigate the whole matter. If any person in Polk county or vicinity has evidence of illegal transactions in either of these department matters let them send evidence to the legislature at St. Paul. There was lots of talk here last fall, now let the investigators have some proof.

A RESOLUTION passed the state senate that the federal senators and representatives from the state be asked to work for a constitutional amendment for the election of senators by direct vote. The kind of time they are having in many states electing their United States senator would lead one to conclude that popular election would be the better way, still the argument is not all on that side. At a debate in Chicago last week upon this question between the Chicago "U" and the Minnesota "U" the opposers of the popular election won.

ONE of the most important measures which has been brought forward this session of the legislature was that of Mr. Foss providing for local state grain inspection and the weighing of grain. The system is put into effect through appointees to be named on petition of the county commissioners of ten freeholders. A bond is required of each local inspector. Each grain inspector of the state is to instruct these local men and to review their books from time to time. The charge of inspection is fixed at 10 cents a load.

"THERE is a prospect of a greater immigration into Minnesota in 1899, says the Farmer, than the state has had in any year since the "boom" times, and the new settlers are of the best class—the overflow from Iowa and Wisconsin, men who know how to farm profitably under Minnesota conditions."

Polk county farmers ought to be interested in getting some of these immigrants to settle here. The JOURNAL is doing its part in publishing a series of articles setting forth the advantages that Polk county offers to new settlers. Send the JOURNAL where you think some of these prospective settlers may see it.

MR. WHEATON, the colored member from Minneapolis, introduced a bill protecting persons of African blood in their right to get shaved, ride in first-class railway coaches, stop at first-class hotels, etc., on a plane of perfect equality with the Caucasian. Had this bill been introduced in some of our Southern states we might see some excuse for it but we cannot see any here. No gentleman, whether white or black, would go where he is not wanted. Equal privileges to all is what Minnesota now has but special privileges to special classes ought not to be.

THERE was reported to the United States senate last Thursday a joint resolution tendering the thanks of congress to Clara Barton and officers and agents of the Red Cross society for their humane services toward the Armenians and toward both sides in the Hispano-American war. This is the least that congress ought to do for this society. The Red Cross certainly did more to lessen the suffering of our wounded and diseased soldiers during the late war than did the regular army surgeons and hospital corps. All returning soldiers speak in terms of the highest praise when referring to the Red Cross nurses.

PRESIDENT HILL, of the Great Northern, in his address to the Farmers' Alliance, suggests that farmers build granaries of their own and hold their wheat, when prices are unsatisfactory. He referred to the fact that many farmers feel that they cannot afford the expense of stacking and so thresh the grain from the shock and rush it to market. Receipts at primary points are thus made large, and lead buyers to hold off till the price sags. If the farmer would market his grain leisurely he might gain the equivalent of 2½ cents a bushel from screenings alone, with the chances of a higher market in his favor. Certainly last fall in this section much grain was lost through not stacking and farmers would do well to carefully consider Mr. Hill's suggestions.

WE are glad to say that Mr. Wolfer, state warden of the penitentiary at Stillwater, will retain his position. Connecticut made him a very tempting offer and as the salary there was a third larger than he has been getting and he feared that politics might rob him of his position in this state, he had already almost accepted the Eastern offer when Governor Lind came to the rescue. The governor assured Mr. Wolfer that he was in no danger of losing his position and that his salary here would be raised to $4,500. This was a commendable act of Mr. Lind. The care and training of law breakers is a science and no appointment in this field of work should be at all influenced by politics. It is the modern theory with reference to criminals that the state should reform them, teach them to become better citizens, and not simply incarcerate them for a certain length of time.

DEATH OF MR. DINGLEY.

Hon. Nelson Dingley, of Maine, leader on the floor of the republican side of the national house of representatives, died at Washington, D. C., last Friday night. He is one of the victims of that insidious disease la grippe. Mr. Dingley has been a member of congress for eighteen years. President McKinley in his letter of condolence to Mrs. Dingley speaks of "Mr. Dingley's exalted character, his domestic virtues, his quiet, useful, distinguished life and his long continued and faithful service in behalf of his fellow citizens."

The late congressman was an authority on finance and in the present condition of national affairs, his aid was greatly needed. Two revenue bills, one passed in 1897 and the other in 1898, both bearing his name, remain as monuments of his financial ability and his industry.

SENATORS GRINDELAND, J. H. Smith, Wilson and McGovern are the senate members of the grain inspection and binding twine joint investigation committee. The house members are Jacobson, Pugh, O'Neill, Neubauer and Pennington.

SENATOR C. K. DAVIS was reëlected to the United States senate at the joint session of the state legislature yesterday at noon. The eyes of Europe were upon our state capitol at that time and our representatives acquitted themselves like men in giving our senator another term at Washington.

THE program carried out at the annual meeting of State Agricultural society in St. Paul last week was one of the most interesting and instructive in the history of the society. The papers read were unusually able. The JOURNAL has made arrangements to publish most of the papers in whole or in part.

About $13,000 will be paid to the Indians at the Red Lake agency next week. As the Indians believe in keeping money in circulation and the whole amount will be spent in two or three days, the merchants of the agency are anticipating a harvest.—Thief River Falls News.

It seems a pity that something can not be done to prevent the Indians from squandering their money, still it is not every white man who could teach the red man the art of being provident.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY has appointed a commission composed of Admiral Dewey, Gen. Otis, Col. Chas. Derby, Prof. D. C. Worcester, of the University of Michigan and Pres. Schurman, of Cornell University, to study the commercial and social problems of the Philippines. They will leave for these islands probably about the first of February. In this act the president shows his usual good sense. Before acting on any question he wishes to be thoroughly informed.

HARPER'S periodicals, the Magazine, the Weekly and the Bazar, for 1899, will contain the best kind of literature. The magazine will contain a history of the Spanish-American war, written by Henry Cabot Lodge. Prof. Hart of Harvard will contribute a series of articles, "Brother Jonathans' Colonies" being the first. The progress of science during the nineteenth century will be reviewed. Short stories will also be another of the attractions. For the Weekly Harpers have some of the most distinguished artists in America. Harper's Bazar is the mirror of fashion.

Notes From Exchanges.

Marshall County Leader: Ex-County Treasurer Dahlgren is short $248,40 in his accounts and the county auditor is taking steps to recover the same.

Austin Transcript: We take very little stock in professions of repentance which do not include the consistent fruits thereof. The chap that owes us on subscription and refuseth to pay his just debts may sit on the front seat in the sanctuary and profess great piety but verily we have little confidence in his sincerity or his honesty.

Thirteen Towns: It was thought at the time the present electric light plant was decided upon that it would be adequate for the demands of Fosston for years to come, but now, after running only three months, it is taxed to the limit and no more lights can be put up this winter. The plant is paying well, even at the low rates charged, and it is only a question of time when additions must be made to its capacity.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: Si Lanctot is looking for Alex. Dupuis, his nephew, who disappeared a few days ago taking with him a pair of pants, a coat and hat belonging to Landlord Wells, of the Northern, a mackintosh coat and a pair of silk gloves belonging to Si, a razor bone belonging to Art Thompson, and a pair of overshoes and a sweater belonging to the bell boy. The boy's parents live at Crookston, and the police think they will overhaul him there.

Allegheny (Pa.) Record: The carrying trade of the United States now conducted by foreign sailors and credited to foreign bottoms is estimated at $1,600,000,000, and that credited to American bottoms at $190,000,000. In 1860 the trade of American bottoms was estimated at $507,247,757, and foreign bottoms at $225,040,793, but since then there has been a steady and uninterrupted decline of American bottoms and a corresponding increase of foreign bottoms. All of which demonstrates the soundness of the Republican policy to re-establish our merchant marine.

Farm Stock and Home: Wheat in Great Britian yielded an average of 34¾ bushels to the acre, in 1898. The year before they had a so-called short crop, yet the yield was 29.08 bushels to the acre, at least double the average yield of Minnesota this year, which was considerably above the general average. It is nonsense to assert or admit that the soil of Great Britain is better than that of this great northern wheat belt, or that her climate and other natural conditions for wheat growing are superior. It is method and method only that makes the difference.

St. Hilaire Spectator: Roseau, a village seventy-five miles away from a railroad, and way up near the Lake of the Woods has better mail service than St. Hilaire or Thief River Falls since Jim Hill put on his abortive train service. They receive a daily mail there while we get one every other day—some days. It looks as though Jim was not only attending to his own business, but digging into the government business as well. Its about time the people put in a protest. It looks as though we are drifting back to the days when Jim Hill was a deck-hand on a scow running the Red River—30 years ago.

St. Paul Review: In looking over the members of the state senate one cannot fail to be struck with the significant fact that it is chiefly composed of young men. The adage that we resort to young men for action and old men for council seems in this instance to be reversed. We are in the habit of associating in our minds bald heads and white hairs with dignity and conservatism, but the roster of men of mature years in the senate of 1899 is much limited. The average age will be found to the curiously inclined to be less than in the other body. Perhaps this circumstances may account for the fact that the organization of the senate was carried out upon lines different from those followed in former years.

Alexandria Post News: The seventh district never had so strong a delegation in the state senate. Senators Myron, Grindeland and Ryder are new members but they are strong men, aggressive, honest and close to the people. Senators Jones and Smith are men of experience who have won their spurs. Senators Young and Reeves have also had much legislative experience and they will be two of the most influential members of the upper house. They haven't the fault of the parrot but when they speak their words carry weight and what they want they generally get. The seventh district will have equal influence with any in the state and for the first time will have to be reckoned with by the politicians.

Roseau Times: The village council of Hallock and county commissioners of Kittson have under consideration a proposition to build a wagon road by direct route into Roseau county. The road suggested is nearest by 18 miles than the one to Stephen and would no doubt add greatly to the benefit of Hallock as well as be of great convenience to the people of this county.

On a Large Scale.

"I have heard some very romantic stories about your successes," said the young woman as she looked out of the corners of her eyes and adjusted her mouth so as to make dimples.

"Yes?" responded Senator Sorghum with a complacent smile.

"It has been intimated to me that you have made money out of politics. But, of course, one doesn't have to believe everything one hears."

"Well, these silver people did so badly when they tried to make politics out of money I dunno's a man would be to blame for turning the experiment the other way around."

"And then another person told me that you got your very first start in life as a curbstone fakir."

"That's libelous."

"I thought so."

"Absolutely false. The way I got my first start was this. I had a farm left me, which wasn't good for anything else, so I got it surveyed and had maps printed and opened up an office and sold the whole thing off in lots. I'm not a man of small enterprises. When I start out to do anything, I do it with a will. As soon as I made up my mind to fake I faked a whole town. I wouldn't stop with a curbstone."—Washington Star.

She Kept Her Appointment.

A. was a young man in a cavalry regiment who fell in love with B., the daughter of an opulent merchant. He grew tired of her, and when his regiment was ordered to the east he left her without explanations.

Returning home with more dust than medals on his coat, he dined and went to a ball, where B. was the daintiest among the beauties. They danced, and she showed no resentment on the score of past unfaithfulness. Pressed by A., she gave him an appointment at a certain church near her father's house, which had been their trysting place in other days.

A. went happily to his club, and his old friend, Major O., offered him a cigar.

"I met Lucy B. this evening," said A., and he told his friend of the appointment she had given him.

The major expressed no surprise, but said Lucy was a good and forgiving girl—for he knew what had gone before.

A. went to the church on the day named, and there was a wedding. When the ceremony was over, B., the bride, came out of the church on the arm of Major O., the bridegroom.

A. went home to his lodgings.—Pearson's Weekly.

HAZING A SENIOR.

During my senior year at college the freshmen and sophomores were constantly trying to get the better of each other as is their prerogative. We seniors of course maintained a dignified neutrality. We were surprised to hear, however, that one of our class, Osborne, had sided with the freshmen.

A council was immediately called of some half dozen choice spirits, presided over by Teddy Langfit, the strategist of the council. It so happened that Barlow, who was one of the members of the self constituted vigilance committee, was rooming with Osborne at that time. The first difficulty we encountered was in deciding on the nature of the punishment.

"I'll tell you what we'll do," suggested Teddy. "We don't want to give him any more than a good scare, so we'll just duck him at the college pump, and then tie him out for the rest of the night. It'll do him as much good as though we had killed him and it won't be so risky for us."

"But hold on a minute," interposed Barlow. "He keeps a big revolver in his bureau drawer, and if he should happen to hear us coming up the stairs he might make things unpleasant. He'd be just fool enough to shoot, and none of us is good enough to die yet."

"We can fix that all right," responded Teddy. "We'll send you down ahead. You can pretend to be at the bureau undressing and in the meanwhile get hold of the gun. Then you can easily make some excuse for going out again, and we'll be waiting for you at the corner."

This plan met with approval, and the next night, being moonless, was selected. The appointed hour found us on the corner above the house waiting the return of Barlow, who had gone in search of the revolver.

In the meantime, the latter, as we discovered later, was encountering some unexpected obstacles. When he entered the bedroom that the two men occupied in common, he found the gas turned low and Osborne in bed and apparently sound asleep.

This was the very chance he wanted, and, stepping softly, he crossed the room and began to search in the top drawers of the bureau where the revolver usually lay.

Suddenly he heard a sound from the bed, and, turning round, he found himself gazing straight into the muzzle of a very determined looking revolver. He had found the object of his search, but it was in the grasp of Osborne, now very much awake.

"You'd better come to bed," the latter remarked in a quiet voice, and Barlow, for once subdued and silent, obeyed without a murmur, not even stopping to remove his shoes or hat.

While all this was going on we were cooling our heels on the corner above and wondering at the delay. Finally Smith broke out:

"What's the use waiting here? Barlow's got chicken hearted and won't come back at all. Let's go ahead and do it without him."

The front door was unlocked, but the stairs were as dark as pitch, and in our efforts to go up quietly we made about as much noise as a squadron of cavalry. Up stairs we stumbled around and by dint of much groping found our way into our victim's study. Here we stood for a minute or two crowded together and breathing hard. Somehow we didn't like the looks of things a little bit.

The room was as dark and quiet as the grave, and there was something mysterious and inexplicable about Barlow's sudden disappearance. The thing that we had started out to do didn't seem so very grand or heroic now that we were fairly into it, and some of us couldn't help wishing that the odds weren't so fearfully against poor Osborne.

The silence was broken by that odious Smith exclaiming in a loud whisper: "Pshaw! What are you fellows waiting for?" And he stepped forward and boldly opened the door into the bedroom.

As he did so a shot rang out from the direction of the bed. Smith gave a cry of mortal agony, threw up his arms, spun half around and fell face downward on the floor. The two men nearest the door half ran and half fell down the stairs and fled for dear life, one of them never stopping till he had put a mile and a half between him and the scene of his fright.

Langfit and I were too much horrified to move, and stood stock still for a moment that seemed an age. Then Teddy, in an awestruck whisper, suggested that we get a light. After a good deal of blundering around in the dark the gas was lit, and there lay Smith, outstretched on his face in the doorway between the two rooms, still as death itself. In the next room the same gruesome darkness and silence prevailed.

We knelt by Smith's side, and with trembling fingers began to search for the wound. There were no visible signs of injury, but we were too badly frightened to notice that, and our amazement was indescribable when the man who by all right and reason ought to have been dead as a stone sat up and laughed in our faces.

From the bedroom now came signs of life, and Barlow and Osborne appeared on the scene, the latter still clutching the revolver that had created such consternation.

"You're a pretty pair, you are!" he remarked scornfully. "If I were as smooth as you fellows, I'd leave college and set myself up for a strategy board."

"That's right. Rub it in," Teddy meekly replied. "I know we're easy, but all the same I'd like to know how it happened."

"Easiest thing in the world," said Osborne. "Smith here was sore on you because his advice for tar and feathering me wasn't received in the proper spirit, and so he came around this afternoon and gave the whole scheme dead away. Then when this precocious youngster," and he gave Barlow a punch in the ribs with his revolver, "came in tonight I induced him to retire early, and there you are. If you fellows had followed his example and gone to bed early, there wouldn't have been any trouble."

The joke was clearly on us, and we could do nothing but grin and bear it.—Albert Brill in Boston Globe.

Blind Devotion.

The blind devotion with which an old servant did his duty was illustrated on one occasion when his master had a dinner party. During the dinner Henry was very nervous and made two or three blunders.

His master showed his annoyance and cast angry glances at his servant, but the poor man could not settle quietly to his work.

At last, when the dessert had been placed quietly on the table, he stole timidly behind his master's chair and said:

"Please, sir, can you spare me now? My house has been on fire for the last hour and a half!"—London Answers.

—August Peterson, the man whom the JOURNAL reported last week as being hurt in a runaway, left for his home last Tuesday. He had been in Bethesda hospital for several days previous to his departure.

—Dr. Holte reached the city Tuesday morning after an absence of two months. He has been at El Paso, Texas, where he went with Mrs. Holte for her health. She still remains in the southern climes.

—James Gilmore, John Allen and Harry Howard, three of the men who robbed the Great Northern train near Fergus Falls last fall are in St. Joseph, Mo. They are under arrest there for robbery and were recognized by a Pinkerton detective as the men wanted in Minnesota.

—Mrs. H. O. Scottem, residing a few miles north of St. Hilaire, met with an accident last week while preparing supper. The trap door had been left open by one in the family and while she went into the room after something, it being quite dark she fell down cellar dislocating her shoulder.

—Oswald Bragen, of Osage, Iowa, the new stenographer at the Merchants' National bank, arrived in the city Sunday morning. Mr. Bragen takes the place of Charley Lohn who is now working under Judge Watts. Mr. Bragen is an old friend of Mr. Lohn, they having gone to school together.

—The stockholders of the Ray Mercantile company held their annual meeting last Saturday night. This wholesale house, though in business only about forty days, shows sales to the amount of $12,000. The company has now about $50,000 worth of stock in the warehouse. This is one of the young giant institutions of Crookston.

—Saturday night about 12 o'clock as a young man was making his way down home on Ash street he suddenly discovered that he was being shadowed by a gentleman of the hold-up order. As he had no valuables or money that he particularly cared to part with he started on the home stretch and went under the wire, so to speak, a neck ahead.

—John Morgan, of St. Hilaire, is a candidate for the position of executive agent of the state game and fish commission. He went to St. Paul last Friday night to see that his wires were all in working order. Governor Lind has already shown that he knows that this section of the state turns out able men.

—The grand jury on Friday last finished their work and handed in their report to Judge Watts. They had before them for consideration twenty-six criminal cases, and took evidence of 89 witnesses. Eighteen indictments were found. "The floor in the reception room of the county jail was noted to be in very bad condition, and in our opinion should be replaced by a new hardwood floor at an early date. We are pleased to note the evident desire on the part of all the county officials occupying offices in the court house to discharge the duties devolving on them in their respective offices as faithfully and satisfactorily as possible under the disadvantage of their CROWDED QUARTERS." The common practice of saloon keepers transferring their licenses the jury finds illegal and should be stopped. The judge thanked the jury for their work and dismissed them.

—E. Strasshurger has opened in the Fournet Block at Crookston an office for architecture.

—J. N. Mars and wife, of McIntosh, were in the city on Tuesday.

—F. Tiedt was down from Argyle Monday evening.

—Mrs. Fisk has gone to Argyle to visit with her daughter Mrs. B. Bivins.

—James Meehan jr. and attorney H. W. Lee were representing Thief River Falls at the county seat Tuesday.

—Twenty students left Hendrum the first of the year to attend the normal school at Moorhead.

—The Minnesota Poultry association will hold its annual exhibition in St. Paul Feb. 6 to 11.

—T. H. Shevlin, president of the Crookston Lumber company, was in the city on business Friday.

—Mrs. H. H. Dickmann of Winona, is visiting with her sister, Mrs. S. L. Collins and other relatives in town.

—Leeston is the name of Polk county's latest postoffice. L. K. Temnnson will be Uncle Sam's servant.

—The young people of the Presbyterian church had a jolly sleigh drive out to the home of W. H. Collins last Thursday night.

—The first two weeks of the New Year were spent by Mrs. E. Philipps, of this city, with her daughter Mrs. A. D. Rolston, at Warren.

—Grand Forks may have a big hilliard tournament in the near future. Crookston will no doubt be represented by some of her artists with the cue.

—Mas. G. W. Carhart, of Warren, passed through the city Thursday night on her way to Wiesbaden Springs, Indiana. She will not return till spring.

—An emery wheel revolving at a very rapid rate in the bicycle shop of Hawkins & Olds last Friday suddenly went to pieces. Mr. Hawkins, who was using the wheel, had the good fortune not to be hurt at all.

—On Monday evening next, the 23d inst., the printers of Crookston will give a masquerade charity ball at the G. A. R. hall, for the purpose of obtaining the nucleus of a fund to be used for the benefit of deserving members of the craft. An enjoyable time is promised, and as the tickets are only 50c each, you can afford to patronize them. Good music in attendance.

—Secretary Bliss has affirmed the land office decision in the case of the Northern Pacific against H. A. Natwick, involving lands in the Crookston district. The lands in controversy are in the limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific and St. Vincent extension of the Manitoba road, first awarded to the latter, whose selection was subsequently canceled. The claimant made homestead entry prior to such cancellation, and is adjudged to be entitled to the land as against the Northern Pacific. The latter's selections, therefore, are held for cancellation.

—The firemen will hold a dance at the new city hall on Thursday evening, Jan. 26. Everybody is invited but each is requested to bring along with him a piece of Uncle Sam's white metal an inch in diameter. James E. Montague is chairman of committee on arrangements and A. G. Rutledge head of the door committee. No one has ever failed to have an enjoyable time when the firemen did the entertaining.

—A young man over in Grand Forks was within a few hours of the time when he hoped to be married, when through the foresight of the bride he discovered he had no license. In this predicament he phoned over to the clerk of court's office here and Mr. Sortedahl sent the coveted paper back on the next train. The telephone is indeed a handy instrument. Doubtless the time is not far distant when the marriage ceremony will be preformed by phone.

Fred Hall came in on the train Tuesday.

—Mrs. A. D. Stephens went out to Fosston this morning to visit with her sister Mrs. Hitchcock.

—F. M. Brown will transact business at Hallock and Donaldson today.

—Miss Anna Lambe came in from Dickinson, N. D., today, and is the guest of Miss Ella Walsh.

—Dr. Just reports the arrival of a little girl at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Loel Herbert, on Tuesday last.

—Franz and Arthur Younggren, of Hallock, spent Tuesday night in the city.

Miss Mary Boisslle and Edward St George were married at St. Ann's church Tuesday morning.

—F. E. Larrabee, a Minneapolis attorney, is pleading a case before judge Watts.

—C. J. Knox, of Thief River Falls, spent Monday and Tuesday in this city.

—Miss M. O'Brien is visiting with her brother Will O'Brien at Red Lake Falls.

—The Ladies' Aid society of the Presbyterian church meet this afternoon with Mrs. Vance.

—A new pile bridge is to be built across the Sand Hill River in the town of Garfield.

—T. H. Cannon, master mechanic of the Northern Division of Great Northern was here yesterday.

—Engineer Ralph is preparing a map of the city with a view to the lots being numbered.

—L. D. Marshall, supt. of the St. Anthony & Dakota elevator company, came up from Minneapolis on Tuesday morning.

—The Salvation army had a special service last night. Captain and lieutenant Wheeler were over from East Grand Forks.

—Miss Kause of Red Lake Falls, who has been visiting with Miss Giffin returned home yesterday morning.

—The building committee of the city council, Aldermen Childs, McKinnon and Davis, will meet next Tuesday night to accept the city hall.

—Tonight the Woodmen and Royal Neighbors will have a social gathering at their new lodge rooms in the Fournet block. Dancing will be part of the entertainment.

—Louis Gonyea, chief of police, returned yesterday morning from the Twin Cities, where he had been since Friday. While absent he spent part of a day at Stillwater.

—Andrew Olson, the contractor of the Fifth ward sewer wanted more money from the city council than the original contract called for but he wont get it.

—Attorney R. W. Cutts, of East Grand Forks, was arrested Tuesday, charged with retaining $57 that of right belonged to his client, Martin Nevins. He waived examination and was bound over to the next grand jury under bonds of $200.

A reception and ball was given last night at Red Lake Fall in honor of Mrs. and Mrs. La Bissionere. Several from Crookston went up, among them Ed. Martin and Miss Kate Martin, brother and sister of the bride.

—About twenty of the citizens of McIntosh came to the county seat Tuesday afternoon, their business here being with the district court. Some are here under charges of selling liquors to minors and the others are here as witnesses in these liquor cases.

Those Dreadful Sores

They Continued to Spread in Spite of Treatment but Now They are Healed—A Wonderful Work.

"For many years I have been a great sufferer with varicose veins on one of my limbs. My foot and limb became dreadfully swollen. When I stood up I could feel the blood rushing down the veins of this limb. One day I accidentally hit my foot against some object and a sore broke out which continued to spread and was exceedingly painful. I concluded I needed a blood purifier and I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. In a short time those dreadful sores which had caused me so much suffering, began to heal. I kept on faithfully with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and in a short time my limb was completely healed and the sores gave me no more pain. I cannot be too thankful for the wonderful work Hood's Sarsaparilla, has done for me." MRS. A. E. GILSON, Hartland, Vermont.

OFF FOR CUBA AT LAST

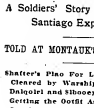
A Soldiers' Story of Shafter's Santiago Expedition.

TOLD AT MONTAUK'S CAMPFIRES.

Shafter's Plan For Landing—Coast Cleared by Warships—Landing at Daiquiri and Siboney—Confusion in Getting the Outfit Ashore—Young's Cavalry to the Front.

[Copyright, 1898, by the Author.]

II.



OWING to a Spanish gunboat scare, Shafter's transport fleet was held some days at Tampa. The three days' travel rations, which had been issued at the beginning, had been exhausted before landing in Cuba. The cramped position of the troops in the ships, the long and tedious voyage under a tropical sun, sapped the vitality and energy of the soldiers and they were not by any means in a condition to do their best immediately on reaching the field of action. This is no discredit to the mettle of the soldiers. Human nature has limits. Had it been possible for the army to disembark and spread itself out over good camping grounds with a good supply of water and facilities for bathing, cooking, exercising and drilling, with good air, for two or three days even, then the effects of the voyage might have cut no figure in the condition of the troops. But the camping grounds where they landed at Siboney and Daiquiri were very unfit. Troops began spreading out toward the heads of the streams passing through the region near the shore. In a short time the water became foul. The whole region was congested with troops and the impediments, and the situation was such, to brief, that the army had no time to take breath, or, as the saying is, "pull itself together" for the bustling campaign which followed.

All of this has a most important bearing upon the conduct of the soldiers and their efficiency at the time of extreme trial in front of the Spanish blockhouses and trenches around Santiago. Any account of the Santiago campaign which starts with the assumption that Shafter's army was in the normal condition of an army when it set out along blind trails and through the dense jungles which intervened between the seashore and the heights about the city will convey no adequate idea of the sufferings, the hardships, the persistency under difficulties, as well as of the glorious achievements and unparalleled courage of the heroes of Santiago. As is already known, General Shafter went on shore and conferred with General Garcia, the Cuban, at a point held by the insurgents, 18 miles west of Morro Castle. From Garcia and from former residents of Santiago, who were with him on board the transports, he learned the situation east of Santiago harbor and city and decided to land the army for operations in that region. To mislead the enemy with regard to his intentions he secured the co-operation of our navy in bombarding several points at once.

It was of prime necessity to keep the army under cover of gunboat fire while it was landing and for some time afterward, or at least until the forces were well in hand on the land and outposts established for defense. There is but one road running into Santiago from the east which communicates with good landing places on the coast. Accounts of the condition of this road vary. General Shafter says that it was very narrow and in many places not better than a trail. Other officers, particularly those connected with the artillery and transport department, speak of it as an execrable roadway. Statements to the contrary have been published, claiming that it is a fair country road over which a former would run no risk with a full load of hay, that some one in authority had a hobby for pack mules, and for that reason wagon transportation was neglected.

The landing was effected at Daiquiri and Siboney between June 22 and 25. As a rule the troops disembarked while the transports were from one mile and a half to two miles offshore. Some idea of the confusion attending the landing may be gained from the experience of Lieutenant Parker with his Gatling battery. Parker had an order from Shafter to land at once and get his outfit to the front. That was on the evening of June 29. The Chickora, upon which the battery made the trip from Tampa, was warped along the iron pier at Daiquiri, and Parker seized a government pontoon to use in transferring his outfit to shore. He was stopped by a young officer, who claimed to control the pontoons, and who said that in spite of Shafter's order that the Gatlings get to the front at once his pontoon should "not be smashed in doing it." While this parley was going on a gunnery officer rode up and ordered the Chickora to put to sea again so that some ships might come up to the pier. For another day the Oberons, with Parker's guns on board, lay in the offing. It is said that at that time the steamer Alamo had on board an entire cargo of pontoons, which had not been landed. On the 26th the Gatlings were taken off the Chickora by a light draft steamer and were put upon the shore, where Lieutenant Parker was warned by the engineers that the roads to the front were impassable. A little later it was demonstrated that Parker's Gatlings were as effective as anything in the whole fighting outfit.

As the cavalry brigade of General Young took the lead of an army advancing on Santiago and first felt the teeth of the Spanish tiger a clear view of the opening events of the actual campaign is best gained by following its movements. The brigade landed at Daiquiri on the evening of the 23d and the morning of the 24th of June. It was composed of two squadrons each of the First and Tenth (colored) regular cavalry and First volunteers, or rough riders, all dismounted.

General Young's orders were to take position on the left of Lawton's infantry division, which had already landed. The troopers had no rations. During the voyage they had exhausted the three days' travel rations supplied them. Soon after landing part of the command received ordinary rations, which the men placed in their blanket rolls, as the animals carried no haversacks.

After landing his command General Young sent an aid on board the steamer where General Wheeler was for further orders and received instructions to move out five or six miles and select a camp for his own brigade, scout and cover the landing and relieve the 3am there. The cavalry bivouac was near the mouth of a stream, the water of which was already polluted by the infantry camps above. After getting rations for one squadron each of the First and Tenth and all of the rough riders, also ammunition for his Hotchkiss guns, General Young moved out on the 25th, and, finding Lawton's troops occupying all the desirable camps, passed on until he reached Lawton's advance post. There he learned of an engagement the night before between Cubans and Spaniards.

Meanwhile General Wheeler had come ashore at Siboney and reached Lawton's advance position. General Young reported to Wheeler, who said that he was glad that Young had come up. He (Wheeler) had been out with General Castillo, the Cuban, and looked for the Cuban position. Being very tired, he was about to lie down and advised General Young to get an account of the affair from Castillo. Castillo said that he had met 2,000 Spaniards at a point near Savilla. He thought they had retired after the battle, but General Young got information that they were being re-enforced. As there was a good camp ground beyond the scene of the skirmish, Young decided to go forward, reconnoiter and develop his front.

From Castillo's description Colonel Rivers, of Young's staff, made a sketch of the region around Las Guasimas. Being in advance of his command, General Young sent another aid, Captain Smedburg, to the rear to bring up his full force and the Hotchkiss gun. The hour set for the movement was 5 a. m. the 24th.

General Castillo had indicated a trail from Siboney, leading over a hill south of the main road between Siboney and Santiago, and forming a junction with it at Las Guasimas. The ridge crossed by the trail was very high. General Young decided to send the rough riders over the trail and with the regulars and Hotchkiss battery move along the main road. The plan was to make a simultaneous attack with two columns. It was explained to General Wheeler. Las Guasimas was a pass where the Spaniards expected to check the American advance. It is down grade from there to Santiago.

Castillo was to support Young with 800 Cubans, and the general asked him to start at 5 a. m., and if he couldn't go along himself send a staff officer who would be able to translate and convey commands. The Cubans not being up at 5:30 a. m., Colonel Rivers was sent to Castillo's camp to say that the column was ready to march to battle. The Cuban sentinels would not allow Colonel Rivers to awaken Castillo, so he came back without the Cubans, reaching Young at 5:45. Young then moved out, sending his aids, Rivera and Smedburg, with Colonel Wood, commander of the rough riders. The aids were to report to their chief the conduct of that column and give any assistance needed as representatives of the commander. Captain Mills, adjutant general of the brigade, went forward with the regulars. The Cubans had outposts beyond the point where the order of battle was made. Several small parties of Cubans at different points along the road.

Captain Mills reached the advance Cuban outpost and sent for General Young to come up, indicating how he could keep hidden from the Spaniards while doing so. From that point the general could see the Spanish position at Las Guasimas. There were Spaniards massed north of the road upon which the regulars were advancing, protected by some stone parapets. After surveying the situation with his glass General Young explained to the commanders of the regulars what they were to do and gave them orders to advance on Las Guasimas in battle order.

GEORGE D. KRAKIE.

MILES AND EAGAN.

Commissary General Eagan and General Miles have engaged in a strife that is a disgrace to the army. General Miles charged that unhalsomed beef was furnished the army, and the war investigating committee, stated that Miles "lied in his throat, in his heart and in every part of his body." The board of inquiry very properly censured Eagan and refused to receive his long type written testimony. Later, on Monday last, Eagan presented a revised statement to the committee. The coarsely abusive, vituperative fish woman's language contained in General Eagan's first statement clearly marks him as unfit to hold his present position. Cool judgment and self-control are preeminently the characteristics of military men and Eagan has shown himself entirely lacking in these essential qualities. It is reported that Eagan is to be courtmartialed and we think he deserves it.

As for General Miles he has not acted the part of a soldier and an officer in all matters since the war. He has publicly criticised army officials rather too severely for one in his high position. No matter what the provocation, had he preserved a dignified silence the people would have more admiration and respect for him.

CONSENT OF GOVERNED.

"Government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed." Upon this foundation the anti-expansionists are basing all their arguments against the retension of the Philippines. But the history of our own country is evidence against this position. Take for instance the Louisiana purchase. We governed this territory and we did not ask the consent of its inhabitants thereof, and the results to those inhabitants have not been very direful. As Senator Foraker pointed out, having the right to go to war and make treaties, it necessarily follows that we have a right to acquire territory. The supreme court is not only authority for this but also for the statement that we have a right to govern territory so acquired.

It seems to be taken for granted by many that because self government is best for us, therefore it is best for everybody. This, however, is not always the case. The worst possible thing that could be done for the Philippine Islands is to give them complete self government. In that case it would be but a short time till some European country stepped in and acquired the territory that would be sure to be in disorder.

The question of our permanently retaining these islands need not enter into the discussion of the calculation of the peace treaty before the senate.

If sometime in the future it was found that it was best for the United States that we separate completely, then is the time to decide the matter, not now.

Only Three or Four Pounds.

The charges which were made last fall against the weighing department in connection with the handling of wheat at Duluth and West Superior appear to have been without foundation. Chief Weighmaster J. G. Magrew, an old Cricketon resident, has made an investigation into the matter. It was charged that bushels of grain were left in all the cars. It turns out, however, that only three or four pounds of sweepings remained in each car. At the Globe elevator a careful record was kept and from 11,000 cars only about 40,000 pounds of dirt was taken.

Free Delivery Again.

The postoffice department at Washington has delegated a special inspector to visit Crookston and see if conditions here are such as to warrant free delivery. The receipts of the local postoffice are sufficient to entitle the city to free delivery but other matters also have to be taken into consideration, such as whether the sidewalks are paved, streets well lighted, names of streets posted at intersections, etc.

FILE YOUR EVIDENCE

If You Have Any Against the Grain Inspection Department.

The East Grand Forks Courier has the following:

The Minnesota legislature has passed a joint resolution which provides for the appointment of a committee of five representatives and four senators to investigate alleged crookedness in the grain inspection department and in the sale of prison-made twine. This committee will be appointed and begin its work at once.

All parties in Polk county who possess any knowledge of fraudulent grading, excessive dockage, or who know personally of wrongs which were perpetrated in the grading or buying of grain, should put the same in writing and forward it to the senator or representatives from the county. These communications will be submitted to the committee; and if any of them contain evidence of illegal weight, or give specific instances of irregular methods, the writers must hold themselves liable to be called before the investigating committee.

All such information should be forwarded here at once.

London In Shakespeare's Time.

A man could walk westward along Holborn, and by the time he reached St. Giles' church, where now is Shaftesbury avenue, it would be fields. If he went from Holborn up Grey's Inn lane, by the time he reached King's Cross he would have left London behind him. St. Pancras was a rural village. On the north, if he passed through Cripplegate, a few minutes' walk would take him through the suburbs, or if he took the road through Moorgate by the time he had passed the Moorfields and left Finsbury behind him he would very soon encounter one of the farm homesteads which supplied the city with agricultural produce. It follows that life in Shakespeare's London was not the distinctive town life which we associate with the London of today.

As young man from a provincial town and used to rural sights and sounds, endowed with the love of nature, would not pine for the green fields at home; he would take a walk into the country. He would find a forest of Arden on the heights of Hampstead and Highgate. He could take part in a sheep shearing celebration at even a less distance. As he walked through the city on business bent a flock of wild ducks or teal might wing over his head with unaccustomed necks, taking flight from the marshes on the south between Paris Garden and Lambeth. One of the most delightful features of the city itself, the city without walls, was the spacious garden attached to most of the ancient houses. These gardens were well stocked with herbs and fruit, and were also cultivated for "garnishing the chambers" of the citizens' dwellings.—T. Fairman Ordish.

Norma's New Civilization.

While Prince King Bee is amusing himself by throwing pebbles into the sea on the west coast of India, young English officers drink whisky and soda and play cards in his throneroom at Mandalay, which has been converted into a mess. No more soldiers with overheavy swords now stagger about the streets. There to a regimen or two of Sommies, with nothing for them to do but make love to the Burmese girls and die of dysentery and fever. There are a few hundred prisoners about Mandalay, to whom the Indian government in Burma is paying a royal state of 10 shillings a week, so the ladies, who are of an enterprising mind, turn, as aristocrats now by no means constitutional, was fined the other day for keeping a gambling hell.—North China Herald.

BECOMING FRIENDLY

FILIPINOS AT ILOILO DISPOSED TO TREAT TROOPS BETTER.

Absolutely Opposed, However, to the Landing of Our Men In That Locality, Agoncillo Is Overruled—Files a Memorandum at the State Department Claiming Recognition — Sets Out at Length the Reasons Why the Islands Should Be Independent.

MANILA, Jan. 16.—Official dispatches just received from Iloilo, Island of Panay, indicate that the natives are disposed to be friendly, although absolutely opposed to the landing of the United States forces without orders from Malolos, the seat of the so-called Filipino national government. Some of the officials at Iloilo are not in accord with the revolutionary government, but are willing to accept an American protectorate, and will go to state that they look to Agoncillo at Iransited transportation by the Americans.

The United States transports Newport, Arizona and Pennsylvania, with the Eighteenth infantry, the Iowa battery, the Sixth artillery and a detachment of the signal corps, constituting General Miller's expeditionary force, are anchored close to Guamaras island, between Panay and Negros, where an excellent water supply is obtainable. The natives, though indisposed primarily to furnish the Americans with fresh supplies, have permitted the American officers to go ashore and furnish them with an escort during the day time.

FILES A MEMORANDUM.

Senor Agoncillo Reiterates His Former Claims Regarding the Philippines.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—Senor Felipe Agoncillo, the representative of General Aguinaldo in Washington, has filed with the state department a memorandum setting forth at length the reasons for his claim that the Philippine government should be recognized by the government.

Accompanying the memorandum was a letter in which Senor Agoncillo states that he has received no reply to his communication of Jan. 6 in which he asks that a suitable time be arranged when he could be presented to the president and heard upon his claim. In view of the position in which the representatives of the American government and the Cuban government find themselves, Senor Agoncillo presents the Filipinos as the third power which has arisen in the islands at this time he urges that the matter be given immediate attention.

Reiterates Former Claims.

The letter and memorandum have been listed as official documents in the state department, and it is understood that they have themselves refused to make them public they have nevertheless expressed a willingness for Senor Agoncillo to do so if he desired. The papers are in the hands of Secretary Hay. The memorandum is along the same lines as statements heretofore made public by the Philippine representative. Senor Agoncillo asserts the Filipinos established and for seven months have maintained a form of government closely similar to American, in that it is based upon the right of the people to rule themselves; that Spain at the time of the treaty of Paris held possession of only one port and the entire people of the Philippines except Manila, being in possession of the Philippine republic, Spain could give no title to the United States.

PROBLEM TO SOLVE.

President's Commission to the Philippines Expected to Result in Much Good.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—The commission which the president has decided to appoint to proceed to the Philippines will not be subject to the confirmation of the United States senate, but will be named under reserved authority of the president. It is not expected to commit the United States government to the independence of the natives, nor is it to frame a scheme of government for the islands, as was the case with the Hawaiian commission. Undoubtedly, however, the commissioners will unofficially confer with the natives and advise with the military authorities, it being felt here that much of their Experience and Qualifications

will be valuable counsellors in the conditions now existing. It is believed that the natives can be kept from hostilities until the arrival of the commission at Manila, and then it is hoped that the best results will follow the visit, including the reassurance of the natives upon many points as to what they are now doubtful. It will also be perceived that by the appointment of the commission the president is granting the appeal of some of the best Filipinos, who are confident that both sides will be enlightened by its creation, and declare that the United States government will be shown that the

for government has been underestimated, while the Filipino people server will be induced to have patience before insisting upon self-government.

So far as can be gathered, the president has not completed the list of the commissioners. Supposing that he includes General Otis and Admiral Dewey, he would add the names of President Schurman of Cornell university and Professor Worcester of Ann Arbor. He has under consideration the name of Charles Denby as the last member, but as Mr. Denby is engaged with the war investigating commission at present he has not positively decided to appoint him.

Filipino Start for Washington.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 17.—The three ministers of Aguinaldo, who arrived here on Saturday, have departed for Washington, where they will confer with President McKinley regarding the government of the Philippines.

SOME GOOD, SOME BAD.

Colonel Roosevelt Gives His Opinion of Army Beef.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 16.—Governor Roosevelt stated that he had written a letter to Major General Miles concerning the character of the meat furnished during the Santiago campaign. General Miles at Washington has made reference to the receipt of that letter. The governor, so colonel of the regiment of Rough Riders, submitted a report to the war department in September last which contained practically the same account of the condition of the beef as was set forth in his letter to General Miles. The governor, in his letter, stated that four kinds of beef were furnished to the Rough Riders from the time they left Florida for Cuba, until their return.

The first of these was corned beef, its quality was good. The salt in the meat seasoned the other articles of food and the men found it quite palatable. The second kind was canned roast beef, which was without flavor and taste and would turn the stomachs of those who ate it. It was stringy and tough and without any qualities which would render it a fit article of food. There was not one way in which the men could eat it, and that was by making it into a stew. Fresh vegetables were not always obtainable, and stews could be made only occasionally. When the Rough Riders left Tampa, a large quantity of specially prepared beef was placed aboard the transport on which they embarked. This beef was quarters and was stored in the forward end of the transport. It had been prepared by some special process, well known to Colonel Roosevelt, but supposed to be with some form of solution. The transport was out from Tampa but a few hours when this beef began to smell. The stench was so great that the men avoided the forward end of the transport as much as possible. The meat could not be eaten and it was thrown into the ocean. A fourth kind of beef was served to the Rough Riders at Santiago, after July 25. It was of a good quality and was brought to Cuba on special steamers with refrigerating facilities. Governor Roosevelt's official report was accompanied by reports of the quartermaster and surgeon and the several captains.

MAY RESULT IN DISMISSAL

President Decides to Courtmartial General Eagan.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—President McKinley announced to the cabinet at its regular meeting that he had determined to courtmartial General Eagan. Secretary Alger was not present at the cabinet meeting, but with Adjutant General Corbin was at the White House in conference with the president on the subject just prior to the cabinet session.

While it was not definitely stated after the cabinet meeting what specific action would be made against General Eagan, it is understood that the specific charge on which he will be tried will be conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. The personnel of the court has not been given out, but the action being held to be not a cabinet matter, but one that rested between the president and the secretary of war.

It is stated, and with some degree of probability, that of the eight judges upon the courtmartial of General Miles five will be selected Porto Rican interviews, the remaining three ignored by his superior officers. It is well known that Alger and Miles are at daggers drawn, and the supposition is that Alger will insist that the general of the army shall be called to account.

The penalty for the offense with which General Eagan probably will be tried, conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, is one of the most severe known in the army, being dismissal. The exact words are as follows:

"Any officer who is convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from the service."

ROAST FOR THE RAILROADS

Annual Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission Severely Criticised.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—The annual report of the interstate commerce commission has been given out, and is the commission says: In previous reports to congress, attention has been called to the vital respects in which the act has proved defective and inadequate. Some of its provisions were early seen to be imperfect when they were so open to certain and ambiguous as to give rise to different interpretations, resulting finally in authoritative construction by the supreme court of the United States.

Meanwhile the situation has become intolerable, both from the standpoint of the public and the carriers. Tariffs are constantly changing, discriminations constantly occur, the price at which transportation can be obtained is fluctuating and uncertain. Railroad managers are distrustful of each other and shippers all the while are complaining and uncured by their competitors. The volume of traffic is so unusual as to frequently exceed the capacity of equipment, yet the contest for tonnage seems never relaxed. Enormous sums are spent in purchasing business and secret rates accorded for below the standard of published charges. The general public gets little benefit from these reductions, for concessions are multiplied to the carrier shippers. All the augments the advantages of large capital and tends to the injury and often to the ruin of smaller dealers. These are not only matters of gravest consequence to the business welfare of the country, but they concern in no less degree the higher interests of public morality.

News From Johannesberg Censored.

CAPE TOWN, Jan. 17.—Telegrams from Johannesburg are censored. TO DEFEAT JOHNSON

REPUBLICAN OPPOSITION IN NORTH DAKOTA AGREES ON A PLAN.

Supporters of Field Candidates to Caucus and Name One of Their Men—Results in Other States—First Ballot in Pennsylvania Leaves the Result Very Much in Doubt—Burrows Chosen in Michigan, Hale in Maine, and Depew in New York.

BISMARCK, Jan. 18.—Forty-five Republicans have signed an agreement to settle the senatorship in a caucus of the supporters of the six field candidates, Marshall, Little, La Moure, Hanna, Cooper and McCumber. Six more will sign, making a total strength of 51. Either Marshall or Little will be the caucus nominee. If this agreement is carried out, and there is every reason to believe so, Johnson is beaten and either Marshall or Little will be the next United States senator from North Dakota, these being recognized as the two strongest field candidates. The number of signers to the agreement is five more than enough to elect.

BISMARCK, N. D., Jan. 18.—On first separate ballot in the house of representatives for United States senator the vote stood: Johnson 30, LaMoure 8, Cooper 3, Hanna 4, Marshall 9, Roach 8, McCumber 5, and Little 4. There was no change from the caucus vote. Populists voted for the present Democratic senator, W. N. Roach.

In the senate Johnson received 9 votes, Hanna 2, Cooper 1, LaMoure 3, Little 3, Marshall 2, McCumber 2, Roach 8.

LOOKS LIKE A DEADLOCK.

Result of the Contest in Pennsylvania Very Much in Doubt.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Jan. 18.—The end of the first day's fight in the battle for United States senator leaves the result very much in doubt. It is Senator Quay against the field and the indications are that there will be a deadlock lasting some days at least. The Republicans are divided between Mr. Quay and seven "favorite sons," and the Democrats are united on George A. Jenks. Senator Quay's total strength in both houses on the first ballot was 119 votes, 16 less than the number necessary to elect on joint ballot, assuming that the full membership of 254 is present.

DEPEW NOW A SENATOR.

New York Orator Receives a Majority Vote in Both Houses.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 18.—The senate and assembly in their respective chambers voted for United States senator: In the assembly Chauncey M. Depew, Rep., received 84 votes, and Edward Murphy, Jr., Dem., 60 votes.

In the senate Depew received 27 and Murphy 23 votes.

Burrows Again Chosen.

LANSING, Jan. 18.—The formal vote upon election of United States senator was taken in the house of representatives shortly after noon. Senator Julius C. Burrows received 83 votes; Daniel H. Campan (chairman of the Democratic state central committee) was given the complimentary vote of the eight Democrats and three Populists. In the senate the vote was 32 for Burrows and 5 for Campan.

Senator Hale's Fourth Term.

AUGUSTA, Me., Jan. 18.—Eugene Hale was re-elected senator by the state legislature in joint session. The coming term will be Mr. Hale's fourth term in the senate. Two Republicans were not present and quite a large number refrained from voting as an expression of their disapproval of Mr. Hale's course on expansion and in regard to the peace treaty.

The Nebraska Vote.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 18.—The vote on United States senator was as follows: Allen, fusion, 58; Hayward, 38; Webster, 10; Thompson, 7; Field, 4; Davidson, 1; Lambertsen, 3; Valentine, 3; Hinchaw, 2; Little, Cornish, Haines, Martin and Van Dyne, 1 each; Reese, Majors, Adams and Foss, 3 each. All are Republicans except Allen, who received the solid fusion vote.

First Vote in Utah.

SALT LAKE, Jan. 18.—The first vote for United States senator was taken in the legislature during the afternoon. The senate vote was: McCune 5, King 9, Powers 5, Cannon 2, Nebeker 1, George Sutherland (Rep.) 3, absent 1. The vote in the house was as follows: King 15, McCune 6, Powers 5, Cannon 3, Sutherland 11, absent 1.

Prospect of a Break in Montana.

HELENA, Mon., Jan. 18.—The last senatorial ballot resulted as follows: Conrad 34, Clark 24, Toole 8. Other Democratic and Silver Republican votes scattering. Republicans voted for Goddard. There is a prospect of a break in the deadlock.

Badly Split in Delaware.

DOVER, Del., Jan. 19.—A separate ballot was taken for United States senator in the senate and house. The result was: Senate—Gray (Dem.) 5, Addicks (Rep.) 4, Miles (Rep.) 2, Greeley (Dem.) 1. Handy (Dem.) 1, Dupont (Rep.) 1. House—Addicks 11, Dupont 9, Gray 8, Hand 2, Greeley 2.

Lodge Rewards Himself.

BOSTON, Jan. 18.—Each branch of the legislature balloted for United States senator during the day and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, the Republican nominee, received heavy majorities in both houses.

Senator Cockrell Re-elected.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Jan. 18.—Francis Marion Cockrell was re-elected to his fifth term in the United States senate by the legislature, the two houses voting separately. The election will be ratified by both houses in joint session.

Beveridge Elected.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 18.—Albert J. Beveridge was elected United States senator by the general assembly.

CHAPTER III.

Maynard's head was still sore when he turned out for reveille roll call the next morning. He had made ineffectual search for his conqueror, had questioned the sentry at the east front and the lieutenant who brought the town guests ant to the hop, but no such person as he described had been seen by any of them. He went to his quarters and bathed his aching head, and then he had to return to the hop-room. Mrs. Turner rallied him upon his pallor and his utter lack of devotion, and finding him still in somber mood had changed her tactics and adopted the anxious and sympathetic role. Surely something must have gone amiss with him, she said. But Maynard would admit nothing. He was dazed by the strange adventure. He could not—he would not speak of it to a soul.

What would not be the excitement in garrison were he to announce that a stranger, a civilian, was under Miss Baird's window at 10 o'clock, calling her by her Christian name and tossing pebbles at her window to attract her attention! He was glad of the detail which took him with his little patrol to town the following morning. The duty on which he was sent was one no officer relished and it should not have been thrust upon him, the junior of the regiment, nor would it have been had the colonel known where the adjutant had detailed. The duty involved visiting prospective bonding halls and breathing in search of the missing men and being shamed and insulted by stutternly women and heroical ladies flaying their parasites for the time being on the bounty of the half stupefied soldiers. Yes Maynard wanted to get away from his engagement with Mrs. Turner. He wanted to think quietly as he rode townward at the head of his little detachment, with the yellow ambulance bringing up the rear, how or whether he could tell Miss Baird he was a witness, through his sense of hearing, at least, to what took place the night before, but he had by no means made up his mind when they entered the outskirts of Cheyenne and riding briskly to a big stable yard near the center of the town left their horses there with one man in charge, and then, armed with their revolvers, started on their search. No good could come of asking questions. The populace of those days was always in league with the deserter or absentee without leave as long as he had money. Then not infrequently would they turn the poor fellow over to the marshal or sheriff and get half the reward then offered for the apprehension of soldier renegades. To load them drunk into a hack, turn them over at the guardhouse and claim the entire reward of $20 per man would have been bad generalship. The hand of every soldier would have been against the traitor from that time on. They would have killed the goose that laid the golden egg.

Maynard had an old sergeant with him who knew the lay and scent of every haunt of the hibalons among the boys in bine, and he led on, silent, relentless, unerring. Five minutes' brisk tramp brought them to a combination concert hall and gambling house. One or two lounged in front, at sight of the coming patrol, darted inside, and when the sergeant reached the glazed doors they were bolted. "Quick," he ordered the corporal, "take Schultz and Meyer and get around to the rear door. Nab every one of our fellows that comes out." Then he banged on the front door for admission.

But the "fellows" didn't come. It was full a minute before the sergeant's summons was answered. Then a head was poked out of an upper window, a head on a broad grin, and an oily, Mexican voice demanded: "What the devil is wanted? There's no game until tonight."

"The game we want is under this roof, Maloney, and you know it," was the sergeant's surly reply. "Now, we don't mean to break in; neither do they break out. It's only a reasonable fine and a few days' fatigue duty that'll be gotting for going back quietly with us now, but it'll be a dollar an hour for every hour we have to wait, and we can camp right here until they're starved out if need be. So tell the gang to be wise and come at once."

By this time a little crowd had begun to gather. Maynard, silently awaiting the result of the sergeant's appeal and trusting to his larger experience in such matters, was pondering over the legal aspect of the case and wondering whether Wyoming laws would be very savage at his exposure in case he forced an entrance in search of his runaway troopers when he noticed that the glazed doors of a somewhat similar establishment across the way were swinging slowly open, and that a knot of curious and attentive spectators huddled close behind them, yet keeping within shelter and as much as possible out of sight, evidently desirous of escaping observation. Closer at hand the rapidly arriving populace began to indulge in chaff and facetious remarks, much to the exuberance of the sergeant and the comfort of the Irishman aloft, who, recognizing sympathetic souls in the crowd, stuck his head still farther out and exchanged jubilant greeting with cronies on the sidewalk.

"How much a head will ye give me, sergeant, for preservin their lives? Sure Hamilto's whisky across the way there would turn the stomach out ur a brass monkey. It's rewarded heavily I ought to be. But I'm wastin words wid ye, sergeant. Let the liftanant spake. Sure he looks like a liberal, high minded gentlemen, whioh ye don't, sergeant. Sure it's Mr. Maynard I know, and ye mustn't be givin it away, boys; but it's him knows ivery room on the premises and wins his month's pay twice over at Scolly's table, don't ye, now, liftenant?"

The street crowd shouted its approbation of this ably and yelled with delight when Maloney was shoved to one side and another face on a feminine head was thrust beside that of the first occupant. It was fiery, or, rather, orange red, while the eyes were bleary and the nose purple. Maloney was the chartered boniface of the establishment and this his brawny helpmate. In the cosmopolitan make up of the populace of Cheyenne of those days the Irish were scarce. Even John Chinaman was seldom to be seen. The crowd was typically frontier American and gifted with all the American's passion for personal liberty and propensity for fun at any expense. Here was a squad of regulars, with a trig young West Pointer in command, seeking to compass the arrest of an equal number of renegade comrades and balked in the attempt by the very fact that they represented the force and majesty of the federal government. Had the offenders or offenders been guilty of any crime against the person or property of a fellow citizen of Cheyenne they (the crowd) would have smashed in those fragile glazed doors and nabbed the culprits instanter, but as it was simply Uncle Sam who was outraged and defied only their visibilities were appealed to. It was fun to contemplate the humiliation of the armed force sent by the government to reclaim its own, provided it could be done without recourse to invasion of private property. Maloney's master's gambling hell was fair game, open to any citizen when his master chose, but forbidden to the law abiding at other times and to Uncle Sam when he had no search warrant.

Then this crowd began to cheer Mrs. Maloney and call for a speech, and more of the populace arrived. The absurdity of the situation was potent to Maynard from the start, but the sergeant was fiery and wrathful. His little squad was being elbowed and crowded and uncomfortable roundabout, not in angry threat or schase, but in jovial fashion. Mrs. Maloney, nothing loath, had begun her harangue, and her voice had the carrying power of a rifle. Maynard saw the hopelessness of the situation and stepped to the sergeant's side. "Get your men together at once," he said. "We must pull out of this." The sergeant looked astonished, hesitated a moment, then said, "All right, sir, if you say so," and hustled round to the back door after the corporal. In silence the patrol then hored a way through the laughing, jeering, chaffing throng and started up the street. "Where to, sir?" said the sergeant sulkily. He hated to retire and had had no such spoon the rights and prooses me property of other men. Maynard had very positive convictions for a youngster as to the sacred nature of the claims of Uncle Sam. So long as only chaff and ridicule were the weapons of the populace his equanimity had not been disturbed, but now he blazed with wrath. A yell of delight went up from some of the throng at sight of the motley troop ranging into line 100 yards away, but even then and there words were not indulged at once how wild and how serious a prank was this and how widespread might be the havoc of its consequences. Instantly two or three men started for the young officer, shouting: "Don't notice it, liuetenant. Don't do anything. We'll get the horses."

Very possibly if Maynard had halted his party then and there or turned back and marched it into the adjoining street the wiser among the citizens could have persuaded the offenders of the magnitude of their sin and the horses would have been restored with rough but profuse frontier compliments. But the blood of the patriot was up. Here at least was something it had a right to resent, and all in an instant Maynard and his little party started on the jump for the despoilers. It was a bitter cold day, as has been said. The troopers were in heavy overcoats and shoes, for caps and gloves, and they could not make a sprint despite their best efforts. It would have been easy enough for the riders to dash away, but all the devil of frontier fun, recklessness and whisky was at work, and clinging, as some of them had to do, to their plunging and excited steeds, down they came, following the lead of a jovial tough who had mounted Maynard's own horse. Luckily the leader had no spurs, and the other horses seemed to recognize his master as the foremost of the familiar bivouacs, for despite the furious urging and kicking of the tall townsman on his back Rienzi came smoothly and plunging straight to Maynard's side, and the lieutenant, never laying hand upon the rein, vaulted to the joker's place in a second. Another second and both his sinewy hands had grasped the rider's bost and had toppled—hurled the bearded most ont of saddle to the icy ground. It was all done so quickly that no one realized what had happened until, as the other horse seemed instinctively to halt and cluster about their leader and the other troopers to seize their owners and the momentary riders to tumble or throw themselves from their seats, it was seen that the ringleader of the affair lay prostrate as he had plunged, his head turned to one side and a dark stream of blood oozing from underneath.

Some one had set up a sympathetic cheer as Maynard's exploit. So long as all remained on the same footing the crowd was a unit in its desire to have fun at the expense of the soldiers, but when its bolder spirits appeared in addis they forfeited the full measure of the sympathy of a fickle populace, and Maynard's deft and skillful and marvelously quick settlement of the question won their admiration. For the same, there was a prompt rush to aid and lift the prostrate man, a task none too easy, for he proved to be a tall, very powerfully built and utterly a dead weight as the hands of those who bore him. The blood was streaming from a jagged gash on the right side of the forehead, and it was evident at a glance that the contusion and shock had been severe. The rollicking mood of the crowd had suddenly changed, and no one man they flocked densely about the central figures. Maynard, who, turning his horse over to the care of one of the troopers and directing the sergeant to lead the patrol a little distance away, was now busy in the effort to revive his late tormentor.

"Does anybody know where he lives—who he is?" he inquired as he knelt and began bathing away the blood with his handkerchief and his pocket sympathetic soul.

"He's only been here a few days, liuetenant," answered one of the throng, a stalwart fellow in a buffalo overcoat and wolfskin cap. "He's been playing at the Empire, where you were a few minutes ago, since Monday. First off he quit winner two or three times and treated liberal, but luck turned on him. I reckon he's about cleaned out. Didn't show up at the table last night at all. Of course I'm sorry the man is so badly hurt, but—"

"Oh, you're all right, liuetenant! Nobody's going to blame you in the matter. You were all rips for a little fun, but had no idea those fellers would be such d——d fools as to try to steal your horses." And here the fur clad giant cast a disdainful glance at one ar two af the would be cavaliers, the only ones of the lately hilarious party to remain and hang shamefacedly about their late leader. "You fellows were super enough to follow this man up and be, triumphing over the comments and questions hazarded by others in the crowd. "Don't you know the rules?"

"Nothin more's what he told me," sheepishly answered one of the two, with copious libation of sacred juice and a shrug of his broad shoulders. "Said he'd been in the San Juan country—had made a stake and a raise—had been robbed of most of it in Denver by fellows who had run up here. There was a rooster with him two or three days ago who called him Boston, and he 'lowed that was the name he generally went by."

Somebody allowed a way to the side of the victim and his sanitary nurses, a glass of whisky in his hand—the only restorative almost sure to be obtainable on the frontier—and Maynard forced a few drops between his patient's teeth. "That won't help, liuetenant," chuckled a bystander. "Within short of four fingers will begin to tell on this rooster. He's copper lined, he is," whereat the assemblage snickered. Maynard repeated the dose, and a fluttering sigh was the speedy response. The sponge was actively plied. More whisky was administered, this time with less diffidence, and then the forbes hand sought to find the battered head, but fell back limply. "Open his shirt, liuetenant," suggested the man who knew him as Boston, and the young officer's hand sought the heavy muffler that was twisted carelessly about the neck. A coarse blue flannel shirt was revealed, was parted at the throat, and then a package in oiled silk, hanging by a silken cord, was found, and then came a document in like envelope. It peeped into the dull pupil, felt the pulse and placed his hand over the heart. "My office is only a few steps away. Lift him up and bring him there," said he, in the quiet, authoritative tone of the professional who had dwelt long among men most of whose dead he had attended immediately before or after their sudden dissolution and had seen their buried as they fell, with their boots on. The order was obeyed in silence. A shutter was lifted from its hinges at the nearest saloon, the patient was hoisted thereon and the march began. Maynard stopped a moment.

"Leave Schultz here with my horse, sergeant, and go with the other man together what you can of the absentees. There must be quite a diversion in our favor. I'll join you at the Empire presently."

A discontented crowd hovered at the foot of the doctor's stairs. That level headed personage had ordered onteverybody but Buffalo Coat and the man who knew Lieutenant Boston, but he opened to Maynard's knock. "Come in, liuetenant," he promptly said, as soon as he saw the face at the door. "You gave this big fellow a sharp lesson, but I fancy he deserved it. These gentlemen" (here he winked angrily at the officer) "have given me the particulars. No," he continued, "there's no fractures, no serious concussion. He'll come around presently. All that's likely to be necessary is a quiet room and complete rest for a few days. We have no public hospital as yet. The coroner's office ordinarily is all that is necessary."

"Would you mind calling a doctor?" he said.

"Will you kindly see that he gets every attention, doctor, and send the bill to me at the fort? My name's Maynard," said the officer. "Now I have to join my men, and can be of no further use or service here," whereupon the two shook hands and parted.

Buffalo Coat followed to the door. "You're a d——d good fellow, lieutenant," said he, "and I'm sorry the gang behaved as they did. It was the sergeant they were after, not you. He's right, too, only he gets huffy when they get, you and their men are covered. Now I'll let you into the whereabouts of your straying men. Hamilton's, some in the Empire, lying drunk in the back room, but there's a raft of 'em across the road at Hamilton's, some in plain clothes. Their money's almost given out, and he'll be glad to get rid of 'em."

Maynard thanked the man rather coldly and impatiently, too, though he could hardly say why, mounted his horse, overtook the patrol a few blocks away and imparted the tidings to his sergeant. Two minutes later they had dismounted again in a side street, moored and followed no longer, though the populace still hovered curiously about bramoon doors. The corporal with them was sent through a back alley to the rear yard and doorway of Hamilton's place. Maynard and his party suddenly appeared in the immediately open front, and with the tacit consent of the proprietor began their search of the premises, up stairs and down.

From under beds and out of closets they dragged three of the absentees: then they invaded the cellar. Almost immediately there was a rush from a dark corner, a crash of boxes and barrels upon the resounding floor. The sergeant's lantern was shivered to bits. There followed a scuffle of blows, cusses and struggles. Two dim figures bounded away up the steps, and Maynard, striving vainly to follow, stumbled over a prostrate form, and then, suddenly conscious of a sharp pang in the side, found his search-ing hand dripping with his own blood and everything growing dim and dark about him.

Before he had finished bandaging patient number one Dr. Terry was hurriedly summoned to Hamilin's by the report that lieutenant Maynard had been stabbed to death.

There was a telegraph line from Cheyenne to the adjutant's office at Fort Russell in those days. Orderly call had just sounded and the adjutant was still at his work when in came the soldier operator with white, scared face. "Lieutenant Beth started—two colored men into the adjutant's room, the major for his house.

"For God's sake keep it quiet as you can," were the latter's words, "at least until I've had time to break it to my wife."

IMMORTAL ROBBIE.

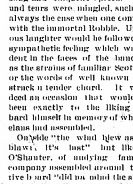
Scotchmen Celebrate the Anniversary of the Birth of Their Poet.

TOASTS WERE MANY AND ELOQUENT

Sumptuous Banquet--Scotch Airs--Honorary Members Elected.

Burns received high honor last night—honor such as only a Scotchman can give to a fellow Scot. Success is the word that aptly describes the result of the efforts on the part of the Crookston Scotchmen to celebrate the 140th anniversary of the birth of Scotland's most beloved poet. Scotchmen are usually undemonstrative but last night the barriers, so to speak, were broken down and the pent up feelings and emotions of the descendants of Bruce and Wallace burst forth in song and eloquent speech. Smiles and tears were mingled, such as is always the case when one communes with the immortal Robbie. Upon various laughter would be followed by a sympathetic lechup which was evident in the faces of the banqueters as the strains of familiar Scotch airs or the words of well known poems struck a tender chord. It was indeed an occasion that would have been exactly to the liking of the bard himself in memory of whom the clans had assembled.

On'side "the wind blew as 'twad blawn, its best" but like Tam O'Shanter of undying fame, the company assembled around the festive board "did na mind the storm a widdle." "For he's a jolly good fellow" was the song most frequent. ly sung by the revelers. It seemed to express the feeling of every one present toward all others. Each one seemed to treat his neighbor as if he were "his ancient, trusty "crony," and hence "the mirth and fun grew fast and furious."



CHIEF JOHN R. MCKINNON

Could one have peered through the blinding mirthful storm that was raging outside, he would have seen rosy-fingered Morn flushing the East with the dawn light ere the banqueters left the hall.

The Scotchmen of the valley had been tendered the freedom of the city. Many of them spent part of the day at the Columbia club rooms, where the clans all gathered when night come down and at 9:30 marched in a body to Hotel Crookston where Landlords Scott and Lyeun had prepared for their guests one of those sumptuous feasts well known to frequenters of that hotel. In a few moments the doors of the spacious dining room were thrown open and the company entered the banquet hall to the music of "The Campbells are Coming," played by Miss Jessie Morehill, pianist, and Miss Bertha Samson, violinist. These two Scotch lassies enlivened the proceedings and interested the pleasure by frequently during the evening playing Scotch airs. On the piano was a picture of Burns seated at a table in his scantily furnished home, reading. At the further end of the room the wall was draped with the union jack and the stars and stripes.

The menu was made up of six courses, the dishes being those familiar to dwellers in old Caledonia.

WINES. CIGARS

Grace was said by Mr. Scott of Argyle. Unfortunately the Haggis, "great chieftain o' the puddin' race" was in some way spoiled so it did not appear. The next best thing, however, to actually having a Haggis was to hear Burns' description of one, and John Crawford read this poem in a very entertaining manner. Society was the feature of the hour and a half spent in eating the delicious viands that were served, and served in first-class style. The brand of cigars furnished was the "Bonnie Jean," made especially for this occasion by H. F. Brown.

The dinner being finished, the Scotch lassies rendered "Coming Through The Rye," but soon their voices were drowned by the chorus of voices that burst forth. A well rendered duet, "Ye Banks and Braes O'Doonie Doone," by Messrs. Scott and Robertson of Argyle, followed. Thos. Johnstone rendered one of his very Scotchy songs, which was well received. Captain Couvrette recited "Tam O'. Shanter." He caught the spirit of the piece and was frequently interrupted by applause. As an encore he sang "Half-Past Ten," which song ended with "the fun just begins at half-past ten."

At this point in the program John R. McKinnon, president of the temporary organization, in a few well chosen words welcomed the guests of the evening, assuring them that Crookston was honored in having within its walls such a concourse of Scotchmen. He explained that many were unavoidably away because they had not received invitations but that the local committee had written to all the Scots in the valley that were known in Crookston. The Secretary, Hugh Robertson, was called upon by the president to read the constitution that had been drafted and this document was approved and all those present that were eligible signed their names to it.

The organization will be known as the Red River Valley Caledonian Club, and will hold its regular meetings once a year on January 25th. These officers were then elected: John R. McKinnon, president; Dr. N. M. Watson, first vice-president; William Davidson, second vice-president; James Nesbit, third vice-president; A. D. McPhee, fourth vice-president; James Scott, fifth vice-president; Dr. McEachran, sixth vice-president; Dr. Spence of Hallock, seventh vice-president; Dr. McKinnon, eighth vice-president, Hugh Robertson, secretary and John Cromb, treasurer. Dr. Watson then proposed a toast to the club, which was drunk all standing. It was right here that some of the more enthusiastic Scotchmen who wished to preserve some of the old customs, proposed that the name of president be changed to chief and that the vice-presidents be called henchmen, there being the terms in use among the clans. After a short discussion the change was made, so that it now reads: Chief McKinnon, Henchmen Watson, et. al.

Dr. N. M. Watson of Red Lake Falls was the toastmaster of the evening and he made a most excellent one, being graceful in his introductions and witty in his remarks. The intellectual feast opened with an address by the toastmaster himself "In Memory of Burns." His words were eloquent and appreciative. He recalled a few of the more important facts of the poet's life, holding that Burns was the national poet because he selected his themes from nature and acts in lowly life. "He is," the speaker closed his remarks in saying, "the property of mankind." A height to Burns." And it was drunk right heartily. Thos. Johnston was called for one of his inimitable songs and he gave it in such a way that he was encored. His second selection was "Bonnets of Blue."

J. B. McCull, who possesses a fine baritone voice, sang two solos, one an encore. "My Nannie's awa'" and "Sweet Afton."

"Our Guests" was the next toast responded to by Alex McKinnon. He said that he had known almost all the guests and that they were among the best residents of the valley and that he hoped to greet them in Crookston many times in the future. F. E. Hamilton, of Fisher, by request sang a solo he had not seen before but his execution was so good that he had to sing again.

"The Day and a' Wha' Honor It" was the next toast proposed and A. D. Stephens responded in his usual clever manner. Though a Scandinavian blood he yet claimed to be related to the Scotch. In an elaborate and exhaustive discussion he attempted to prove his position and if he did not make his point he at least proved that he was worthy to be a Scotchman. In figuring out why he had been selected to speak he came to the conclusion that it was due to the thought expressed by Burns:

O' wad some pow'r the giftie gie us
To see oursels as ithers see us.

The Anglo-Saxon race, and that included himself as well as Scotchmen, was the dominant race of the world. Mr. Stephens was no more than seated before Dr. McEachran proposed that the eloquent speaker be made an honorary member of the club, and the motion prevailed. Mr. Stephens in thanking the club said that for once in his life an unexpressed wish had been satisfied, and added "I have never seen so many men together who could borrow money at either the First National or the Merchants National bank if they wanted it."

The idea of electing honorary members seemed to be the prevailing idea and before the club got through the following were honored in this way: J. W. Wheeler, R. A. Wilkinson, R. F. Kelso, H. McLean Dewart, L. C. Simmons and N. S. Gordon. Mr. Wheeler responded by telling a witty story. Mr. Wilkinson gave a panegeric on the acts of the Scotch race; Mr. Kelso said that while he appreciated the honor given him he wished it understood that he still preserved his identity as a representative of the land "where the grass grows green"; the editor of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL and his scribe responded briefly; Mr. Simons claimed to have been born in Glenroe, the name of a town in Scotland.

Editor J. B. McCall, J. Crawford and Dr. Robertson next gaves much appreciated song, "Willie Brewed a Pek o' Maut." Mr. Purvis in his toast, "The Land o' Cakes," gave some very interesting reminiscences of walks through his native land, when he was a boy, with Englishmen of note. His summary of eminent Scotchmen showed that the land o' cakes has furnished the world some of its greatest men.

Archie McKinnon sang a song in Gaelic and in the chorus all the Highlan men present joined. Mr. Brownlee, of the McIntosh Tribune, responded to the toast "The Land of Our Adoption." He said that in the commingling of the lings in the decentnose the great thought of the present friendship between Great Britian and the United States was expressed. Dr. Robertson was the next entertainer and he indeed delighted his audience with his two solos, one in response to an encore, "Larkinow, and "The Leird." In speaking for "The Ladies" N. Campbell said that Scotchmen were noted the world over for devotion to their mothers, sisters, wives and sweethearts and to this he attributed the strength of the Scotch character.

The Crookston quartet rendered in a pleasing manner Burns' celebrated war-ode, "Bannockburn." Stanzing and warmly grasping each other's hands this jolly company of Burns' admirers sang and sang over again "Auld Lang Syne."

Votes of thanks were extended to Dr. Watson for the able manner in which he acted as toastmaster, to Landlords Scott and Lyeun for their appetizing menu, to the waiters for their excellent service, to the executive committee for their painstaking labors and to the Scotch lassies who furnished such delightful music.

It was, taken for all in all, one of the biggest and most successful things of the kind that has ever occurred in Crookston. The hospitality was unbounded, the sociability most general, the music inspiring, the toasts eloquent and witty. The genial, sympathetic, poetic spirit of Burns was indeed present.

HUGH R. ROBERTSON, SECRETARY.

A Burns celebration! The happy thought flitted across the fertile mind of some resident of Crookston who hails from the land of the heather beyond the ocean. The idea was communicated to others who comm among their ancestors those "wha hae wi' Wallace bled" and soon a conclave of Scotchmen of the Queen City were discussing, not whether it were better to celebrate, but how they might most fittingly celebrate the day when Robbie Burns first saw the light of day. It was finally decided that a local organization would be formed and that this organization would issue invitations to the Scotchmen throughout the valley to attend a banquet to be given at the Hotel Crookston the evening of Jan. 25. Favorable answers were received from a hundred or more of the enthusiastic admirers of the Scottish poet. Some of these answers coming from Highlanders and written in the Gaelic required special interpretation. Meetings of the club have been held once or twice every week for the last month and a half, for those who count Scotia as their native land were determined that nothing would be left undone that would contribute to the success of last night's celebration. The temporary organization was John R. McKinnon, president, John Cromb, treasurer, and Hugh Robertson, secretary.

It is indeed refreshing and encouraging to see a large gathering of men bent on doing honor to the Peasant Poet of Scotland, Burns, for, as Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie says, "the test not he too many lovers of the best things in these pessimistic days, when to have the power of loving anything is beginning to be a great and rare gift."

A poet is preeminently a seeker after and the revealer of truth and he who renders homage to the great Scottish singer renders homage to Him who nineteen hundred years ago said "I am the Truth."

It is a fact, perhaps hard to explain —eternal verities have to be felt, they cannot always be understood—that Robbie Burns is of all bards the most beloved, especially by Scotchmen.

He is Nature's poet. No academic —which too often is none other than artificial—training assisted in his development. He "discovered very early the hours, the places, the experiences, the moods which enriched and inspired him, and having discovered them he pursued and possessed them. This was his education." He chose his themes from the commonest things of life but he discerned a beauty and a meaning in them hitherto hidden. The world had passed unnoticed the "Wee, modest, crimson-tipped flow'r," but Burns met it and the mountain daisy became immortal.

His universal sympathy, not only with mankind but even with the beasts is one of his distinguishing characteristics and the fact that man appreciates this sympathetic quality in the poet shows that man too in his better moments and deepest nature sympathizes with universal nature. Burns voices the thoughts of men when they are at their best and this is why the Scotch and others have such an affection for him. One of his most beautiful poems is occasioned by his "Cruel Coulter" passing through the cell of the mouse. He feels for the animals out in the storm.

"I thought me on the ourie cattle
Or silly sheep, wha bide this brattle
O' winter war."

He even pities "Auld Nickie-ben" where he says:

"Tis wae to think upo' yon den.
Even for your sake."

Other Scottish writers there have been, able and eminent, but none, save Burns, confined himself exclusively to themes connected with his native land. He was patriotic in a marked degree. He sings:

"O Scotia! my dear, my native soil
For whom my warmest wish to Heavenis sent.

And again:

"The rough bar Thistle spreading wide
Among the bearded bear,
I turned my weeding-clips aside
And spared the symbol dear."

NEW HARDWARE FIRM.

Bjoin Hradware Company Sell Their Stock to T. O. Thompson.

It has been rumored for some time that a new firm of hardware dealers was to be formed but the idea did not materialize till last Thursday night. T. O. Thomson, who has been in business in Crookston before has purchased the stock of hardware belonging to the Bjoin Hardware company, and he will open up for business in the Adams block. Mr. Thompson joins with him in the business Mr. A. O. Busteral. Both members of the firm are well known in Crookston and vicinity and the new concern will undoubtedly do a large amount of business.

Sousa's Band.

Sousa is the greatest conductor of the greatest band in existence. The news of his coming arouses enthusiasm among the thousands who look upon his organization as the representative of its kind, and Sousa's magnetic marches as the marches of America. The title of "The March King" is bestowed upon Sousa by the unanimous consent of thousands of music lovers is justly applied. By all odds the most important musical figure of the decade is John Philip Sousa, and with three operas and a military concert band of his own, "The March King's" name graces many programs. Sousa has arranged to give a grand concert in this city at an early date in the transcontinental tour of his band.

Daily Train Service Resumed.

As a result of the railroad commission's investigation into the discontinuance of the daily service along the St. Hilaire line the local office of the Great Northern received orders from headquarters to run the St. Hilaire train daily. Friday last the daily service began again. It is probable that the carrying of the United States mail had considerable to do with the change back to the daily train.

BABY'S SMOOTH, FAIR SKIN

A Grateful Mother Writes this Letter—Tells all about Her Troubles when Baby Broke out with Scrofula Sores.

"At the age of two months, my baby began to have sores break out on her right cheek. We used all the external applications that we could think or hear of, but in vain. The sores spread all over one side of his face. We consulted a physician and tried his medicine, and in a week the sore was gone. But to my surprise in two weeks more another scrofulous lump was spreared on baby's arm. It grew worse and worse, and when he was three months old, I began giving him Hood's Sarsaparilla. I also took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and before the first bottle was finished, the sores were well and have never returned. He is now four years old, but he has never had any sign of those scrofulous sores since he was cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, for which I feel very grateful. We now wear his good health and smooth, fair skin to this great medicine." MRS. S. B. WHORREY, Farmington, Delaware. Get only Hood's.

PAYNE IS NAMED.

Succeeds Dingley as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The speaker of the house has announced the appointment of Mr. Payne (Rep., N. Y.) to the chairmanship of ways and means committee to succeed Mr. Dingley, Mr. Richardson (Dem., Tenn.) to the vacancy on ways and means created by the retirement of Governor McMillan of Tennessee, and Mr. Crumpacker (Rep., Ind.) on the committee on census.

The appointment of Mr. Payne carries with it the position of floor leader of the majority.

CONTROL THE SOUDAN.

Nothing Can Be Done Without Consent of the British Government.

CAIRO, Jan. 20.—The Official Gazette publishes a convention between Great Britain and Egypt, relating to the future government of the reconquered Soudan provinces. It provides that the supreme military and civil command shall be vested in one officer, termed the governor general, appointed by the khedival decree, with the consent of Great Britain, and to be removed only by khedival decree, with the consent of Great Britain.

The convention gives the governor general absolute power to make, alter, or abrogate by proclamation, laws, orders or regulations for the government of the Soudan and for the regulation, holding and disposal of property of every description in the Soudan, but all such proclamations must forthwith be notified to the agent of her Britannic majesty at Cairo and to the president of the khedival council. No Egyptian law, decree or executive behalfs to be made or promulgated is to apply to any part of the Soudan, save by the proclamation of the governor general.

EARLY SOLUTION EXPECTED

England and France Getting Together on the Newfoundland Dispute.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—In well informed quarters a representative of the associated Press was informed that a peaceful solution of the Newfoundland question between France and Great Britain is expected very shortly. It means compensation to the French fishermen for the surrender of their rights under the treaty of Utrech.

It is added that if the anticipated arrangement falls through steps will be taken to safeguard British imperial and colonial rights in the future. The British government is desirous of meeting the French government half way in this matter, but it cannot recognize French territorial rights.

French Opinion on the Subject.

PARIS, Jan. 22.—The chamber of deputies during the day resumed debate upon foreign affairs. Referring to Newfoundland the minister of foreign affairs, M. Delcasse, said the French rights there were incontestible, no one questioned them and there was no reason to suppose they would not be respected. The debate was then closed.

TO REDUCE HER ARMY.

Spain Will Retire Marshals and Dispense With Many Officers.

MADRID, Jan. 23.—The ministry at war has decided to abolish the military marshals, to retire half of the unattached generals and to greatly reduce the number of officers on the active list.

New Record on the Stock Exchange.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—The dealings in the Stock Exchange during the day reached the enormous figure of 1,620,612 shares and the total sale of bonds $5,046,000. The sales of stocks were the largest in the history of the exchange, not excepting the record made in 1892 during excitement over Reading issues.

Ella Wheeler's Father Dead.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 23.—Marcus Wheeler, father of the poet, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, died at his home in Westport, near this city. He was 90.

BIG STRIKE AVERTED.

Coal Operators and Miners Agree on a Scale of Wages.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 22.—The coal mining rate for the four large competing states of the country has been agreed to by the joint scale committee of operators and miners, and all that now remains is the adoption by the interstate convention. This will probably be done before night. The sub-committee met to consider the two propositions of the main committee as to the differences in Illinois.

The operators of that state made the work of the committee comparatively easy by receding from their demands for a double standard, and agreeing to the arbitration of the machine differential price.

The report was then adopted by the joint committee.

The adoption of this report will prevent a national strike and any trouble that may occur during the year will be in Hocking Valley, Ohio, and at mines where the operators have refused to be a party to the contract.

Under the new agreement the rates in Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania will be the same as at present. For run of mine coal the rate will be 42 66-100 cents a ton, 1¾ inch coal 66 cents a ton; drivers and outside labor will receive the same wages as at present, and eight hours will constitute a day's work.

In Illinois the run of mine system will prevail. The machine differential is to be arbitrated. The operators want a flat differential of 10 cents a ton between pick and machine mining, and the miners want it reduced to 7 cents.

WOULD BE MUCH SHORTER.

Cleveland Engineer Tells of a New and Practical Canal Route.

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 23.—John F. Lebaron, a well known civil engineer, declares in an interview here that while engaged as an engineer on the old Nicaragua canal he discovered a new and practical route for the interoceanic connection.

"I was one of the engineers," said he, "and became thoroughly acquainted with the territory; and when I discovered the new and practicable route, I at once laid it before the men who were backing the enterprise. But they were pledged to put the canal through on practically the route that had been laid out, and did not act upon my suggestion, and furthermore, did not want anything said of the new and shorter route.

"When congress acted on the matter, and the president designated a commission to go thoroughly over the ground and report on all feasible routes, I at once wrote the commission, saying that if it was desired, I would go to Washington and make known my route. I asked for no commission nor money, and have no other interest in the matter than the public interest. The commission did not see fit to accept my offer, and therefore I have never divulged the route. The commission has passed favorably on the Lull route which, I believe, presents obstacles that make it impracticable."

Mr. Lebaron declares that the route he proposed is much shorter than any other, and would cost $22,000,000 less than any route named. Mr. Lebaron is now an engineer of the American and Honduras company, to which Honduras recently granted valuable concessions.

STATE LEGISLATURE

WEDNESDAY JAN. 18.

In joint session Senator Davis was formally declared elected for another term. At the conclusion of the joint session a telegram from Senator Davis thanking the legislature for re-election was read.

The question of the governor's appointments occupied most of the senate session. The particular fight was on the confirmation of E. S. Corser of Minneapolis, named for surveyor general of logs for the Second district. All were confirmed.

Senator Horton of the committee on judiciary recommended the indefinite postponement of Senator Smith's bill to punish the stealing of rides on railroads. The report was adopted.

The house passed a resolution urging the ratification of the Paris peace treaty.

THURSDAY, JAN. 19.

Both branches began work on gasieral orders during the day and several bills were considered in committee of the whole. In the house, Peterson's bill to reduce the rate of interest and extend the time of payment of unpaid principal on state farm lands was taken up and after considerable discussion of a favorable nature was advanced to the calendar. The measure, if passed, will reduce the interest on loans from 8 to 6 per cent and extend time in which payment may be made from 20 to 30 years.

In committee of the whole the senate discussed S. F. 21, Senator Snyder's bill amending the law of 1895 authorizing children's home societies to take charge of children not properly cared for. Considerable objection to the measure was shown and it went over.

Senator Lovely bill to establish a probate code and Senator E. E. Smith's bill to add one bicycle to the list of exemptions from execution were passed.

FRIDAY, JAN. 20.

The senate devoted two hours to the Philippines question and finally adopted a resolution favoring ratification of the treaty.

Under suspension of the rules Senator Snyder's resolution relative to the printing in italics of new matter in bills providing for amendments was passed unanimously.

Senator Ryder's joint memorial to congress praying for the passage of the McCleary bill, which reimburses for valid soldiers of the late war for extra expense to which they were put by illness, was also passed.

The house passed its first bill on the calendar during the morning session, H. F. 59, providing for the reimbursement of counties in which insane persons are examined or committed to state hospital.

Under suspension of the rules a bill was passed authorizing the Minnesota Valley Agricultural society to erect a monument at Morton commemorating loyalty of Indians friendly to whites during the Indian outbreak in 1862.

SATURDAY, JAN. 21.

The bill to appropriate $34,500 for an exhibit at the Omaha exposition was favorably reported to the house. The bill to prohibit issuance or acceptance of passes was indefinitely postponed.

In committee of the whole the only bill which occasioned any considerable debate was H. F. 72, appropriating $5,000 for defraying the expenses of the Minnesota exhibit at Omaha. A favorable recommendation was finally secured.

Four bills were introduced in the house. One of these was the Plowman measure for the taxation of mortgages.

MONDAY, JAN. 23.

In the house the Torsen bill providing for the election of railroad commissioners was considered by the committee of the whole and progress was reported. The bill for organizing counties and school districts was favorably reported.

The following bills were given a third reading and passed:

H. F. 1—Requiring a foreign corporation, on appeal of an action to the district court, to furnish a bond sufficient to cover costs.

H. F. 14—To legalize and validate deeds and other instruments executed without a scroll or device opposite the name of the grantor.

H. F. 22—To enable cities of less than 10,000 inhabitants to issue certificates of indebtedness in certain cases.

H. F. 35—To legalize the execution and record of certain instruments authorizing attorneys to foreclose mortgages by advertisement.

The senate was not in session.

TUESDAY, JAN. 24.

Mr. Donahue of Stearne county introduced in the house a resolution providing for a committee to procure data and plans for an "exposition of all the products of the north-western states and territories, at some suitable place in the state in the year 1902." It went over on notice of debate.

Four minor measures were passed.

The Staples bill to appropriate $34,500 to defray the expenses of the Minnesota exhibit at the Omaha exposition passed.

The Torson bill for the election of railroad and warehouse commissioners was promoted to the calendar.

Mr. Lommen's bill for the destruction of weeds on public highways caused considerable debate, but was finally amended so it could pass after being freely amended.

Although the session lasted less than an hour four bills were given dead passage. Under suspension of the rules Senator Thompson's bill amending the law to provide that civil actions may be prosecuted in the name of the real parties interested was given three readings and passed. Senator E. E. Smith's bill exempting one bicycle from execution came back from the judiciary committee with a favorable report and was also passed. At the request of Senator Hinkley, H. F. 149, brought in from the house, was passed under suspension of rules. The bill fixes terms of court in fifty-three county.

Madam's Great Bargain.

It was in an auction store on Main street, just before the auctioneer mounted the box. Goods were being sold privately to those who desired to buy. A well dressed woman was examining a bit of jewelry.

"What is the price of this?" she asked.

"That will cost you $4, madam," replied the salesman.

"Can't you shade that figure a bit?"

"No: can't possibly take a cent less. But I'll tell you what I'll do—if you will wait a few moments the auction sale will be started, and I'll place the article under the hammer. You may then be able to buy it in for almost nothing."

The woman said she would wait.

Ten minutes later on the auctioneer began the sale. There were some half dozen people in the store. The bit of jewelry in question was placed on the counter and his lot was invited. Some one offered 50 cents, then $1 was bid, $2 followed and then $3. This last bid was made by the woman who had sought to buy the bit of jewelry before the sale. A gentleman came in, looked at the article and calmly said: "I like that. I'll give you $4."

"Five dollars!" The woman boldly bid, the bidding ceased and the bit of jewelry was turned over to the last and best bidder. She had refused to pay $4 a few minutes before, but she forgot that and went home to tell hubby dear what a bargain she got at the auction store for a $5 bill.—Memphis Scimitar.

Joseph Jefferson.

Joseph Jefferson was playing a one night engagement in a small town, appearing in the part Rip Van Winkle, which he has so often and ably impersonated. At the hotel where he staid there was an Irishman who acted as general assistant. Judged by the great interest he manifested in the hotel he might have been taken to be the proprietor. At about a quarter to 6 in the morning Mr. Jefferson was startled, not to say alarmed, by a violent thumping on his door. When he recollected that he had left no orders to be called so early, he was naturally indignant. His sleep was broken for that morning, however, so he arose and soon made his appearance before the clerk.

"Look here, I say," he demanded of this functionary, "why was I called at this unearthly hour?

"Well, you know, sir," replied the clerk, "but I'll ask Pat." Pat was summoned. Said the clerk: "Pat, there was no call for this gentleman. Why did you waken him?"

Pat led the clerk to one side and said in a mysterious whisper: "He was morin loike a horse, sor, an Oi'd heard no sleep in him, consequince whoin he wor wasnt aither shlapin for twinty years, so Oi says to mesilf, 'It's a-comin he is, sor, an it's no juty to fill the cruther out o' yer home at wanst.' "—Ledger Monthly.

Snowball Showers.

More than one explorer in cold climates has noted the curious phenomenon of a "snowball shower." Thus Bulla, in the account of his journey, says the average being about the size of a hen's egg, but they are true snowballs for all that, compressed globes of snow, not little lumps of ice or hail.

A fall of the kind occurred in north Lapland in March, 1893, and at the time it was observed that the balls seemed five times as dense and compressed as ordinary snow balls. The fall lasted only from the usual handmade missiles. They had fallen during the night and were entirely free from traces of either a hard or soft core.

Nansen, except a doubtful electrical one—can be ascribed for the strange phenomenon, and mountaineers are apt to discredit the story when the snowballs showers told them by the old guides till suddenly in the midst of an ordinary storm in the Alps they were assailed as though by myriads of mischievous schoolboys.—London Standard.

Egyptian Burials.

It has hitherto been supposed that in Egypt the practice of embalming the bodies of the dead and forming them into mummies was the most ancient method of sepulture, but Professor Flinders Petrie, the well known Egyptologist, has in the course of excavations thrown quite a new light upon this question of the ancient method of disposing of the dead. At Deshasheh, a place about 50 miles south of Cairo, he has discovered a series of tombs, in the coffins of which he has found complete skeletons from which the flesh has been carefully dissected, evidently previous to burial. The coffins are of admirable workmanship, are made of sycamore and are in perfect preservation notwithstanding their 6,000 years' burial in the sand. It remains to be proved by further excavations whether the mutilation of the bodies was performed as a ceremonial rite or whether this removal of the flesh from the bones points to cannibalism on the part of the ancient people.—Chambers' Journal.

The Best of Proof.

"And you say you gave me no encouragement?"

"That is, what I said."

"No encouragement! Why even your father thought it all settled."

"My father? What proof have you of your extraordinary statement?"

"Proof? The best of proof. He borrows money from me."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Egyptian Dancing in Egypt.

The genuine native dancing girls perform in the little cafes that abound in the Arabian quarter. These places are usually small and about 30 men are seated around the seats that line the walls make a full house.

Here the Arabs come to smoke and drink coffee and hear the music, while in the center of the cafe the dancing girls perform. The places are filled with the smoke of the nargile and cigarettes, and the dreamy native who lounges along the walls puff everlastingly on, barely noticing the girls who are weaving and swaying in the almonst undulations of the dance to the time of a groggy tomtom and the mellow tones of a reed whistle. The dance is about the same as the one seen at the World's fair in Chicago, divested of most of the offensive trimmings. There it was designed to startle and shock and come up to western notions of refined impropriety, while here on its native heath it is simply a dance that is as old as the country itself, and to those who have been accustomed to it through generations of familiarity it is probably as tame as the quadrille. It is only the dance prepared for the tourist that disgusts you and makes you think that the orient should be raided.—Chicago Record.

He Couldn't Understand It.

Bilkins and his wife occupied seats in the dress circle. The curtain had just gone up for the second act, the first scene showing the heroine in street costume. As Bilkins noticed this he gave the woman his face were a puzzled expression. Several times he took hurried glances at the programme he had in his hand. He became so deeply interested that he attracted the attention of his wife.

"What do you see that interests you so?" inquired his wife. "She isn't pretty."

"May, isn't that the same hat that woman wore in the last act?" exclaimed Bilkins, seemingly ignoring his wife's question.

Mrs. Bilkins glanced in the direction of the stage.

"I think she is," she replied, "but what of it?"

"Oh, nothing, only it seems so odd!"

"What does?"

"Why, that she should still be wearing the same hat," explained Bilkins. "The programme says there is a lapse of two years between the first and second acts."—Ohio State Journal.

Our Florida Alligator.

An alligator is not an attractive creature. He has not a single virtue that can be named. He is cowardly, treacherous, hideous. He is neither graceful nor even amusing in his antics as a uce. He is not even amusing or grotesque in his ungainliness as a tortoise—a brute unqualified—he is at ways so intensely real that one shrinks from him with loathing and a sigh at his expense while in his presence would seem curiously out of place.

His personality, too, is strong. Once catch the steadfast gaze of a free, adult alligator's wicked eyes, with their cold vertical pupils fixed full upon your own, and the significance of the expression "evil eye," and the mysteries of snake charming, hypnotism and mesmerism will be readily understood, for his reptilian, fearless, unflinching stare is simply blood chilling.—I. W. Blake in Popular Science Monthly.

Plasters and Cuts.

Although court plaster is useful in protecting small cuts from the admission of the skin from harm, it should not be used over any considerable cut or wound for the purpose of healing. These will heal much faster if simply covered with a bit of soft linen held in place at the ends with strips of surgeon's plaster.

The readers of this paper are pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Entered at the postoffice at Crookston, Minnesota, as second-class matter.

Official Paper of the City of Crookston.

THE United States senate last Thursday confirmed the president's nomination of John Lohn as postmaster at Fosston.

P. S. DORSEY is the present editor and manager of the Fisher Bulletin. Under the new management the paper will be independent in politics.

THE postal business of the Hallock postoffice has made a wonderful increase within the past two years. During the past two months this office has been raised from a fourth class office to a third and from a domestic to a international money order office.

THE most striking feature of Burns was his large, dark eyes. They were, we are told by a writer, "full of mind and literally glowed when he spoke with emotion or interest." Sir W. Scott, who knew the poet when he lived in Edinburgh, says: "I never saw such a one in a human head, and I have seen the most distinguished men of my time."

THE Rochester Post, one of the oldest and best known Republican papers in Northern Minnesota, has been sold to A. W. Blakely & Son, proprietors of the Record and Union, a democratic paper with a long and honorable history. The combined papers will be issued daily and weekly under the name of the Post and Record and will be republican in politics.

AN illustrated anecdotal character sketch of the late General Garcia, the Cuban patriot, is contributed to the January Review of Reviews by George Reno, who was closely associated with General Garcia for two years. The frontispiece of the Review is a portrait of General Garcia from a photograph taken by Clinedinst, of Washington, only a few days before the general's death.

THE question of bribery in connection with the senatorial fight in Montana was handed over to the grand jury for investigation. But the senatorial candidate who may have offered the $30,000 is no worse than the man who accepted when he at the same time knew he was going to betray the giver. The man who received the money must have been false else he could not have secured it. This treachery should, we think, be condemned as well as the attempt to buy votes.

THERE is a fight on at Washington upon the question as to where the new Minnesota Indian agency and the Leach Lake Indian school will be located. Bena and Walker are rivals for the location. The Great Northern and the Brainerd and Northern railroads and other townsite boomers are interested parties. What is really amusing in the case is that the Indians themselves do not appear to be taken into consideration. This has usually been the way in our dealings with the red man. And yet we wonder that trouble arises.

THE new passenger depot of the Great Northern railroad at St. Cloud will be finished in a short time. Crookston needs a new station more than St. Cloud did and though we are not displeased at our sister city getting this new building, we yet think that President Hill ought to tear down the wooden structure that has done good service in the past and build the city of Crookston a station that will be modern in its equipment, and capable of accommodating the large number of travelers who daily come and go via the Great Northern.

DESPITE all that has been said and done in the case of Congressman-elect Roberts, of Utah, it is altogether likely that he will take his seat in Washington. Nothing legal can be done to prevent it. He is a polygamist and as such while living in Utah is breaking the law, but it is a state law that is breaking and the federal authority cannot interfere to enforce state laws. So long as Mr. Roberts does not bring any more than one wife to the capitol nothing can be done as the federal law now stands. Only by amendment to the national constitution can the country be saved from the disgrace of having as one of the national law makers a man who openly breaks the law of his own state.

IN view of the political trickery and wire-pulling, and bribery and other things disgraceful in connection with the election of United States senators at many state capitols this winter, there is a general cry for poplar election of the senators. This would undoubtedly take great temptations out of the way of the legislators and perhaps with them the sooner to get down to their legitimate work of revising and making laws. On the other hand how would it do for those states that are having so much trouble, to elect representatives who are above reproach and who simply would not waste time in a senatorial fight. Wherever states have elected commanding, capable men to represent them in the senate at Washington there has been little difficulty. The same man is reelected as he should be. Witness the case of Cushman K. Davis.

SENATOR STEWART of Nevada has evidently taken the cue from Richard Croker and is of the opinion that the sixteen-to-one question is dead, for it is apparent that he is giving away his surplus silver down at Carson, Nevada. Incidentally we may mention that the legislature in his state is in the toils of a senatorial tangle and Mr. Stewart perhaps thinks that his cartwheels of white metal may break through some of the meshes.

IT is time the Republican Press quit helping the democrats impress the people with the idea that all their leaders are dishonest. It is bad politics because untrue. Quay is no more a boodler than was Cleveland, or Gorman, or than Bryan or Tellier, or Waxhamaker or Foraker.—Alexandria Post-News.

If a republican leader is a boodler it is the business of the republican press to advertise the people of this fact; for corruption in high places is detrimental to the best interests of the party. No unfounded charges, however, ought to be made. Mr. Quay, of Pennsylvania, has been accused of using state funds for personal ends, and though we shall not say he is dishonest till he is proven so in the courts, there is almost enough evidence out of court so warrant one in investigation, but instead he has tried to defeat the ends of justice, and done what he could to prevent a trial. It does not disprove Quay's guilt to say he "is no more a boodler than was Cleveland." We agree with the Post-News that "it is wrong to convince the people that all public men are dishonest and unworthy" but we hold it is the duty of honest journalism to disclose the dishonesty of men in public places whether they be republican or democrat.

A Valuable Forestry Manual.

We have received a copy of a valuable manual entitled "Forestry in Minnesota," recently published by the Minnesota Forestry association. It is a very comprehensive treatise on the subject, being a compilation of lectures and notes by B. B. Green, Professor of Horticulture and Forestry in the State University. The ability and reputation of the author is a sufficient guaranty of the merits of the work, and we recommend it to all interested in the study of forestry. The book is for gratuitous distribution and will be sent to anyone on receipt of five cents for postage, sent to George W. Strand, Secretary, Taylor's Falls, Minn. The edition is limited to ten thousand copies, hence an early order is necessary to positively secure a copy.

A Soldier's Monument.

Mrs. G. H. Palmer of this city has received word from the war department at Washington that the remains of Archie Patterson will soon be shipped back from Manilla to San Francisco and thence to Crookston, all at the expense of the government. Archie Patterson is will be remembered as the Minnesota soldier who was killed on the day when Manilla was captured by the United States army. Quite a sum was raised last summer in Crookston for the purpose of building a monument in honor of our dead hero, and now that it is positively known that the body will be brought here the subscription will be started again. Many, not merely in Crookston, but throughout the state are anxious to contribute to this fund.

Married.

BENOY—CAIN

On Monday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Greenhalgh on Main street, occurred the marriage of Joseph Benoy and Miss Elizabeth Carr. Rev. Herman P. Fisher, of the Congregational church, officiated in the presence of a goodly number of relatives and friends. After the wedding service all partook of a bountiful and cheery wedding supper. Mr. and Mrs. Benoy go to Idaho, where Mr. Benoy has his home, and where they expect to arrive on Saturday next.

Sheriffs Want Fee Schedules Fixed.

Sheriff Losey was at St. Paul last Thursday morning attending a meeting of the sheriffs of the different counties in the state. These county officers desire some changes in the laws which affect their offices and a committee was appointed to keep the matter before the legislature. As the law stands no fees are allowed for serving delinquent tax warrants which are not collected. The sheriffs think they are entitled to a fee even if the tax is not collected. Sheriff Lawrence owing to sickness was unable to be at the meeting.

DISTRICT COURT.

Cases of State vs. Saloonkeepers for Selling to Minors.

THE PETIT JURORS DISCHARGED

Remaining Cases are Court Cases and will Be Decided by the Judge.

The case of State vs. Lesher was concluded and given the jury late afternoon of the 18th inst. A verdict of acquittal was soon returned. The State then dismissed the case against Nick Bural indicted on the same charge.

The case of State vs. Henry Ricke was next taken up. The defendant was charged with selling liquor without a license. It was claimed that on Dec. 30, 1896, he sold a quart of liquor to one Wasley Morris. On that night four or five of the neighbors had a jag of whiskey at Mexico for which they chipped in and paid. The jury was out but a few minutes when a verdict of acquittal was handed in.

A jury was called in the case of State vs. Ben Newton, charged with selling intoxicating liquors to a minor person; the same was tried, given to the jury and a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment returned.

The three cases of the State vs. Toller Mickelby, E. P. Rod and Amund Torgeson, respectively, for selling liquor to minors were dismissed on motion of county attorney, as there was not enough evidence to convict. All these defendants were from McIntosh.

The case of W. A. Marin vs. Anfru Anfruson was continued.

The case of State vs. N. Rapin, for selling liquor to a minor was dismissed as there was not sufficient evidence against defendant to convict.

The action of the State against O. P. Johnson for selling liquors to a minor was dismissed on motion of county attorney, on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to convict. The case of the State vs. Eva Lamont for selling liquor without a license was dismissed.

A jury was called in the case of State vs. Thomas Price, accused of assault in the first degree. It seems that the defendant attacked with a pocket knife one Chas. Henderson, at Fisher, Sept. 15, 1898. Geo. E. E. Finlayson appeared for the defendant and A. R. Holston for the state. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of assault in the second degree.

The case of State vs. Peter Stuhl for selling liquor to a minor person was dismissed.

The case of Elmer Wilson vs. St. Hilaire Lumber company, which was an action for damages for personal injuries received was settled.

The case of J. Schmasser vs. St. Hilaire Lumber company was next called. The plaintiff claims to have been injured in the St. Hilaire mill last fall through the carelessness of the head sawyer who operates and controls the carriage upon which logs are placed to be sawed. The plaintiff sued for $3,000. The case occupied the time of the court till 4 p. m. Saturday. The jury disagreed and were discharged.

J. Kohlmeyer was sentenced to pay a fine of $30 and costs for keeping a saloon open after 11 o'clock at night.

A jury was called in the case of First National Bank of Brooklyn vs. Stone & Columbus. The action was on a note given to John Good Cordage & Machine company and endorsed to this plaintiff. The note was for $747.50 and read "payable in New York or Chicago draft." After plaintiff rested his case the defendants moved for dismissal of action and the motion was granted. The note was not negotiable, and not a promissory note, and held by the supreme court not to be a prom ssory note.

The case of Nils Halberg vs. Great Northern Railway company was settled out of court.

The cases of Wm. Jackson and Anthony Quesnelle brought against the Great Northern Railway were continued.

Monday afternoon the case of vs. Murphy was completed. The jury returned a verdict of guilty and the defendant was sentenced to nine months at Stillwater.

Thomas Frier, convicted of grand larceny in the second degree was sentenced to one year and nine months in state's prison.

John Hoffer, Wm. Ashburn and Frank J. Easton, who plead guilty of malicious destruction of property were given thirty days in the county jail.

The case of Ole S. Spokell et al vs. The Aalman & Taylor Mfg. Lumber company was continued. The following cases were continued: Louis Morin vs. Great Northern Railway company, Chas Teal vs. Northern Pacific Railway company and A. A. Kelton vs. Northern Pacific railway.

A. O. Ingstad vs. John W. Sprague was next tried. It had been appealed from justice court. It was an action to recover $35.50 for a stock of hay claimed to have been sold by plaintiff to defendant. The case was given the jury Tuesday morning. A verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff for $20.

The case of State vs. Sam Walker and also of State vs. Joseph Koelmel were dismissed.

Andrew Larson, who plead guilty of grand larceny in the second degree, was sentenced to nine months at Stillwater.

L. K. Hassell vs. East Grand Forks Fair and Driving association was continued, as was also that of Brunswick-Balk Collendar Co. vs. Ole Lukason et al.

As there was no further jury business the jury was discharged.

During this term nine men have been sent down to Stillwater to serve terms varying from nine months to two years and nine months.

A motion for a new trial was argued as chambers in case of Vasaan Bros., vs. Campbell & Soderberg. Motion was denied.

A motion for continuance was argued in the case of L. K. Hassell vs. East Grand Forks Fair and Driving association. The motion was denied and the case set for Feb. 2.

Demurrer to complaint in case of Daniel O'Neil vs. Great Northern Railroad was argued before the court. Decision was deferred.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

Johannes Melting of Halstad Struck By a Falling Tree.

Last Thursday morning while felling an elm near the old ferry place at Halstead, Ole Melan and Johannes Melting, the thirteen year old son of Mrs. Thale Melting, were caught by the branches of a falling tree, the boy being instantly killed and Mr. Melan seriously injured that there is doubt about his recovery. One tree had been cut and had caught in the branches of another tree and when the second one was felled the first swerved in a different direction from that expected. The boy and Mr. Melan attempted to escape but the branches of the falling tree struck them, crushed the skull of the boy, and cut the head of Melan, broke his shoulder blade and injured him internally. It is indeed a sad affair, as the boy is the only help of a widowed mother.

Election of Officers.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Congregational church held their annual election of officers last Friday evening. The following list of officers were unanimously elected.

President—Miss Evelyn L. Hall.

Vice-president—Walter P. Stone.

Corresponding secretary—W. L. Vasnes.

Recording secretary—Miss Eda M. Willy.

Treasurer—Mrs. Alyce Hall.

Organist—Miss Annie Miller.

Lookout committee—Miss Bessie Clements, Miss Emma Chronkhite and Lucius Miller.

Prayer meeting committee—William L. Vasnes, Mrs. Fred Hall, Mrs. G. Stone.

Social committee—Misses Nana Tarrant, Carrie Fitzgerald, Clara Steenerson and Annie Miller.

Good Citizenship committee—Walter P. Stone, Mrs. Fred Hall and Miss Mamie Wyand.

At the close of the business meeting a pleasant social hour was spent.

Hockey Club.

This organization is as assured success and the JOURNAL is pleased to chronicle the birth of as deserving a club as this is. It means physical exercise in unbented air and loss of the Arctic Hillard, treasurer.

Grand Forks and several towns along the Red Lake Vincent line are anxious to measure their strength and skill with the players of the Queen City, and as soon as the latter have had some practice the opportunity will be given these would-be champions from the north. Practice will begin at once in the rink. The sticks are here. The game is something like the old fashioned shinney but it is not at all rough. Seven play on a side.

Caught in the Act.

Special Agent Griffin, of the Interior Department, who was out east in Beltrami county searching for persons whom he suspected of stealing government timber, returned to this city the latter part of last week. He found his men after considerable work. They cut the timber, brought it to the mill, had it sawed and then shipped it with the sawyers. The trespassers have agreed to make good the timber stolen. Mr. Griffin started back for the woods Tuesday morning and will measure the amount of timber that has been purloined.

Looked Pleasant.

When the jury cases were finished at the District Court Tuesday, Judge Wade, County Attorney Holston, Court Reporter Strawbridge, Sheriff Lawrence, Acting Clerk of Court John Vig, the county jailor and the petit jurors had Photographer Lyman take a snap shot at them and soon Mr. Lyons will have on exhibiting and for sale pictures of a group of handsome men—representatives of Polk county.

If Government Holds Out Inducements —Business Prospects Good.

Through the kindness of Marshall H. Gore the JOURNAL is permitted to make publish the following letter which Mr. Gore received from his son who is with the 13th Regiment in the Philippines:

Manila, P. I., Nov. 27, '98.

Your long looked for letter received and read with pleasure a few days since. I have very little time to myself now, am very busy. We live very well now, by selling our extra rations and donating a dollar each at pay day. We buy oatmeal, canned milk, native squash, radishes, potatoes and a great many other things to take the place of rice and dessicated vegetables. We sell all of our hardtack. I have gained 28 pounds lately and will soon be back to my American weight of 175. That little trip across the Pacific on hardtack soup and "mule horse" reduced my weight 38 pounds. It was entirely unnecessary to say in the letter myself now, am very busy. We live very that I was sick on board ship. Of course after we landed and before Aug. 13, it was hard to get supplies yetthere was very little complaint at first. Even after lying in the mud and rain, crushed skull of the boy, and cut the head of Melan, broke his shoulder blade and injured him internally. It is indeed a sad affair, as the boy is the only help of a widowed mother.

In Honor of Dr. Forbes.

There was a very pleasant social gathering at the parlors of the Methodist church last Monday evening. An entertaining program had been arranged in honor of Dr. Robert Forbes the presiding elder of the Duluth district. Dr. Forbes is very carefully superintending the work of the M. E. church along the Fosston line and in Red River valley. New churches are being dedicated every week and preaching appointments started in many places where hitherto the people have been without religious services.

MILLING PROPERTY

At West Superior Bought by C. H. Sawyer and Others.

The Commander Milling company's plant, at West Superior, with a capacity of 600 barrels per day, has been bought by C. H. Sawyer, and A. N. Hilton, W. H. Barclay of Crookston, will probably be hired as head miller. The mills will be in running order in a short time. There are the very best facilities for shipping four both by water and by rail. The entire property is worth about $75,000.

NOT REMUNERATIVE.

A. D. Stephens, Surveyor Genera Made No Money.

Investigation into the fee office "snaps" received a small shock in the senate Tuesday morning when the surveyor-general of logs for the seventh district, A. D. Stephens, made a report for the last season which showed a deficit of $42.60. The report was a great surprise to some of the senators from the south, coming from one of the class of offices which is supposed to be very remunerative. Mr. Stephens' report shows that he received for recording log marks and transfers, $37.50, for recording liens and other instruments, $11.25, and for scaling logs, $290.41. His total expenses were $390.76, leaving a deficit of $42.60.

Hardware as well as Machinery.

George Carpenter returned Tuesday afternoon from a short trip out to Fosston. While he was there the Fosston firm of Larsen, Carpenter & Company purchased the stock of hardware belonging to Sorensen & Randcliff and the hardware store will be run in connection with their machinery emporium, Mr. D. E. Gorton having charge of the entire business.

Of Interest to Settlers.

A favorable report was made in the United States senate on a bill, the passage of which will be of great benefit to settlers in the northwest. It provides that when entries for public lands are not allowed by reason of contest or are allowed erroneously, the secretary of the interior shall order a repayment of purchase money, fees and commissions. It also provides that where double the minimum price has been paid for unearned railroad lands, the secretary shall repay the excess of $1.25 per acre to the original entryman or his heirs.

Rural Free Delivery.

The success which has attended the rural free delivery experiment has given rise to a general demand throughout the country for additional facilities, and a bill has been introduced providing that such mail shall be delivered by star route carriers. The bill provides that persons living along such routes may erect boxes and on application to the nearest postmaster may have their mail delivered without additional charges. The person serving the route must also collect mail deposited in the boxes for the postoffice. The postmaster general is authorized to receive plans and devices for special boxes, with duplicate key for carrier and address.

What Next?

It does seem as though the seedsmen would stop somewhere, but here comes a work of art. Think of it, twenty-four pages lithographed in colors, not gaudy colors, upon an entirely different plan. This, in itself, is enough to turn every man's head. Then follow about one hundred more pages, filled with handsome half-tone illustrations of flowers, fruits and vegetables, photographed from nature, all printed on fine paper and enclosed in an elegant cover of white and gold. FIREMEN'S DANCE.

Will Be Held In New City Hall Tonight—Supper Served in Hall.

Tonight is when the firemen hold their dance at the new city hall. It is not every year that the city's fire extinguishers give the society people of town an opportunity to attend more than one of their always enjoyable promenades, but this time they are going to be liberal. An unusually delightful time is sure to be the fate of those who attend and those who cannot go will undoubtedly be envious of those more fortunate. And all this pleasure and mirth can be secured for the small sum of one dollar and for that consideration one will have the privileges of the oloak room and also have an opportunity to partake of a delicious lunch that will be served in the hall.

FIGHT FOR RIGHT OF WAY

General Young's Dashing Battle at Las Guasimas Pass.

TOLD BY THE HEROES OF THE DAY.

Cavalry Led the March on Santiago. Heavy Spanish Forces Across the Front—Young Attacked With Odds Against Him—No Ambush, but a Well Planned Battle.

[Copyright, 1898, by the Author.]

III.

SO MUCH has heen said about Young having fallen into an ambush at Las Guasimas that it is necessary to go into details in order to show that such was not the case. When the general gave his last orders to the chiefs of the regular squadron to advance along the main road to Santiago, he was in a position where he could point out to them the Spanish line, the main road leading to it, the general direction of the trail over the high hill and approximately the junction of the road and trail which was to be the junction of the rough riders' and the regulars' column at the supreme moment of battle.

As the rough riders had a difficult hill to climb, General Young gave them more time than he did the regulars. The squadron of the First regulars, under Major Bell, had the advance, that of the Tenth, Major Norvell, moving in support. Captain Galbraith's troop of the First was to occupy the high ground between the regulars and rough riders and make connection between the two columns at the same time.

While waiting 20 minutes for the rough riders to gain time, General Young placed two Hotchkiss guns in sight of the Spaniards to draw their fire. Meanwhile General Wheeler reached the front, and General Young asked if he had any changes to suggest or orders to give. He called attention to General Young's violation of rules in dividing forces in the face of the enemy. General Young said that he had thought of that, but in view of the situation assumed the risk. General Wheeler had nothing further to say. Then the Hotchkiss guns under Captain Watson opened fire, one at 1,000 yards and one at 900. Finally the range was calculated at 950. The squadron of the First immediately advanced, but the troops couldn't keep touch owing to the dense chaparral. In order to reach a ground where they could advance in line it was necessary to get within 500 or 600 yards in front of the Spaniards on a plain under view of the enemy.

The first shell of the Hotchkiss gun was answered by a volley from the Spanish. Having fought the Cubans on that ground, they had perfected their range. A few moments after the firing began General Young heard firing away off to his left, and seeing that the advancing regulars didn't answer it he concluded that it was directed against Wood's column, that Wood was up and engaged.

General Wheeler became uneasy when he saw that the advancing regulars did not return the Spaniards' fire. Young told him that their silence was due to fire discipline. The regulars were not to pure, but to advance and secure cover. The Spanish fire became so hot Young ordered the Hotchkiss guns under cover. This had the effect of stopping the Spanish fire. In a few minutes the Hotchkiss guns opened again. Captain Mills returned from the chaparral in front and reported to Young that the regulars were advancing and getting cover. Major Bell, leader of the squadron of the First, in advance, was instructed to push forward and get under the cover of the hill occupied by the Spanish, a point 300 or 400 yards on their front.

The regulars had to crawl through the undergrowth and to cut wire fences. They had wire nippers, one to every five men. Shortly the regulars could be seen ascending the difficult hill. General Wheeler intimated to Young that he was overmatched. His three troops of the Tenth cavalry were close up in support of the First. There was only one troop held in reserve. General Young called Wheeler's attention to the firing on Wood's line, which indicated that Wood was advancing as fast as the regulars. General Young said to Wheeler that he had the utmost confidence in success. Captain Wainright's troop of the First was off on the extreme right of the regulars, following a road north of the main road which would turn the Spanish left. Wood's advance would turn the Spanish right. It seems from reports of General Young's aids that the Spanish flanks were turned simultaneously, and the Spaniards retreated in a rout. Captain Beck's and Captain Galbraith's regular troops formed a junction with Wood, and then the line of battle was continuous from end to end, from Wainright on the extreme right to the left of the rough riders.

The fight lasted about 1 hour and 20 minutes from the time the Hotchkiss gun first opened until the Spanish flanks were turned. There was some firing for 20 minutes more, but it all ended at 9:45 a. m. General Young sent orders up the line not to follow the Spaniards. The day was very hot. His men were very tired and were wet through from a heavy rain that had fallen the night before. The line was rearranged in the expectation of a counter attack.

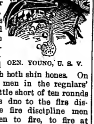
The Spanish largely outnumbered the Americans at Las Guasimas. Their papers boasted that 2,800 of their men had checked the whole American army. Cubans asserted that the Spaniards numbered 3,000 that day. Other estimates placed it at 2,500. Young's total force was 965.

After the battle General Young admitted to Wheeler that he (Young) had made one mistake after all. He said that that was in the matter of deployment as his column advanced. One troop had diverged to the left instead of going in direct. General Wheeler replied: "I have watched the game from start to finish, and if I had it to do over would not change one iota of your plan. I never witnessed a battle that was carried out so entirely without change of plan."

The only interference on the part of General Wheeler was to urge General Young personally to keep under cover. General Young is a giant in stature. His exposure that day, noticed and commented on by all, was not done for bravado. He did it to set an example to officers and men who had never been under fire before. He thought that if they saw their general taking the usual risks it would have a good effect.

General Young said to Wheeler that he had throughout the utmost confidence of success, adding: "General, if I had lost this battle and still lived, you would have my resignation. My object of fighting this battle was to get Las Guasimas for the army's camp."

The total loss in General Young's command was 65 killed and wounded. The strength of the squadron of rough riders was about equal to the strength of the squadrons of the First and Tenth cavalry present. The rough riders lost eight killed and the regulars eight. In the regulars Major Bell and Captain Birom were wounded. Seven out of the eight killed in the regulars belonged to the squadron of the First, which had the advance. The casualties in the regulars' column occurred at the beginning of the advance, near a small church. Just as he was starting forward to lead his men in the rush for cover, while in advance, Major Bell was shot through both shin bones. On an average the men in the regulars' column fired a little short of ten rounds each. This was due to the fire discipline. In the fire discipline men are taught when to fire, to fire at the enemy only, under certain circumstances, and the number of rounds to fire for a given purpose. Unlimited firing is permitted only at the supreme moment. Seldom is there firing at will.



GEN. YOUNG, U. S. V.

The story of the ambush of the rough riders was started by an adjutant of the regiment, who lost his head during or before the battle and rushed back to Sibouey, where he spread fearful tales of ambush and slaughter, stating that Colonel Wood had been killed. This man had formerly been a regular officer and was soon disposed of after the battle. In point of fact, as soon as Colonel Wood reached the top of the hill over which the trail ran he threw out an advance guard and took every precaution against surprise. Owing to the dense bush, reconnoitering was difficult. At 7:10 a. m. his advance pickets saw signs of the enemy. The line was then deployed in skirmish order and began to advance carefully.

Firing began immediately. The Spanish line was long. Wood deployed another troop on the right and left to extend his line. Still the Spanish overlapped both flanks. Two more troops were deployed on the flanks. Firing was heavy at short range, and on Captain Capron's front was terrific. Capron was mortally wounded. Finally Wood brought up his last reserved troop. The whole line advanced slowly, but steadily, forcing back the enemy's right. The Spaniards were driven from their strong position among the rocks. They took position 300 yards in the rear. Wood's line advanced, and the battle again became heavy. For a short time the Spaniards north of the road, in front of the regulars, enfiladed Wood's line. The right troops of Wood's line turned their fire against them. This spirited assault of the regulars in front caused the evacuation of the north end of the ridge. The junction of the rough riders and the regulars was then complete, and it was a running fight until the Spaniards were beyond range.

Major Brodie of the rough riders was shot through the arm while on the firing line. Captain McClintock had both bones of his leg broken on the firing line. Lieutenant Thomas of Captain Capron's troop was shot soon after the fall of the captain.

General Young, the director of this dashing affair, is a veteran of the civil war. At one time he commanded a brigade of dismounted cavalry in the Shenandoah valley. General Escario commanded the Spaniards at Las Guasimas.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Legislative Notes.

Work in committee of the whole began in the house Thursday, the date being unusually early as such things go.

There was some debate over the bill of Mr. Peterson of Renville, H. F. No. 52, providing for a reduction of the rate of interest from 5 to 4 per cent and an extension of the time of final payment from forty to fifty years upon contracts for the sale of public lands. Mr. Peterson and Mr. Jacobson went into it at further more length. Mr. Dwinnell thought that farmers always paid for their land as soon as they could, regardless of the rate of interest. He thought it wiser to extend the line of investments which are open to the state board of investment to include 5 per cent securities. Mr. Beach said that farm land security was giltedged. Why should the farmers pay 5 per cent when the state was seeking other avenues of investment at 3 and 4 per cent? The state also owns much other land and the passage of this bill would tend to encourage its sale as against railroad and other speculative lands.

The bill was recommended to pass.

Mr. Roberts introduced a bill to reduce the required rate of interest on the bonds of counties, school districts, cities, towns and villages in which the board of investment may now invest the permanent school and permanent university funds, from 4 per cent to "not less than 3 per cent." This is designed to put local securities on a par with those of other states. St. Paul's certificates of indebtedness, for example, bear only 3½ per cent interest, and are accordingly under existing law beyond the reach of the state board of investment.

Mr. Roberts offered another bill opening the soldiers' home and the provisions of the soldiers' relief fund to veterans of the Spanish war.

Mr. Peterson of Renville introduced a bill not only to prohibit the issue to public officers, elective or appointive, of railroad passes, telegraph, telephone and express franks, but to forbid their acceptance or use. Violation of the proposed law is made a felony punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than a year for the party accepting such a perquisite, and by a fine not exceeding $1,000 for the corporation issuing it.

The senate judiciary committee decided that the land grant controversy between the state and the Great Northern road is not a matter for the further attention of the legislature but should be decided in the courts.

The West house concurrent resolution, urging congress to hasten the ratification of the peace treaty with Spain, was reported to the senate and went over under the rules to be considered later. The object of hastening the conclusion of the peace treaty is to secure the earlier return of the volunteer troops.

Among the bills introduced Thursday was one by Senator Potter of Hennepin of especial interest to the dairy industry of the state. It is S. F. No. 88, and proposes the appropriation of $5,000 annually for four years, beginning with the present year, the whole appropriation amounting to $20,000, for the purpose of furthering and encouraging higher education in the art of butter and cheese making in Minnesota. The money is to be expended under the direction and supervision of the dean of the school of agriculture.

Mr. McCollom's bill provides for the erection by railroads of platforms to facilitate the loading of live stock, grain and other commodities, upon petition of twenty-four more taxpayers to the railroad commissioners and their order to the railroads. A failure to obey such order is punishable by a fine of $500 for each thirty days of failure to construct the platform.

Mr. Henderson's bill relating to clerk hire for county treasurers provides that in counties where the salary of the treasurer is fixed by special law and no provision is made for annual clerk hire the county commissioners are authorized to furnish the necessary assistance or clerk hire, not to exceed $800 a year.

Mr. Feeney renews that old, old proposition to have town supervisors elected for three years, one each year. In order to start the system, he proposes that at the next election the three supervisors shall be elected, one for one year, one for two years and one for three years, and thereafter one a year, for a term of three years.

In the senate Friday Senator Stockwell's anti-expansion resolution was discussed. Only three of the nineteen minority members voted in its favor—Bryan is evidently not so popular as he was.

Among the bills introduced Friday in the senate was one by Senator Grindeland of Marshall to license and regulate the business of commission merchants or persons selling agricultural products and farm produce on commission, and to require them to give a bond to the state for the benefit of their consignors and prescribing a penalty for the violation of any of the provisions of the act.

Only one vote was recorded against Senator Ryder's joint memorial to congress in favor of the McCleary bill to place soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain on the pension list. It was by Senator Lord of Dodge county. The bill was passed under suspension of the rules.

Senator Myran has appointed the following joint subcommittee to prepare the drainage bill: Senators Grindeland and Dart, Representatives Henderson, Hymes and Elwell.

Adventure With a Tiger.

Colonel R., an English officer stationed in India, met with a singular adventure while tiger hunting in which he lost an arm. The colonel had wounded a tiger from an elephant's back. The tiger charged, and the elephant, taking fright, bolted through the jungle. To save himself from being brained and swept off by overhanging branches, Colonel R. seized a stout limb and, raising himself, left the elephant to go on alone through the forest. To his dismay he found he had not strength and agility sufficient to swing himself up to sit on the branch. In vain he strove to throw a leg over and so raise himself.

Looking down, the sportsman discovered that the tiger had spotted him and was waiting below. The horror of the situation can be imagined—the enraged tiger and the helpless, dangling man knowing he must fall into those cruel jaws.

How long he hung there he never knew. He shouted and shrieked in an agony of fear. He eased one arm a little and then the other, then hung despairingly by both—till at last tired nature gave way and he dropped!

He remembered thrusting one arm into the tiger's jaws, and then consciousness left him. His life was saved by the arrival of a friendly rifle barrel held close to the tiger's head and through the subsequent amputation of the mangled arm by a skillful surgeon.—Youth's Companion.

The Art of Doing Nothing.

One mark of the modern man is his inability to idle. When he has to work for his living, he will grumble lavishly, telling you that leisure is what he longs for; that an idle life is his unattainable ideal. But let him come into a fortune and you will see. Does he use his new affluence in the only reasonable way, making soft places for himself wherein he can idle happily? Not he; he runs to and fro about the city like the Scripture dog, risking the portion of goods that has come to him among the outside brokers, or he tries the muscles of his stomach on a yacht, or he delivers himself, bound hand and foot, to the tyranny of the racing stables, or he becomes a philanthropist, or throws his unconquerable energy into amateur photography.

To a dweller in the sheepfolds the question comes urgent, insistent. When does a man come into this his birthright of antlike industry? When does this inability to idle grow on him? In the time of his lambhood he will do anything, everything, to insure his doing nothing. To attain this object he will spare no patent pains, no anxious thought. He will achieve his end even in "prep." with the eye of the shepherd upon him, and it will be perceived that to do nothing when talking is impossible and staring about, an expensive luxury, requires a talent amounting almost to genius.—Pall Mall Gazette.

He Got the Votes.

A congressman is thus quoted by the Washington Star:

"The first race I ever made for congress resulted in my defeat by less than 50 majority, and if one of my friends had not been too zealous I would have been elected. There was a precinct where I expected to receive 100 votes, and I feared there would be some fraud in the precinct that would injure me, so I got an old man who had never participated in politics, but who had ultimost paramount influence in the district, to take charge of my interests there, instructing him to see that every friend of mine voted and that the votes were counted.

"When the returns came in, I had not received a single vote in that precinct, and the next day a bulky envelope was handed me containing 120 ballots, together with a letter from the man I had left in charge saying that he had seen every friend of mine and taken up their ballots so that none would be missed, and as he wouldn't trust the judges of elections he had sent them to me himself so I would be sure to get them. Since then I have seen to it that men in charge of my interests were not only honest, but knew something about politics."

CHAPTER IV.

A spell of dull weather had fallen on the fort. Except when a snowstorm was raging the Wyoming skies were generally clear and cloudless, and they had had earlier in the month a snowstorm fierce enough and long enough to render further specimens entirely unnecessary. The wind had taken a freak of blowing from the south for 36 hours, and the man was carrying about with a fever-boots—the men of Custard's battalion, that is, for, true to prediction, Barry had gone. Buxton and Freeman, Raymond and Turner, Gregg and Wayne, Truscott and Ware—the eight companies whose troops were quartered at Russell. Buxton was away on leave, but his troop was in Barry's battalion, and so were Freeman's, Raymond's and Wayne's.

There wasn't a woman whose husband had to go who did not think down in the bottom of her heart that it ought to have been the other battalion, or at least that if one had to go both should have gone, and most of them said so. To Mrs. Barry there were greater trial and hardship in the separation from her devoted husband than in the wives of many of his juniors. But she was silent. Nathalie Baird alone knew what it meant to the invalid, and the many attentions would have been redoubled, but Mrs. Baird had promptly appeared to beg that she might take the major's place at the afternoon readings, and Mrs. Ray's and Mrs. Atherton, the colonel's wife, had been almost equally insistent, and other ladies had called to know if there wasn't something they could do—even Mrs. Turner, who never read anything. And they all had so much to say about "dear Mr. Maynard," and what a shocking thing it was, and how dreadful to have to wire to his home people that he was so seriously wounded. His mother, it appears, was dead, his father old and too feeble to undertake the long journey, but his sister was already on the way. He still lay in a room at the Inter Ocean in town, too severely injured and too weak to be moved. There was fear of fever, possibly of blood poisoning, as well as of concussion, and his friends at the fort could only submit.

Atherton was an angry man when told all that had transpired in town. He came down, said the troops, like a tree, so sand of brick on the fellows brought back by the patrol and had caused rewards to be offered for the two still at large, one of whom at least had been guilty of stabbing the lieutenant. Maynard and his men, coming from the brightly lighted saloon into the dark cellar, could see nothing. The two sluikers, whose eyes had become accustomed to the gloom, and who were aided by the broad streak of light, got their chance in the saloon floor, had plainly seen the searchers as they descended, had made their bold rush for freedom and had easily escaped. But this they could have done without bloodshed, and even those who had been their friends at the fort would none of them now.

The case of young Mr. Maynard was absolutely without justification even by men who had prison staring them in the face. They were several days, protracted drinking was the only explanation, but it was nothing more than explanation; it was no excuse. Ever since the end of September the previous year the young officer had been steadily on duty with his troop. It takes more than less than five months for veteran soldiers to take the measure of, or, as they express it, "size up," an officer, and Maynard was thoroughly well liked by the men of the entire command. Only those black sheep of the fold, the irreconcilable tramps, who are to be found to the number of two or three in almost every garrison, could find it in their hearts to say aught against him. As luck would have it the two deserters still at large were characters of this type—blackguards incarnate, who had been dismissed under other names in more than one company until the loose recruiting methods of that day had landed them in Buxton's troop. Here so long as the burly captain was on duty they had to toe the mark, and to a peculiar affiliation for the tough element of the rank and file, possibly because he had spent some years before his war as one of them. But Buxton had gone on leave, and his first lieutenant was giving the troop a needful straightening out, a process that involved Privates Yell and Culligan in disciplinary methods hitherto untried and led to their determination to sever for the third or fourth time probably, the bonds that welded them to Uncle Sam. No vestige of doubt remained that those ruffians, or one of them at least, had dealt Maynard the well nigh fatal blow, and had the garrison had its way all Fort Russell would have joined in the search and pursuit, and a short shrift and sudden cord would have been the lot of both.

And so it happened that Nathalie Baird found herself sorely missing the sight of that dashing rider and the sound of his cheery, ringing voice as she took her afternoon exercise on the prairie and could not help thinking a great deal about him and feeling very, very full of interest and pity and not a little desire to be of some use to him in his critical state. She could not help wishing it was she proper, the obvious thing for young girls like herself to become the nurses and caretakers of warriors wounded in the line of duty. They did such things in romance and fiction, but Nathalie had never read "Ivanhoe" and the host of stories that blessed their hero with such sweet companionship and care. She found herself wondering very much what Mr. Maynard's sister would be like and wishing she knew her and could go to see her, and ruminating over all these things Nathalie's step was slower, her eyes downcast and her whole air that of the lively if not the thus young health and exercise had given it. There were still some young fellows in the garrison, though both Dana and Hunter had gone with the field column, the latter in Maynard's place in Ray's troop, but something told them the tall girl at the Barrys' would rather be alone just now, and noting her pallor and the wistful, anxious look with which the blue eyes regarded everybody who had just come out from town garrison gossips began to talk, especially Mrs. Turner.

Then Maynard's sister reached Cheyenne, was met at the train by Major and Mrs. Stannard and the adjutant and escorted at once to her brother's bedside at the hotel, where a communicating room had been made ready for her. She proved to be older than the sufferer by several years, and a woman whom grief, anxiety and care had told upon before her thirtieth year. She was a trifle cold and undemonstrative, too, thought the wife who must and welcomed her, but every allowance was made.

Some of us will be in every day until Mr. Maynard is well enough to be moved," said Mrs. Stannard, "so you must be sure to let us know of anything that you or he may need, and when you do come to Russell we have space round in our big quarters, and you're to come right there, both of you." Miss Maynard had no idea how kind this was of Mrs. Stannard. She did not realize that her brother had only a single room under a roof that could barely shelter the troops and nurses lifted her soldier boy into the yellow ambulance, trundled him slowly out to the fort and then, by the use of litters into the major's front room. April had come by that time, and a warm south wind, as has been said, played for several days, and the skies were murky, the air soft and unusually humid, and Maynard was presently allowed to sit propped up in bed, while Grace, his adoring sister, read to or chatted with him, and the doctors let him see occasional visitors. Mrs. Stannard was there by the hour, and the stern colonel had called and had been most kind and thoughtful, and so far from finding fault, had praised Maynard's conduct, and still the patient was not happy.

One day after long silence he turned suddenly. "Grace, what ladies have called to see you?"

"Why, all of them, I suppose, Ronald —ever so many anyway."

"Not all, because Mrs. Barry cannot leave her room, I am told," said he.

"No, very true, but she sent her card and explained it all—Miss Baird brought it."

"When was she here?" demanded the brother eagerly.

"Day before yesterday and again today, bringing some delicious jelly Mrs. Stannard is going to give you by and by." And then she saw the joy light burning in his eyes and the faint flush that was mounting to his cheek and her face took on an instant shade of gray. "Why, Ronald," she said, "do you know her well? You like her?"

Then she could ask no more, for all at once there sprang up in her heart the question, "What will this mean to Gertrude Benner?"

Riding presently and without a word, the sister slowly left the room and returned to her own. Stopping for a moment to bathe her temples in cold water, she then stepped to the dormer window looking out over the bleak northward prairie and pressed her forehead upon the cool pane. She had had her own sorrows, poor girl. Her own love had left her after a brief, joyous furlough when she was but 18 and rejoined his regiment just in time for Five Forks. He had fought gallantly in earlier engagements, had won promotion and some honors, and wounded to be wooed back to health and strength among the kindly people of their Mohawk village; had reformed to stay for the last campaign full of hope, happiness, love of country and of her, and the brief glory of that campaign was linked his last. The joy of the news of Lee's surrender was stifled throughout the narrowing valley at Little Falls by the telegram that briefly told them Captain Ralph Bonner was mortally wounded at Sailor's Creek. Grace Maynard's life from that time on was taken up in devotion to her own mother and to his and when they, too, were called from earth she had still left to nurse her aging father, himself a wounded veteran of the war, and to rear and love were her boy brother Ronald and "his" girl sister, Gertrude. The father's one ambition was for his son—that he might be educated at West Point and commissioned in the army. The sister's main hope had been that when Ronald came back to them an officer he might look with loving eyes upon the sky blue village girl who was laughing, romping maiden had been the playmate and tease of his early boyhood. He had looked kindly, even affectionately, upon her, but with the same serene fondness with which he regarded his sister, and then had gone on his way, after weeks of long talk and counsel with the father, to join his regiment as for Wyoming.

Grace Maynard knew her at a glance.

In every letter Grace had written there was mention of Gertrude—how lovely she had grown, how good and devoted she was to father, how helpful and attentive to him, "and then always so eager to hear about you," and now was all her planning to go for naught? Was it possible that her hero brother, who had been her care as well as pride for years, now that he was free to choose would turn from the fond and faithful little heart that was beating for him there at home and dower this unknown New England girl with the wealth of his first love? At the first meeting Grace had noted her beauty, the radiance color that so quickly came and went and came again, but other women had entered upon their interests, and Maynard had been long enough to make you all think we'd come to spend the night. Miss Maynard," she continued, rising and turning a deaf ear to Mrs. Stannard's polite expostulations and assurances that they had been in the house barely ten minutes, "do come and see me as soon as you're able to run about alone. I don't see anybody nowadays, and we all miss Mr. Maynard so!"

To which Mrs. Raymond murmured a purring second, and then after various other farewells and at the close of five minutes devoted to these leave takings the two ladies made their exit, declining for a wonder the escort of any of the gallants present. Once outside and the door closed, Mrs. Turner turned to her companion.

"Do you think we can venture in? It isn't 9 yet. We can say we came to help, as we'd heard Miss Baird was ill, you know."

Mrs. Raymond hesitated. "I haven't been there, except to call formally, since the day she came. I'm afraid it would be too—thin."

But Mrs. Turner was a leader of women when they wanted to be led, and her motion prevailed. Mrs. Barry on her sofa and Mrs. Ray beside your her were in earnest conversation when the two were ushered in.

And the first was how it happened that Mrs. Turner herself should be the bearer of an important and exciting piece of news back to the Stannard' parlor not 15 minutes later. She came rushing in with scarcely a stopping to ring.

"What do you think!" she cried. "Colonel Atherton's got a dispatch from headquarters and another from Major Barry. The Indians have broken loose. The whole command may have to go. He came to see her right after they reached him, and he's going over to the office now. You'll all be wanted," she continued, with a comprehensive glance at the boys. The adjutant edged at once to the door. Stannard's footfalls were heard overhead as he left Maynard's bedside and hastened to the stairs.

"What's that? What's the news?" he cried, as he came hurriedly down, and again Mrs. Turner had the comfort of holding the floor and the absorbed attention of her auditors for half a minute, and then, loud, ringing and imperative, the cavalry trumpet cut upon the parade broke up the gathering with the stirring summons of "officers' call." Only the women were left to discuss the situation, and Miss Maynard for the moment forgot her vivid interest in all that had been said or implied regarding Nathalie Baird in the new first experience with sudden orders for the field—an old time and all too familiar episode in garrison life as it was led a score of years ago.

That night the lanterns were dancing about the barracks and quarters long after the usual hour for "taps," and the officers and men of Stannard's battalion were busily at work packing and preparing for the campaign. The special trains ordered to transport them to North Platte, far to the east, from which point they could most easily reach the old trail of the Cheyennes when traveling between the northern and southern hunting grounds of the tribe, were to be in readiness with the dawn of the coming day, and many a man, many a woman that night was passing into almost long hours that intervened. And yet Mrs. Stannard had found time, in the midst of all she had to do in preparing for a mess chest, to run over to see that Mrs. Barry lacked no comfort. Mrs. Ray, of course, had had to depart home, but Miss Baird was on duty with her invalid again—silent, as ever, and helpful, as ever, yet seeming, as Mrs. Stannard could not help but see, very far from well.

There was a strange, hopeless, harassed, appealing look about the eyes that were so full of pity for the gallant boy and tender that the loving hearted army woman was touched and troubled to see. She was the one woman in the—in the those days to whom all the youngsters confided their troubles, hopes or fears. She was the repository of the cherished secrets of half the garrison—of men and women both. She was the one to whom the sublime envy of other officers' wives, because of the implicit trust placed in her silence and discretion and the unbounded respect felt for her opinion. She had been arbitrator in many a family difference before returning to the plains, having proved far too arid and peppery, and therefore no temper trying that ever her medication had been coquettishly rejected. But envy her as they might and deplore the partiality and bad judgment of the young officers as they might, the other matrons of the regiment could not help loving and admiring Mrs. Stannard, and all this Miss Baird had heard in one form or another time and again.

Mrs. Stannard had found time to see that Mrs. Barry lacked no comfort.

Was it fancy, then? thought Mrs. Stannard, as she sat by this invalid's bedside, as she ministered to something that every little while, as Nathalie flitted about the room, she caught the girl's eyes seeking hers with such a look of distress and appeal in their blue depths that it filled her with longing to take the motherless child to her heart

Stannard," said she, "like everybody else in the regiment. I'm sure you're when troubled, and I'm sorely troubled about Nathalie. You know, do you not, how I came to find her? No? Well, I haven't told it as a rule. Her father had served on the same division staff with Major Barry during the war, and a strong friendship grew up between them. When Captain Baird was killed, his brother-in-law came all the way to Virginia after his body, and Major Barry was allowed to go with it as far as Washington, and there he met this gentleman, Nathalie's uncle by marriage. His impression of Major Barry as being a sturdy, warm hearted fellow who would do all he could for the widow and orphan, especially for this little girl who was named, as Nathalie has only recently told me, for his own wife. I wondered how she came by that name, but it seems that this was Mrs. Baird's younger and favorite sister. Already, however, this gentlemen had four children of his own and could not well provide for more. A desultory correspondence was kept up for awhile, and then it dropped off, but in 1876 this Mr. Williams wrote that his wife was practically destitute, that his own business was completely ruined, and he begged us to do something for her, saying that she was a good, pure minded, lovely girl and influencing that he would have been only too thankful had heaven blessed him with such children.

"So the major wrote there when east on leave, and she has been with us for a year now, and she is lovely and was content and happy until just a few days ago. I watched her narrowly at the time of Mr. Maynard's mishap, half expecting her to be greatly shocked and distressed. Shocked she was and measurably distressed, but not to the extent I had expected. This change in her has not come through him. She has suddenly met some attentions from strain, and it is the more trying because she cannot tell or will not tell what it is. She begs me not to ask any more, but sometimes"—and here Mrs. Barry looked appealingly across the bed into the face of her friend — "sometimes I feel sore she would confide in you, and you could help her. Will you?"

"Indeed I will if she will let me," was the warm hearted reply. "Now I must get back to Major Stannard or he'll be seeking for me and saying dreadful things in Apache. Tomorrow morning I'll come to you again."

An hour later Nathalie Baird, kneeling at the bedside of her friend and protector, gazed long and earnestly into the placid face, bent her ear to listen for the gentle, measured breathing that though to assure herself that its sleep was sound; then slowly, cautiously, arose from her knees to extinguish all the lamp and set the night light on the floor, slipped into the dimly lighted front room and thence to the hall. There, taking a hooded cloak from a hook and a pair of leather shoes from the door, peered up and down the row, noted the flitting lights at the barracks and the sound of footfalls hurried, hastily withdrew a moment as an officer orderly, blanket and robe laden, came laboring down the line, then, once more glancing out, stepped softly forth upon the piazza and, shrinking within the warm folds of her cloak, glided around the corner of the house and hurried with long, noiseless tread to the spacious yard that lay to the north. The servants had long since retired to their beds and their quarters were in rear, but the girl trembled as she passed their windows, yet pressed resolutely on, and presently, among the outlying buildings, was swallowed up in the darkness of the close of night.

EXPECTING TO FIGHT

FILIPINOS INCREASING THEIR ARMY BY RECRUITING.

Arms Depots Established and Country Districts Levied on for Supplies—Manila the Danger Point—Latest Advices From General Otis Are Considered Far From Reassuring—Instructed to Avoid Hostilities but Is Ready for Vigorous Defense.

MANILA, Jan. 25.—Reports from the interior indicate that Aguinaldo's authority is now generally recognized. Every available male is being recruited and arms depots are being established at San Bernardino, Union, Trinidad and other large towns. The surrounding country is being levied on for supplies and the Filipino troops are living on the fat of the land, while the native villagers are compelled to subsist on rice.

There is some friction between the Filipino civil and military authorities, but they are united on the question of independence. It is estimated that there are fully and it is said that there are nearly 50 Maxim guns at Malolos, some of them having been recently acquired.

The Filipino military authorities are convinced, they say, that the Americans will be unable to work effectively outside of Manila in the event of hostilities, hence they feel confident of the future.

The Filipinos of Calacon and Gegalandin, mistaking salutes exchanged between British and German warships on Jan. 18 moved 3,000 men to the front in order of battle, covering the adjacent country, but they did not attack the American lines.

MANILA THE DANGER POINT

Advices From General Otis Far From Reassuring.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The advices from Manila which have reached the war department are far from reassuring. It is understood that General Otis reports an expectation on his part that the insurgents are about to force an issue, and if this should be so the result cannot be foreseen. Manila itself, and not Iloilo, as might at first be suspected, is regarded as the danger point just now.

While the instructions to General Otis have been to avoid any hostile clash with the natives, so far as that plan is consistent with the maintenance of his position, it is realized here that it is within the power of any excited or intoxicated person between the two antagonistic forces. It must be understood that there is nothing in General Otis' instructions to prevent him from most vigorously defending himself and the interests imposed to his charge. General Otis is so efficient that the officials here feel no anticipation as to the outcome of a contest between the American forces and those under Aguinaldo, particularly as General Otis would have the full co-operation of the American fleet under Dewey. But it is felt that, if possible, a conflict should be avoided just now, for the president has no doubt that the misguided Filipinos can be brought to a realization of the true situation and peacefully accept the American conditions.

Spanish Prisoners Released.

MADRID, Jan. 25.—The minister of war, General Correa, received a dispatch from General Rios, the Spanish commander in the Philippines, announcing that all the sick and maimed civil and military prisoners have been released by the Filipinos. The general adds that he hopes the remainder of the prisoners will be liberated shortly.

WORK IS TOO GREAT.

Secretary Alger Organizes a Commission to Govern New Territory.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The secretary of war has completed the organization of a colonial commission to undertake the administration here in Washington of all matters of detail respecting the government of the territories acquired during the war or occupied by the United States. The personnel of the commission will be General Robert P. Kennedy of Bellefontaine, Ohio; Curtis Guild of Massachusetts, and George W. Watkins of Grand Rapids, Mich. Up to this point the secretary and assistant secretary have undertaken themselves to deal with the administration of insular affairs, but the questions involved have become so numerous and complicated that it has been found absolutely necessary to call for assistants. The commission will deal with the bestowal of franchises and concessions, the distribution of moneys to be spent in public improvements, and all of the troublesome issues that have arisen and are likely to arise in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

MONTANA'S ACTION UPHELD

Has a Right to Tax Unpatented Selections of Railroad Companies.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—In the United States supreme court, Justice McKenna handed down an opinion in the case of the Northern Pacific Railway company, versus the treasurer of Jefferson county, Mon. The case involves the right of the state authorities to tax railroad lands within the Northern Pacific grant which are unpatented, because their character with reference to minerals has not been determined. The railroad company contended that such right had not existed, but the decision of the circuit court was against the company and the supreme court upheld this opinion. Justices Brewer, Shiras, White and Peckham dissented.

Habeas Corpus Begun.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 23.—Habeas corpus proceedings have been begun to release County Judge Skipton, ordered imprisoned by the house for contempt in refusing to bring in the ballots in a contest case.

WITHOUT ANY TROUBLE.

German Official Says There Will Be No Friction Over Samoa.

BERLIN, Jan. 23.—The correspondent here of the Associated Press has had a conversation with a high official of the German foreign office, Dr. Hamann, who said:

"The government has just received a detailed report from Samoa which they think reliable, all the more so because the report distributes the blame for the errors committed there pretty evenly though some points remain unexplained.

"The report says that Mataafa, prior to his election, was recognized as eligible by the three consuls. It is true that Mataafa in 1888 was hostile to Germany but the situation is different now, and Germany no longer objected to Mataafa. And why Chief Justice Chambers annulled Mataafa's election we do not know. It was certainly not under the terms of the Berlin treaty. The decision is all the more regrettable because bloodshed might have been foreseen. No white's property, however, has been destroyed, and we do not know why the chief justice sought refuge on the British warship Porpoise.

"Dr. Raffel, the German municipal president, acted illegally in action relative to the court.

"We can only explain these things by supposing that the officials there had grown nervous. The German government, however, takes the whole business calmly, and doubtless it will be adjusted diplomatically by negotiations between Washington, Berlin and London. We do not expect any difficulties. Germany adheres strictly to the terms of the Berlin treaty. Whatever illegal excesses Germans may have committed we shall disavow."

CAUCUS ACTION RATIFIED.

Porter J. McCumber Elected Senator From North Dakota.

BISMARCK, N. D., Jan. 23.—Porter J. McCumber of Richland county was elected ne United States senator in the joint assembly of the North Dakota legislature at noon for the six years following the term of William N. Roach, Democrat. Of the 78 Republican votes all but one were cast for the successful candidate. That one was for Johnson. The fusion vote went to Thomas Kleinogle of Fargo, who received 18 votes.

McCumber is 43 years of age and has been prominently identified with Republican politics in the state since territorial days. He is an able orator, learned attorney and distinguished citizen of the state. Although his election was accomplished after a bitter fight, it was absolutely devoid of scandal and there has been at no time any imputation that any other than honorable methods were employed by any candidate in the field in promoting his election.

SENATOR STEWART AGAIN.

The Silver Leader Re-Elected to Represent Nevada.

CARSON, Nev., Jan. 25.—William Stewart was elected United States senator, receiving 24 votes. Newlands was not presented for nomination.

Paired 12, absent without pair 2. No election.

Kean Senator From New Jersey.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 25.—The two houses of the New Jersey legislature ballotted separately at noon for a United States senator. John Kean (Rep.) received 14 votes in the senate and 37 in the house. James Smith, Jr., (Dem.) received 7 in the senate and 22 in the house.

Clark Continues to Gain.

HELENA, Mon., Jan. 25.—The day's senatorial ballot resulted: Clark 38, Conrad 31, Hedges (Rep.) 15, Fox 2, Maginnis 7; necessary for a choice 47. The feature of the ballot was Clark's gain of two from Conrad's home (Cascade county) members.

First Formal Ballot Taken.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 25.—The first formal vote for United States senator to succeed John H. Mitchell, was taken in each house of the legislature. Combined vote resulted: Quarles 40, Stephenson 26, Babcock 17, Cook 18, Webb 10, Ryan (Dem.) 21.

Culberson Succeeds Mills.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 25.—A special to The Post Dispatch from Austin, Tex., says: Ex-Governor C. A. Culberson was elected by acclamation, by the legislature, at noon, as United States senator to succeed Roger Q. Mills.

Lacked One Vote.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Jan. 25.—The vote for senator in the house was: McGraw 38, Scott 29, Goff 1, absent 1. The senate voted: Scott 18, McGraw 8. The total was: Scott 47, McGraw 46. Necessary to elect 48.

Clarke Re-elected Senator.

CHEYENNE, Wy., Jan. 25.—In the separate balloting Senator Clarke received a total of 47 votes to 8 for Osborne.

No Change in Delaware.

DOVER, Del., Jan. 25.—The seventh ballot for United States senator showed practically no change.

Completed to White Pass.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 23.—Peter L. Harper, secretary of D. C. Frazer, the English capitalist who is backing the White Pass and Yukon railway, is here, on his way east. He says the railway is now completed from Skaguay to the summit of White Pass. The company is hiring all the men it can get, as it is desired to complete the road as soon as possible to Fort Selkirk, 330 miles from Skaguay. [illegible]

The postmasters for these offices are respectively Othilie P. Owre, Lars Eriksson and Horace Cummins.

THE IRELAND LANDS.

Decision in the Contest by the Secretary of the Interior.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The secretary of the interior has affirmed the decision of the commissioner of the general land office in the famous case of Archbishop Ireland, involving title to 33,178 acres of land in Minnesota. He holds that under the first contract, made with the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway company, on July 17, 1880, Archbishop Ireland was not a purchaser but that under the second contract made on March 30, 1883, he was a purchaser. Accordingly the lands covered by the first contracts will not go to Archbishop Ireland, while he will receive these under the second contract.

The lands in question are practically all occupied, and the settlers will get the benefit of that portion of the decision adverse to Mgr. Ireland.

Bank Directors Must Pay.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 24.—The directors of the Irish-American bank as defendants in the suit brought by William C. DRAINAGE IN VALLEY.

The Legislature Ought to give $100,000 to Complete the System.

NEARLY ONE MILLION OF ACRES

Now Wet, Can be Made Tillable if Ditches are Constructed.

The people of the Red River Valley on the Minnesota side of the Red river desire the present state legislature to make an appropriation of $100,000 to be used in constructing main outlet ditches in different parts of this famous wheat producing area. This money is needed to carry out the plans for drainage made by the Red River Drainage commission which was created by the legislature in 1893. At that time $100,000 was voted to begin the work of draining certain parts of the valley, but this sum is now exhausted and the work must be delayed till additional funds are secured from the state. As the legislature in 1893 deemed it advisable to appropriate money to be expended in recovering swamp land to cultivation and as the results from the ditches already completed have been beneficial not merely to the settlers but to the state itself, the dwellers in the valley feel sure that our present lawmakers will see the wisdom of letting this good work go on, and of course it cannot go on without state funds.

Surveys of this tract of land made by skilled engineers in the employ of the state have demonstrated the feasibility of reclaiming vast stretches of territory which now during the spring and early summer are too wet for cultivation. The depressions where nature has not provided natural waterways must be drained by artificial means, and the situation of the land is such that though it requires money to make the improvements, still the problem from the engineering standpoint is not at all difficult.

With the appropriation asked for half a million acres and more of the richest kind of soil will be made tillable. This land is capable of yielding such large crops of grain that if it were once put in such condition that it could be cultivated it would be bought at once and thus by granting the sum asked for the legislature will fill the coffers of the state with the money received from the sale of land that is now little more than a drug on the market, and the valley will be more thickly settled and more prosperous and thus indirectly the state will be benefited, for in the prosperity of any one part of Minnesota all other parts share. The swamp lands will be increased in value five or fifteen dollars an acre by the contemplated drainage. It is simply good business on the part of the state to finish the work already begun.

Moreover, the state ought to make this grant for another reason. When these lands were patented to the state by the general government it was expressly stipulated that the money derived by the state from the sale of these lands should be expended to reclaim land that was not fit for cultivation. The state has received several hundred thousand dollars in this way but only a small part of this sum has been used as it was originally intended that it should be used.

The state has indeed made some surveys and given some money, but the counties too have gone to the expense of making spectal topographical surveys with a view to finding out the actual cost of recovering the swamp land within the limits of each. However as the territory to be drained is a great part of it state swamp land it is hardly fair to ask the counties to improve land that does not belong to them. If the state wishes to give this land to the counties, the latter would soon put in a complete drainage system, but, as it is, the state must construct the large outlet ditches and then the counties will build the supplementary drains. Some counties, part of the county on Snake river, and in the south eastern part on the Sand Hill river, between Behrami and Crookston, the ditch on this last river not being completed.

Norman county too has its share of land which is overflowed with water during part of the year. This wet soil lies along the course of the Wild Rice river, between the White Earth reservation and the Red river. The swamp land is very small indeed. The people simply see the advisability of not letting land go to waste every year when a little money wisely expended will make such land tillable.

Furthermore, the JOURNAL learns from Prof. W. R. Hoag, of the State University, who is a member of the State Drainage commission, that the state ditches in the Red River valley have fully demonstrated their economic value to the state by saving, during the season of 1897, crops, which must otherwise have been drowned out, of a value exceeding two to three times the whole amount expended by the state thus far in their construction. The wisdom of the legislation which has carried thus far into effect this system of drainage is thus proven beyond dispute. The demonstration is to be seen in every township of the valley coming under the influence of one of these ditches. Here marshes have been transformed into the best of hay-land and cold wet lands have been converted into cultivated fields.

A still greater and more general benefit consists in the earlier seeding time thus furnished to all the land which, through the action of these ditches, gains a series from the spring storm-water. Occasional damage to wheat from early frost renders three to eight days thus gained of vital importance. It may decide between half a crop and, at infrequent intervals, no crop at all. Sand Hill river ditch in Polk county exerts such beneficial influence over not less than 100,000 acres.

SAND HILL RIVER DITCH, POLK COUNTY.

This ditch is thirteen miles long, and exceeding 50,000 acres. It exerts a beneficial influence over at least 100,000 acres.

Wild Rice drains almost as much land as the Red Lake river, though only about one third the size of the latter. As it passes from the hills in the east over the prairie till it empties into the Red River of the North, it meanders to such an extent that it traverses three times the distance it would if it took a direct course. The result is that the spring freshets and the storm waters cause it to overflow its banks and inundate the surrounding territory. If some of the big bends were cut off and auxiliary water courses in connection with the river constructed, the surplus water could be carried off and the floods would be prevented. In 1897 along the banks of this river grain in vast quantities was destroyed by the overflow.

In Norman county the conditions are much the same as in Norman county. The Roseau river flowing north across the international boundary is sluggish and crooked. Its tributaries to the east are swift flowing streams and empty all their waters into the Roseau. As the Roseau has little fall and its branches with their swift currents flow from hilly land into this one slow running stream the result is an annual overflow. The soil here is rich, but it is worthless in time of wet weather. In comparison, however, with the land that can be cultivated without fear of damage from overflow, the SAND HILL STATE DITCH, POLK COUNTY.

Showing growth of flags and other vegetation of two years accumulation obstructing the free flow of water and showing the necessity of township maintenance and supervision.

running water which many of these ditches furnish throughout the year to pastures and cattle ranches might well be mentioned as among the real though lesser benefits.

The commissioners examined each ditch throughout its length both in 1897 and 1898. Almost without exception the ditches were found to be fulfilling all expectations. In but few instances were there found any natural tendencies which threaten to impair their continued usefulness. The small slope of a few ditches and consequent slow current has allowed a deposit of sediment which has been followed by a considerable growth of flags and reeds. This to continue uninterrupted would, of course, lead in a short time to a stoppage of all flow in the ditch. A removal of this sediment during the later part of the summer when there is no water in the ditch is the simple and inexpensive remedy.

The counties, without exception, have gone to considerable expense to bridge the ditches and where this required a forty-foot bridge at each mile, which is not unusual, this has not been a small expense upon the county.

While some of the counties are actively engaged in supplementing the work of the state by constructing connecting drains, others are doing little. In many cases of this latter class much might have been done for the cause, as the farmers were ready and eager to do the work, had the funds been sufficient to allow the employment of the necessary engineering services to start the work.

A STATE PARK.

Creation of Such a Park Would Add To the Attractions of the State.

Speaking of the question of a state park in the Leech Lake and Cass Lake country Bishop Gilbert of St. Paul says:

"The country is one of unbroken majestic forests, of deep and beautiful lakes, of limpid streams and attractive valleys. It is the home of the water fowl, the deer and the moose. The lakes and rivers are filled with all kinds of fish from the perch to the mighty muscallonge. Its water connections are so remarkable that one can journey by canoe from Leech Lake agency almost to Red Lake with but three or four short and easy portages. The timber which still exists in abundance consists of varieties of pine, maple and white birch. It would be quite impossible in the United States to find a region more ideally fitted by nature for a public park than this beautiful virgin land. Its advantages as a sanitarium have been pointed out and they are not exaggerated, but its advantages as a grand state park and game preserver have not been so fully emphasized. They cannot be too strongly put."

COURT DATES CHANGED.

Kittson and Norman Counties will Get Two Terms of Court Yearly.

Judge Watts received word last Tuesday from Senator Grindeland at St. Paul that a bill making certain changes in the time of holding the district court in the Fourteenth Judicial district had passed the senate and gone to the house. As the bill stands court in Norman county would open on the second Monday in November and the fourth Monday in March; in Polk county on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in January and the first Tuesday in June; Marshall county on the first Monday in March and the first Monday in December; in Kittson county on the first Monday in March and third Monday in November; in Red Lake county on the first Monday in February and the fourth Monday in October.

By this change Kittson county will have two terms of court instead of one as now, and Norman county also will be sure of two terms where as it is the opening term is held only when specially called by the judge.

Lawyers in Norman county however, wish to have the dates for their county changed to the second Monday in December and the first Monday after the Fourth of July. Judge Watts also thinks the winter term at Red Lake Falls would better be changed to the second Monday in February, as it might otherwise interfere with the Polk county term.

The Model Farm.

Last Sunday in company with several others, says the Fertile Journal, we visited the stock farm of Mr. J. S. Nichols, 3½ miles west of Fertile. Mr. Nichols has a herd of an even one hundred head of full blooded and mixed Durhams and Jerseys, and are in the best of condition. Of these are about thirty steers that he intends to fatten and place on the market in the spring. Mr. Nichols has an ideal stock farm and does not need to go off his farm for anything. A wind mill pumps his water, grinds feed, cuts his corn fodder, saws wood, and does various other work. He has a small creamery plant, among which is a seperator, and he tells us that this was the most profitable branch of farming he had the last year by a long ways. It is to be hoped that more farmers will follow Mr. Nichol's example. It will take a number of years of courses to make much of a showing but in the long run you are bound to come out a winner.

Brief Work All Right.

Judge Montague was before the supreme court at St. Paul last week in regard to the case of Wilkinson vs. City of Crookston. The clerk of the supreme court had held that as the brief and the paper book were not exactly as the law required the city would have to pay the cost of the printing. The court, however, has decided that the brief is acceptable but the paper book was cut from 56 pages to 40, thus reducing the costs $12.

SEED GRAIN LOANS.

Farmers Had To Have Not More Than 160 Acres and This Mortgaged.

$5,000 OWED BY POLK COUNTY.

County Can't Collect In Taxes—State Ought To Cancel Debt.

Seed grain loans were made to farmers of Polk county under the provisions of chapter 4 of the general laws of 1893 and chapter 235 of the general laws of 1895. Under these laws loans could be made only in case the farmer owned not more than 160 acres of land and had a mortgage on the same and was in such unfortunate circumstances generally as not to be able to secure seed grain in any other manner than by availing himself of the benefits of the laws named.

A number of the northern counties of the state, desiring to help their needy farmers, granted loans and have been able to collect only a portion of the loans so made, from the fact that many of the beneficiaries were obliged to abandon their farms as a result of poverty or foreclosure and have removed from the county. Besides the courts have held in all cases that the provisions of the laws making the loans a tax against the land are void.

The construction of the laws was such as to give no adequate security to the counties granting the loans and as a result a large portion was uncollectible and is unpaid at this time, the counties sustaining a clear loss of the unpaid balance. The amount due the state from Polk county, and which for compliance with the requirements of the seed grain law of 1897 is extended upon the tax list of 1898, is $4,330.07, an unjust burden imposed upon the taxpayers by badly constructed laws.

This money was loaned to the needy farmers in good faith. The state was supposedly granting the loan and the county was merely acting as a distributing agent. If the state does not cancel the so-called debt which the county is supposed to owe the state, the boasted generosity of the state in the matter of the seed grain loans will simply amount to a scheme to get the counties to loan their own funds. The legislature will surely see the justice of the claim of the counties.

PRESIDENT HILL ON DRAINAGE.

State Cannot Put Money to Better Use than In Red River Valley.

"I have seen thousands of acres of as fine growing wheat as ever sprouted in Minnesota, killed by one spring freshet causing the water to overflow the swamps and marshes and back upon the tilled land." This is simply a sample of the evidence that J. J. Hill gave before the legislative committee which has in charge the matter of drainage. There is no more competent judge in this matter than Mr. Hill and every word he said was in favor of an appropriation of $100,000 for the drainage system in the Red River Valley.

"Another $100,000 could be put in the Red River Valley with as good results as the first $100,000. I venture to say that the state has realized considerably more from the increased value of its own lands from the system of drainage than it put into the work in its appropriation of $100,000."

America's Prettiest Country Homes.

The first twenty-five of "The Prettiest Country Homes in America" are shown in the February Ladies' Home Journal. There will be over one hundred of these photographs, and they will picture in detail the most attractive and artistic country and suburban homes in the United States. The pictures that will constitute this series were selected from the photographs of seven thousand of the prettiest American homes. A competitive contest for a photograph of the prettiest house in this country brought a picture of every home having any claims to attractiveness or beauty, and from these the very best were selected for publication in The Ladies' Home Journal exclusively. Houses of all sizes, from every section of the country, of various costs, have been selected, and the series will be valuable for suggestions to those who contemplate building a house or remodeling an old one.

DANGER IN CALCIUM CARBIDE.

Rules Governing Its Sale in New York—Liquified Acetylene Gas.

Supsrintendent Murray of the Bureau of Combustihles, has made regulations governing the transportation, storage and sale of calcium carbide, which the firemsn declare to be a source of danger in a hurning building, because when water reaches it acetylsns gas is given off. A numhsr of stores keep it for use in bicycle lamps. Hereafter, in transit or in storage, it must be enclosed in hermetically sealed iron receptacles marked "Dangsrous, if not kept dry." No package may contain more than 100 pounds. It must be stored in isolated huildings that are fireproof and waterproof. No artificial light or heat will be permitted in the building where it is stored. Not more than twenty pounds, in bulk or in cartridges, may be kept in any store or factory, and this must be in a fireproof safe or vault above the street grade and it must be kept six inches above the floor.

The manufacture, transportation, storage, sale and use of liquified acetylene is absolutely prohibited within the limits of this city.—New York Sun.

Each Cow Gives 216 Pounds of Butter

L. Davis, one of the pioneers of Minnesota, settling in Wabasha county in 1856, going thence to Pope county in 1868, and to Polk county in 1877, was a caller at the JOURNAL office recently. Last year from the milk of eight cows he churned 1,726 ponnds of butter—the butter being weighed before the salt was put into it. This shows that dairy farming pays provided the cows and milk are skillfully handled.

That Army Beef.

Anent the matter of what kind of beef was furnished the army during the late war it is interesting to get some evidence right here at home. Sergeant Major Carl C. Weaver, of the 14th Regiment of Minnesota, spent some time with his father W. Weaver, in Crookston, after his regiment was mustered out. Asked about the canned beef that the boys got at Chickamauga he said it was very much like gelatine and that the soldiers seldom touched it. When the army changed its headquarters to Knoxville he himself saw several dozen cases dumped in one of the rivers that the train bearing the soldiers passed over. This evidence rather corroborates the testimony of General Miles.

Oh, How Thankful

Pain Was Maddening and Hope Had Been Abandoned—Wonderful Results of Purifying the Blood.

"A very severe pain came in my left knee, which grew worse and worse, and finally a sore broke out above the knee. It discharged a great deal and the pain from my thigh down was maddening. Large, hard, purple spots appeared on my leg. I suffered in this way for years, and gave up all hope of ever being cured. My wife was reading of a case like mine cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and she advised me to try it. I began taking it and when I had used a few bottles I found relief from my suffering. MONEY FOR CUBANS

PRESIDENT HAS AUTHORIZED DISTRIBUTION OF $3,000,000.

According to a Havana Report—Robert P. Porter, Now at Havana, Chosen to Make the Disbursement—Cubans May Reject It—Doubt Expressed Whether the Sum Will Be Considered Satisfactory—General Gomez Determined Not to Advise His Men to Disband.

HAVANA, Jan. 31.—President McKinley is understood to have empowered Robert P. Porter to arrange for the disbursement of $3,000,000 among the Cuban soldiers. Mr. Porter will probably go with Senor Gonzales de Quesada to meet General Gomez to induce the commander-in-chief to disband his forces and to lend his influences to the United States military administration. Mr. Porter and Senor Quesada are conferring with the governor general.

MAY NOT ACCEPT IT.

Doubted if Cuban Leaders Will Be Satisfied With $3,000,000.

HAVANA, Jan. 31.—Senor Castillo, who has returned from Remedios after a two days' visit with General Gomez, says the latter is much hurt by what he regards as American neglect of his authority and rights and is determined not to advise his soldiers to go home penniless. Gomez proposes coming into the neighborhood soon and will review the Cuban troops at Marianao, though the date has not yet been fixed.

There is some doubt whether he and the other military chiefs will accept the $3,000,000, no matter what other favorable conditions may be offered. Mr. Porter, who, it is understood, is a close personal representative of President McKinley and the secretary of war, is directed to learn the best possible terms that can be made and is empowered to offer what it is hoped will prove agreeable terms.

Much is expected of the assistance he will receive, when approaching General Gomez, from Senor Jose Miguel Gomez and Senor de Quesada.

RAISE THE OFFER.

Said the Administration Will Advance $12,000,000 to Pay Cuban Soldiers.

HAVANA, Feb. 1.—Robert P. Porter, the representative of President McKinley, and Senor Quesada, the Cuban commissioner, who recently left Washington on a special mission to Cuba, started at 5 p. m. for Caibarien, province of Santa Clara, in order to see General Gomez.

Mr. Porter's mission to General Gomez is of a two-fold character, to discuss with him fully the position of the Cuban army and to invite him to Havana.

The Washington administration desires an immediate and friendly settlement of the Cuban army question. As the military chiefs decidedly refused to accept $3,000,000 in complete satisfaction of the claims of the soldiery, Washington has decided, it is said, to offer a much larger sum, even as large as $15,000,000, if less will not be accepted. Whatever is agreed to will be a first charge upon the revenues of the island until it is paid. The Cubans, civilian and military, are awaiting the settlement of this sore that may prolong the American occupation, but as it seems to be their general wish that the money be paid a great sum, the administration at Washington will yield, it is understood, and open negotiations with this ultimate object.

NEEDS MANY MILLIONS.

General Lodlow's Plan for Making an Improvement of Havana.

HAVANA, Jan. 30.—Major General Lodlow has on his table several projects for underground sewerage, street paving, an up to date school system and improvements of lesser importance. He has had pressed on his attention a series of suggestions on how to create an ideal city. The only obstacle is money. A million is nothing. Something between ten and twenty millions is wanted and General Lodlow is turning over in his mind the best way of asking Washington, through Major General Brooke, for leave to lend the city, so that the next generation, as well as this one, may have an opportunity to pay for the improvements.

THE VULTURES STARVING.

Santiago's Death Rate the Smallest in Her History.

SANTIAGO, Jan. 30.—The health of Santiago was better than it is now. Only one death has occurred within the city limits during the last five days. Nothing approaching this immunity is recorded in the history of the city. The vultures, which were formerly the city's scavengers, are starving and now pounce on cats and small dogs on the streets and are significant in illustrating the changed sanitary conditions.

NO MONOPOLIES WANTED.

Santiago Paper Opposes Schemes of Foreign Capitalists.

SANTIAGO, Jan. 30.—The Cuba Libre publishes a long article setting forth its objections to the projects of foreign capitalists for "cornering Cuba's virgin soil" for the purpose of building railroads, establishing electric plants and carrying on similar enterprises. "We do not want anything to interfere with Cuba except the natives," says the paper. "America is proof of what monopolies can do in ruining a country."

Disposal of the Customs.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Jan. 31.—Governor General Brooke has called the customs authorities to pay over $50,000 for the city of Santiago and $50,000 for each of the other principal ports of entry in Santiago province. This will leave for the general government about $250,000—an arrangement which the officials here consider not unfair.

MONEY WAS USED.

Scandal in the California Senatorial Contest is Officially Disclosed.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Jan. 28.—The special committee appointed to investigate the scandals connected with the election of the United States senator has filed its report. The committee finds that Howard E. Wright, speaker of the assembly, received from U. S. Grant, Jr., through his political manager, Milton J. Green, $900 as a gift and $700 as loan; that Wright, prior to his election, deceived John D. Spreckles and W. S. Leake to secure their support for the speakership, and that by promising to vote for Robert N. Bulla for United States senator he secured Bulla's support for the speakership.

The report further states that Milton J. Green, the duly appointed and accredited agent of U. S. Grant, Jr., expended large sums of money, exceeding in the aggregate $20,000, but the exact amount of which is to the committee unknown, to secure the election of a Republican legislature. The committee of investigation recommends:

First—That the conduct of Howard E. Wright, speaker of the assembly, as above set forth, be held to be reprehensible in an extreme degree, and that no more censure on the part of the assembly can meet the requirements of justice, but the matter of adequate punishment be left entirely in the assembly without recommendation from the committee.

Second—That the expenditure of large sums of money in aid of the candidacy of a United States senator in the manner above set forth is wrong and reprehensible in that it is calculated to corrupt morals, to debauch the political system, to deter poor men of ability from entering upon a senatorial campaign and to give to the rich an unwarranted and unjustifiable advantage over men of equal ability and qualifications but of limited means.

That the receiving of money by legislative candidates from probable senatorial candidates, either directly or indirectly, in aid of their own candidacy, is reprehensible for the same reasons.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Jan. 31.—When the assembly had been called to order Speaker Wright tendered his resignation as speaker of the house. The resignation was accepted and Allen Anderson, speaker pro tem, was elected speaker in Wright's place.

CLARK IS ELECTED.

Fight for the Montana Senatorship at Last Over.

HELENA, Mon., Jan. 30.—The 18th senatorial ballot resulted in the election of the Hon. Democratic candidate, William A. Clark, who received 64 of the 93 votes cast. Twelve of the sixteen Republicans voted for Clark.

Before the result was announced Representative D. Mutts, leader of the anti-Clark forces, declared he had evidence that certain members who voted for Mr. Clark had been bought; that this evidence was in addition to that already submitted to the investigating committee, and that Mr. Clark would never be seated at Washington. There is no doubt that charges of bribery will be preferred when Mr. Clark presents his credentials to the senate. The Clark men, however, declare the charges are lightly, and say they court as full an investigation as can be made.

FOSTER CHOSEN.

Washington State Republicans Finally Name Their Candidate.

OLYMPIA, Wash., Feb. 1.—A. G. Foster of Tacoma was nominated for United States senator by the Republican caucus. King county and Ankeny forces outside of that county left the caucus, but 48 remained and made the caucus nomination of Foster unanimous. Fifty-one votes are required to elect in joint session of the legislature.

Senator-elect Foster, is 62 years of age. He was born in Belchertown, Mass., and went to Wisconsin when 18 years of age. In 1862 he engaged in the lumber business in Minnesota and came to Tacoma in 1889, where he has been continuously in the lumber business as vice president of the St. Paul and Tacoma Lumber company.

QUARLES NOW SENATOR.

Wisconsin Legislature Confirms Republican Caucus Choice.

MADISON, Wis., Feb. 1.—In the joint session of the senate and assembly, Rep., of Milwaukee, was formally elected United States senator to succeed John L. Mitchell, whose term expires March 4, 1809, receiving the solid Republican vote. The Democratic vote was cast for Timothy E. Ryan of Waukesha.

Hayward Gains a Vote.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 31.—Judge M. L. Hayward gained one vote in the day's senatorial ballot, that of State Senator Steele. The change is regarded as important as Senator Steele has heretofore been leading supporter and virtual manager of E. H. Hinshaw.

Quay Still Lacks Thirteen.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Feb. 1.—The vote for United States senator follows: Quay, 104; Jenks, 81; Dalzell, 14; scattering, 34. Total, 233; necessary to a choice, 117; paired, 14; absent without pair, 4; no election.

SEVEN PEOPLE KILLED.

Snowslide Near Glacier on the Canadian Pacific Road.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Jan. 31.—A snowslide is reported near Glacier, a station on the Pacific road, in which seven people were killed and a number of others buried. The wires are down and particulars cannot be learned.

Nine Million Deficit for January.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—The forthcoming report of the government receipts and expenditures for January will show the receipts to have been about $41,779,000 and the expenditures about $51,507,000 leaving a deficit for the month of about $9,900,000.

MAKING OF A TREATY

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN COMMISSIONERS AND PRESIDENT

Sent to the Senate—First Suggestion for Acquiring the Philippines Came From the Former—Senator Gray Protested. Held out to the Last Against the Policy as Inconsistent and Un-American. Spaniards From the First Insisted on an Indemnity for the Islands.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—The president has sent to the senate correspondence bearing upon the peace treaty. It includes most of the letters and dispatches from the commissioners to the president and from the president to the commissioners, in the way of instructions in return.

In submitting the papers the president sent a brief message saying that he transmitted them in accordance with the resolution. The reading consumed the entire time of the executive session, lasting from 2 to 5:30 p. m. except a few minutes at the close. The principal interest among the senators attached to the president's instructions to insist upon the cession of the island of Luzon and after that in the decision to take the entire group of islands. This latter development appeared from the correspondence to be a growth and the suggestion was made by the commissioners to the president at the inception of conferences at Paris after the arrival there of the commissioners. In his dispatch concerning Luzon, he said "there was but one alternative—the United States."

Must Either Take the Island

and assume sovereignty or return it to Spain, and of the two courses he preferred the former. Spain was generally unwilling to cede the Philippine islands. The commissioners, with the exception of Senator Gray, urged that to take Luzon and leave the other islands of the archipelago in the hands of the Spaniards would be to invite innumerable complications with other nations and especially with Europe and with Spain. Much stress was laid upon the probability of future trouble with Spain. "With Luzon under American authority there would soon be such a vast improvement," they wrote, that the other islanders would soon grow more and more rebellious, and with Spain's oppressive methods of government we would soon again find that we had another Cuba at the other door. Furthermore, there would be constant filibustering and we should

Find Ourselves Spending Millions

to preserve a state of neutrality, just as we did with Cuba prior to our declaration of war, on account of that idea." General Merritt's testimony on this point was cited and made the reason for much of the argument in favor of taking the entire group. The president does not appear to have at any time given explicit instructions to compromise the bargain by taking all the Philippines, but rather, after hearings full explanation, to have left the matter to the discretion of the commissioners. The entire controversy was practically over the Philippines and the question of assuming responsibility for the payment of the Spanish indemnity to which the Cuban revenues were pledged. The Spaniards from the first for the Philippines, and the correspondence shows that after the proposition to pay $20,000,000 was made the negotiations proceeded much more smoothly and were soon brought to a close.

The American commissioners appear to have been of one mind as to the wisdom of taking over the whole of the Philippines, with the exception of Senator Gray, who, notwithstanding he signed the treaty, held out to the last against the policy of acquiring these islands. In one noteworthy dispatch he pleaded zealously against the policy as unpatriotic, un-American and inconsistent with probity and good statesmanship.

After a brief debate the senate refused to print the correspondence.

DATE SET FOR A VOTE.

Senate Will Dispose of the Peace Treaty on Monday, Feb. 6.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The senate committee of 45 minutes in executive session in arriving at a decision to vote on the peace treaty. As soon as the doors were closed and the public excluded, Senator Davis, chairman of the committee on foreign relations, took the floor and announced that he was authorized by the committee to accept the proposition made in executive session by Senator Gorman, to vote on the treaty within 10 days. He therefore asked unanimous consent that the vote should be taken at 3 o'clock p. m., on Feb. 6, saying that exactly 10 legislative days would intervene between this time and that. He intimated that if there were any objections to this date, he would like to hear them. No none were heard, and the hour and the day were unanimously agreed to.

AGONCILLO PERSISTENT.

Filipino Representative Sends Another Communication to Secretary Hay.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—Sixto Lopez, secretary to Agoncillo, the Philippine representative here, called at the state department about 3 o'clock and left with the chief clerk another communication addressed to the secretary of state, protesting against the attitude of the government towards the Filipino "republic." The terms of the protest do not go as far as any attempt. The same fate awaits this communication as that which befell its predecessor—it will diplomatically be ignored.

Accompanying the communication is a long memorial addressed to the senate, which is a long argument against the ratification of the treaty, which the envoy asks the secretary to send to that body. Agoncillo feels that he is bound by courtesy not to make it public until an opportunity is given to the department to transmit it to the senate.

"Well, sir," demanded Horatio Bulhon, "what particular reason have you to offer for asking me to let you have my daughter Gladys?"

"I—I love her, and she loves me," Reginald Biddlethwaite replied.

"Oh, of course," the blunt old magnate retorted. "I've heard that song from half a dozen others. That's to be taken for granted. But what other qualifications have you?"

"I must confess," the trembling young man answered, "that I am not rich, but I can truthfully say that I have no expensive habits. I don't drink. I don't gamble. I don't chew tobacco. I don't smoke. I don't"—

"Hold on!" the millionaire broke in. "That's enough! You'll do. Your board and clothes won't cost much more than the gas you've been burning lately. What I object to is supporting fellows like my other three son-in-laws who have all the faults you say you have not. I don't mind furnishing the husbands of my daughters with the necessaries of life, but I do hate to have to settle the bills for their luxuries. Now, there is just one other point I want to have settled before I give my consent."

"What is that?" Mr. Biddlethwaite eagerly asked.

"Promise me that you will not start a newspaper. I've had enough of that trade, and I can't stand many more such experiences."

Reginald's promise made three hearts happy.—Cleveland Leader.

Vaccine Pancakes.

Cæsar's creek, on the Florida coast, was named after a famous old pirate, called Black Cæsar, whose profession added to the risks of marine insurance. After the pirates the Florida wreckers came, of whom H. A. Willoughby, in his "Across the Everglades," tells this story:

A large steamer was stranded on the reef not far from Cape Florida. No sooner did she struck than the news spread rapidly along the shore. The people for 20 miles around gathered on the beach opposite the stranded steamer. Among them were a number of Indians from the Everglades, who chanced to be there and knew what a "wreck" meant to the wreckers.

The steamer, loaded with an assorted cargo, began to break up, and barrels, cases and boxes drifted gradually ashore. Then were casks of wine, boxes of soap, cases of bottles of wine and iron and a hundred other articles. The Indians seized upon the wine and soon were in a condition that allowed the white men to secure the more valuable things.

The squaws struck a bonanza in a case of vaseline. They thought it a new variety of the white man's lard, and, starting a fire, fried pancakes in it. What a dish—pancakes a la Seminole!

Messages by Vibration.

Curiously enough, the fact appears, according to a recent traveler among the Indians of Catnquinaro, between the rivers Madeira and Rio Negro, that those people have long employed a wireless telephony, but rather after the order of wireless telegraphy.

It is made by digging a hole in the ground inside a house and laying the bottom with coarse sand well piled. On this is laid a wooden drum or hollow cylinder of wood, half filled with fine sand and layers of broken wood, bone and powdered mica—the upper part of the cylinder, which is empty, rising above the floor of the hut and closed first by leather, then by wood, and so lastly by rails inside. Outside the cylinder is packed round with fragments of wood, leather and resins, and covered with hard rubbet at the level of the soil.

To use this peculiar apparatus the drum is struck by a wooden hammer, and the vibration is evidently transmitted through the soil. The answer is heard in the drum, which is the receiver, and messages are thus sent over 1,000 yards from house to house.

Politics, Indeed.

"There is a certain elderly old gentleman attending my church," says a Detroit clergyman, "and his absence for several weeks led me to call upon him. He is not a communicant, and I am afraid at times that he is slightly skeptical. He is very pronounced in his political views, and as conversational material I rather shoot I sought to interest him by asking, 'How's politics?'

"'How's politics?' he repeated with-out a change of countenance. 'How's politics? That's a pretty question for you to ask when you know that I haven't voted two times for the last seven Sundays.'"—Exchange.

The Story of a Letter.

The National Advertiser tells a story of an old bachelor who bought a pair of socks and found attached to one of them a slip of paper with these words: "I am a young lady of 20 and would like to correspond with a bachelor with a view to matrimony." Name and address were given.

The bachelor wrote, and in a few days got this letter: "Mamma was married 30 years ago. The merchant put bought those socks from evidently did not advertise or he would have sold them. Mamma handed me your letter and said possibly I might suit you. I am 16 years old."

For Insomnia.

A curious remedy for sleeplessness is used by the inhabitants of the Samoan islands. They confine a snake in a hollow bamboo, and the hissing sound emitted by the reptile is said to quickly induce slumber.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said an Irish manager to an audience of three, "as there is nobody here, I'll dismiss you all. The performance of this night will not be performed, but will be repeated tomorrow evening."

Eyes from Australia are landed in London in such perfect preservation that they are sold as new laid.

DRAINAGE.

The matter of drainage in the Red River Valley is discussed elsewhere in this issue. The legislature will make a serious mistake, simply from a business standpoint, if a large appropriation is not voted to complete the drainage system in this section of the state. The price of the state lands will be raised several dollars an acre, at least half a million acres will be reclaimed and this land will undoubtedly be quickly settled, and the crops in the vicinity of where these overflows occur will be much more certain. No money that the state has expended in recent years has given better returns than the $100,000 voted in 1893 to begin the work of drainage in the Red River valley.

The counties are willing to do their part in this necessary work but it is impracticable, in most instances, for them to begin work till the state has put in the large outlet ditches. For instance, in Norman county, were the settlers to build small ditches that would drain certain lands along the Wild Rice river into that river, nothing would be gained, for the Wild Rice, as it is, cannot carry off all the water that now runs into it.

A FAITHFUL REPRESENTATIVE.

Senator Ryder is a faithful representative of this district. No one in the senate is doing better work than he. The matter of good roads has been receiving his attention. He has introduced a bill providing that the county commissioners may at their discretion spend a portion of the county fund upon roads and bridges located by town authorities. He has been especially interesting himself in the matter of the investigation of the state inspection of wheat and is determined that if any injustice has been done to the farmers of Polk county that the investigating committee shall know it. He has been almost overwhelmed with answers to his call for evidence upon this question, but dispite the fact that he is an extremely busy man he has gone over these replies very carefully and as a result it is reported that some citizens of Polk county will be called to St. Paul to give evidence.

Among the last bills introduced is one to license surveyors and provide for a state board of examiners consisting of a professor of engineering at the state university and two practical surveyors who will begin their examinations after Jan. 1, 1900. After that date all land surveyors must be licensed by this board. The bill, if passed, will effect a needed reform and it is on the side of advancement and improvement that Senator Ryder is found.

He has also introduced a bill that relates to claims against counties, and provides that all claims of $25 and less may be paid at once, and that all others must be laid over for thirty days. Thus it is seen that our senator is looking after local tgterests as well as after the affairs of the state at large. Senator Ryder is an eloquent speaker as all who heard him last fall during the campaign can testify, and a general favorite at the state capitol.

After a long and bitter contest in Wisconsin Joseph V. Quarles has been elected United States senator.

The bill to pension school teachers is probably dend and we think it deserved its fate. It should bever be resurected again.

The independent spirit of the people of Norway has again resarted itself. The Norway storthing has adopted a flag over the king's veto.

Attorney General Douglas has reported to the legislature that the Torrens land transfer system in a modified form would not be contrary to the constitution.

Aguinaldo has received power from the native congress to declare war against the United States if he thinks that the best course. This is the result of the action of Senators Hale, Hoar, et al.

Eagan spoke his mind and now comes the fear of the president. Doubtless Mr. Eagan has learned from sad experience however, the truth of the old proverb "Even a fool when he holdeth his peace is esteemed wise."

Every dollar expended by the state for drainage in the Red River Valley has already been more than repaid.—Aitkin Age.

Right you are, and the state cannot do better than finish the good work begun.

Brother Mitchell, of Alexandria, is a candidate for president of the state editorial association, and we join with other editors in the opinion that he is about "next."—Ada Index.

We respond with an emphatic Methodistic amen to the suggestion of the Index.

Rats have at last reached Crookston. It beats all what out of the way places these pets get to.—Ada Index.

We have the satisfaction, however, of knowing that we are not going under for these rodents always leave a sinking ship.

The cartoons in the large city dailies are one of the features of modern journalism. A most interesting history of the late war may be found in the cartoon book published by the Minneapolis Tribune. It is a collection of funny and withal suggestive pictures sketched by R. C. Bowman, the Tribune artist.

J. J. Hill appeared before the drainage committee at the state legislature and gave them some pointers upon the situation in the Red River valley. He spoke very strongly in favor of a large appropriation to complete the work already begun. No state money he said could be better spent.

The railroad and warehouse commission of Minnesota will hereafter be elected directly by the people. The present members of the board will hold office till their successore are chosen. In 1900 one man will be elected to serve two years, and two members will be elected to serve for four years, the terms thereafter to be four years.

The Crookston Experimental Farm has done commendable work in the past under the superintendency of Professor Hoversted, and the legislature will act wisely if they pass Senator Ryder's bill appropriating $15,000 for the maintenance and equipment of this station. Money spent with a view to helping the farming interests is never thrown away.

A state park of native pine timber Minnesota will probably have in the near future. The park to bekown as Leach Lake park, and is located in Cass county. A bill covering these points has been introduced into the state legislature. This is a good move. The beauty of the primeval forest has a very beneficial effect upon the life of the community and all the native grandure ought not to be subjected to utilitarian use.

Morton Lamphere still has hopes that Lind may yet give him a crumb. He now thinks that he may be appointed as commandant of the Minnesota soldiers' home. But alas for Morton Lamphere! The Fergus Falls Journal says that this place is supposed to be preempted by C. W. Smith of that city. Verily the path of the office seeker is hard and endeth, in most cases, in nothing.

A bill is now before both houses of the legislature, the chief provision of which is for a bounty of 50 cents a ton on manufactured pig iron, the purpose of this act on the part of the state being the encouragement of iron manufacture. The Duluth News-Tribune says editorially that there is not a single measure now before the legislature so pregnant with possibilities for the state in general and Duluth in particular, as this measure.

Sereno E. Payne, of New York, who succeeded Mr. Dingley as chairman of the ways and means committee of the house has been appointed by the president to the place on the Anglo-American commission made vacant by the death of Mr. Dingley. Mr. Tawney of Minnesota was mentioned for the place but he was opposed to granting any reduction of the present tariff on lumber.

The Farmers' party 'of the United States is the latest in the political world. The object of the organization as set forth in the declaration of principles is the securing of equitable representation in congress and in the state legislatures. The strength of this party, if it draws any, will be from the ranks of the populists. We submit that the separation party would be a more accurate name than the farmers' party for the present agitation which in Minnesota has chosen the "political orpans" as a leader.

Congressman Eddy has secured an appropriation of $25,000 for improvements in this section—$5,000 of which will be used for the construction of a dam on Red Lake River, at the outlet. Evidence keeps continually coming from Washington that our congressman is not neglecting the interests of his own district while engaged in national affairs.

An appropriation of $40,000 will be asked from the legislature to build an amphitheatre at the state fair grounds from which the people can view the stock exhibits and in the arena of which the judges can do their work unmolested by the crowd. An agricultural hall will also be erected with these funds. These buildings are of vital importance to the State Fair. For several years the State Fair association has been self supporting, asking no favors from the legislature, but it is expected that a reasonable request, such as the one mentioned above, will be granted.

Senator Hale of Maine has been reelected to the United States senate. He has been quite a rabid opponent of the administration's war policy all the way and though his constituents voted for him the main legislature passed resolutions in favor of the ratification of the peace treaty. This in itself was a rebuke to the senator, and will doubtless have its influence upon his future attitude.

While ex-Attorney General Garland was addressing the Supreme court at Washington last Thursday he was suddenly stricken with apoplexy and died within a few minutes. It is thus that many of our public men at Washington are being taken off. Dingley went suddenly only a day or two ago. The pressure andar which these men are working is indeed very great, yet how prone almost every one is to adverse criticism.

Nothing has been heard of the Venezuela question for some time. But it bobbed up the other day. A formal meeting of the court of arbitration was held at Paris last week. The next meeting will be held in April. The arbitrators are the Russian, the British and the United States ambassadors at Paris. Doubtless, the friendly relations at present existing between the two countries will materially assist in solving the difficulty.

In case the anti-expansionist sentiment grows very much longer, do not be surprised if the administration discovers that its intention always has been the independence of the islands. —Wilmar Tribune.

We wonder how many yards long the Tribune thinks the anti-expansionist sentiment will have to be before the administration discovers, etc.

Whether or not it is due to the length of his sentiment we do not know, but at any rate Aguinaldo has learned that he has supporters in America and as a result he is giving the United States a great deal of trouble.

A committee from the North Dakota legislature have examined the binding twine industry at Stillwater, Minn., and the excellence of the plant so impressed them that they have recommended the establishment of a similar plant at the state penetentiary. Thus doth the fame of Minnesota spread. The more North Dakota copies from Minnesota the more prosperous will that state become. Word also comes from Kansas asking for all possible information with reference to the twine binding plant as that state also is likely to put in a plant like the Minnesota one.

A house divided against itself cannot stand and certainly there is no harmony today in the fusion party of Minnesota. The Minneapolis Times, which warmly supported Lind during the campaign, has severely put upon the governor for nominating Corser as surveyor-general of the Minneapolis district. The action of the fusionists in the legislature in voting for Towne for United States senator is particularly displeasing to the democrats. The St. Paul Globe has rung the changes on Charley Towne's new celebrated phrase "united forces." Lind is a clever politician but he has attempted a hopeless task in trying to hold together such a heterogeneous mass.

Feb. 6 is the day set for the United States to vote upon the peace treaty. It is hardly likely that Senator Davis would permit the senate to come to a vote were he not sure that the treaty will be ratified, for a defeat now would mean a triumph for Spain. Think of our national law makers after our soldiers and sailors have won victory after victory on land and sea, allowing Spain to score a point right at the finish! Besides if the treaty were held over till after March 4 when many new members will take their seats in the senate there is no doubt that the treaty would be ratified. These new senators coming up from the people being in favor of the policy of the administration and of what the sentiment throughout the land is.

The proposition to have the free text books of the state made at the reformatory at St. Cloud or at the state's prison is being vigorously opposed. If such a plan were carried out the result would be that a low grade of school books, as far as workmanship is concerned, would be furnished. The printer's art cannot be learned in a day. And besides the state ought to be chary about giving any corporation or institution the exclusive right to furnish school books. Minnesota has had experience in this matter and she ought to profit by it. Competition between the great publishing houses cannot but keep down the prices of books, and these houses are in a position not merely to turn out the best in the way of printing, but the authors of the books that they publish are men and women of the highest educational standing.

Republicans to the number of 13 joined with 41 democrats and voted for W. W. Clark as United States senator from Montana. Clark and Daly have had one of the bitterest senatorial fights on record and Montana must have heaved a sigh of relief when this momentous question was finally settled. The evidence this year in favor of popular election of senators has been accumulating fast. In many states the legislatures have been wasting valuable time in washing strife—useless, that is, as far as the interests of the people are concerned, and the voters will not long endure this state of affairs. We note also in connection with the reelection of Senator Stewart in Nevada that it is claimed that the victory gained by the people at the polls last fall has been reversed in the legislature and that the Southern Pacific is victorious.

Governor Lind has removed J. S. O'Brien as president of the state board of prison managers and nominated David Bronson of Stillwater as his successor. Mr. Lind says that O'Brien threatened that if he were not appointed surveyor general of logs he would make things uncomfortable in prison affairs for Mr. Lind. By this showing the governor judges that O'Brien is not a fit person for the place. Mr. O'Brien denies the charges of Mr. Lind.

"As far as it has gone a leading democrat serving under a republican appointment, is removed by a silver republican elected governor on the democratic-populist ticket, and a gold democrat, most diametrically opposite in political make up from the governor, is nominated for the successor to a republican senatorship. Present politics is a strange mixture."

Mr. Lind's last appointments are notably cetrangling members of his own party.

As Others See Us.

Thirteen Towns: The Polk County Journal came out last week under a new heading and with a generally improved appearance.

Glyndon News: The Polk County Journal, the late H. E. Cooke's paper, comes to our exchange table arraigned in a dest and new dress.

Dexterite: The Polk County Journal is a new exchange that came to our table last week. It is edited by N. S. Gordon, formerly of the Austin Transcript, which assures its success.

Sauck Center Avalanche: The citizens of Little Falls are going to vote at the coming spring election upon the proposition to have the name of their place of abode changed to Grand Falls. Either name falls with a dull thud upon the ear.

Minnespolis Times: N. S. Gordon is making a model country newspaper of his recently acquired Crookston Journal. He doesn't overlook anything that happens or is going to happen in or about Crookston, and that is the first essential in a local paper.

Adams Review:

A copy of the Polk Coutv Journal, published at Crookston by N. S. Gordon, late of the Mower County Transcript. The paper is all home print and shows the handiwork of a practical and experienced newspaper man. We bespeak for Mr. Gordon success in his new venture.

Austin Message: N. S. Gordon has bought the Polk County Journal at Crookston, Minn., and has already taken possession of the first issue in hand already improved, and promising further improvement in the near future. Mr. Gordon has many loyal and influential friends and under the new management it will soon become the leading paper in that strong county. Success to the Journal and its new editor.

BIG RAILROAD DEAL.

Eastern Minnesota Railway Buys the Wright & Davis Interests.

A deal has been made by which the control of all the Wright & Davis property, including the Duluth, Pine Isaha & Northern railroad, the Swan River Logging company, the foe of the Mahoning, Bennett & Longyear mines and 24,000 acres of land and a vast amount of accessory property naturally be found in the assets of a corporation such as was the Wright & Davis company, have passed into the hands of J. R. Elit et. al. Mr. Hill denied that the Great Northern had bought these interests but accordingly the Duluth papers he would not have denied that the Eastern Minnesota has acquired these properties.

Should Correct Our Poor Laws.

E. D. Childs went down to St. Paul Monday night. While there he will interview some of the legislators with a view to having the poor law which applies in Polk county and the city of Crookston repealed. As the matter now stands the city authorities claim that they are taking care of many people who should properly come under the supervision of the county. The city's hospital expenses for many months past have been over $200 per month, and this is only part of what must be paid out.

Notes From Exchanges.

Bagley Independent: Hans Rone, was up from Crookston, accompanied by his son from Langly, looking up a location for a furniture store. He was well pleased with the location.

Hallock News: Mr. and Mrs. Low have moved to Crookston, where they will make their home in the future. During their stay here they made many friends who will regret their departure.

Northfield News: Some printers do love their countries more and their families less. They are willing to do $800 worth of printing for a song and then make their wives wear their last year's cloaks.

Argyle Banner: Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Holen departed yesterday for an extended trip South, and before returning they will make a trip through Cuba. They will be accompanied on their trip by Andrew Melgaard of Warren.

McIntosh Times: Tiring of the systematic swiping of timber and logs by the prairie farmers, the settlers out there are organizing vigilance committees, every member of which is a private detective pledged to do his uttermost to stop the practice.

Red Lake County Courier: The Lost River swamp should be ditched as it will open up about two townships of swamps and fit them for pasturage and hay, besides giving an outlet for the pine and cedar along the headwaters of Lost river.

Norman County Index: The Gary creamery did a splendid business last year, the output running as high as 160,518 pounds of butter in one month. That institution is a big thing for the farmers around Gary, and there should be a half dozen more in the county than there are now.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: A popular young man of Crookston who was married very recently got so excited the day the ordeal came off that he forgot to take along with him the ring and license. He has been made the butt of many kind remarks by his host of friends.

Roseau Times: Jack Eams while in town this week, made us that the railroad which is expected to tap Roseau county the coming summer, is in operation at present for sixty miles this way from Wilmarger, thus shortening his haul of supplies to about forty miles. It seems to be an assured fact that we will be blessed with at least one and perhaps two roads during 1899.

McIntosh Times: Dr. A. McEnchran returned on today's belated train from the gathering of the clans at Crookston, where he took part in the grand banquet given at the Hotel Crookston in honor of the Scottish bard, Robert Burns. The doctor speaks very highly of the banquet and everything connected with it; he says that representative Scotsmen were there from all over the valley, and that the occasion will long be remembered as one of the happiest celebrations of the anniversary of Bohby Burns' birth.

Detroit Record: Lake Park can make a boast that probably no other place in the world can make, and that is of being fortunate enough to capture three national prizes in successive on gathered cream butter, the last one being awarded to Herman Brock, buttermaker at the Zenith creamery, by the National Buttermakers' convention, which was held at Sioux Falls, S. D., this week. At this convention Mr. Brock was rivaled by specimens from twenty-two states in butter and twenty-nine tubs from different parts of Europe. Mr. Brock has been at the business for fifteen years and has secured seven prizes in all, and has now a reputation as a professional.

Mutual Hail Insurance.

The Scandia Mutual Hail Insurance company has its headquarters in Crookston. The company is really an outgrowth from a fire insurance company that was organized by the farmers around Lindsay and McIntosh. The mutual fire insurance succeeded so well that the company branched out. Not more than $800 insurance an the crops of a quarter section is written. Each member is assessed his pro rata share in thefall. The head office of the company is on the second floor of the Peake block. Ole Tiegen is the secretary.

—County Attorney Holston has had an unusually severe attack of the grip, but he is getting better.

MINNESOTA THE WINNER

At Creamery Butter Makers' Convention this State Gets the Prize.

The Creamery butter Makers of the United States met last week at Sioux Falls, S. D. Minnesota scored a great victory of winning the prize banner. As there were 169 entries it is evident that a special selection was not made. The states competing for the banner and the scores are as follows:

Minnesota.....169 entries, averaged 88.2
Illinois.....40 entries, averaged 88.1
Iowa.....170 entries, averaged 88.1
Wisconsin.. 60 entries, averaged 86.9
Kansas..... 44 entries, averaged 86.7
South Dak. 48 entries, averaged 86.6

The first prize, gathered cream class, was received by Herman Brock, Lake Park, Minn, the score being 91.

Victims of the Storm.

A farmer living near Halstad, on his way home from the village, was overtaken by the storm last week and perished.

The little daughter of Henry Allen of Ada, was reported lost in the storm on her way home from school last Wednesday. The parents and some of the neighbors spent a night and day in search for her but she was finally found at a neighbor's house.

—Three evening entertainments and a matinee were given at the M. E. church this week by the Chinese lecturer, Tank Kee. He exhibited numberless curiosities from China and explained their manners and customs. The audiences this week have been larger than those which greeted former entertainers in the course being given by the Epworth League.

—The mysterious cabinet in the second act of Evans & Hoey's evergreen success, "A Parlor Match," is a perfect mine of interest to the audience. One never knows what is coming next. Soldiers, sonbrettes, ballet girls, a tramp, a chanteuse,—all of these emerge; and every time the electric lights go out the audience feel a delightful thrill of expectation, without knowing what it is about to see or hear. The second act of "A Parlor Match", is a whole entertainment in itself. This play will be given at the opera house tonight.

IN CHAMBERS.

Judge Watts Listens To Pleadings in Several Cases.

On Jan. 27, the court being in session at chambers, the case of Bertha Gilbert vs. John Birkholz et. al. was was tried. H. Stevenson appeared for the plaintiff and A. A. Miller for the defendant. It appears that in 1896 the defendant loaned the plaintiff $1,200 taking a mortgage on her farm that secured her note at ten per cent. Action was begun by defendant to foreclose the mortgage and plaintiff interfered and brought action to stop proceedings claiming that the note and mortgage were usurious and void. The evidence was heard and a decision will be given later.

Another case of similar nature was tried: that of Chas. Berg vs. John Birkholz et. al., the plaintiff claiming that more than ten per cent was charged on the loan. The case will be decided later.

On Monday morning at ten o'clock the case of Daniel O'Neil vs. James Kennedy, which was appealed from the justice court, was up for a hearing. An order to show cause why judgment should not be entered in favor of plaintiff was ordered. The order to show cause was dismissed, and the judgment of the lower court was affirmed.

Peter Sharpe and W. W. Calkins from Ada were before the court with a petition for laying out a ditch, theirs being some variation in the viewer's report from the original petition laying out the ditch.

Certiorari proceedings were heard in the matter of Julia C. Musgrove vs. Probate Court of Polk county in the estate of Stephen J. Parkhurst. Plaintiff asks to be allowed to file her claim against the estate.

Lady Maccabees' New Charter.

Last Monday night was an occasion long to be remembered by those who were at the I. O. O. F. Commons. The Sir Knights and Lady Maccabees held a special session at which a new charter was presented to the ladies' hive by Mrs. N. J. Bemis, Deputy Grand Commander. In making the presentation Mrs. Bemis referred very appropriately to the good work of the Maccabees and to the obligations that devolved upon each member. Lady Commander Mrs. Chesterman in her reply gave a history of the order, stating that the principles of the Modern Maccabees are based upon the principles of the Ancient Maccabees, the latter being the first organization recorded in history which placed money in a common treasury to provide for the aged and maimed, and to aid the widows and orphans of fallen comrades.

The ladies gave a very pretty drill, after which the time was given up to dancing which pastime was kept up for many hours. Dainty refreshments were served.

Long Distance Phone.

Frederick Kuit, right of way agent for the Northwestern Telephone Exchange company is in this section arranging for building the long distance telephone in several directions from this city. One line will run to Thief River Falls, another to Fosston and a third to Winnipeg Junction, all these passing through Tilden. Crookston will be the switching station and the various lines will be operated from the office of the local telephone exchange company.

False Alarm.

The fireb'l's piercing clang rang out on the startled ear Saturday morning. Tom Morris' lads were soon ready for action, but it turned out that there was no cause for action. The alarm was turned in in response to the cry of some of the residents of the Chase block, but the supposed smoke was only steam. The pressure of steam was quite high and in consequence the safety valve was raised and the steam escaped, rapidly filling the building. There was of course no danger whatever.

—Ben. Strawbridge has changed his place of residence. He will hereafter be found on Houston avenue at the home of Mrs. E. P. Pierce.

—Elias Steenerson, and Messrs. Roddy, Dow and Corliss, of Grand Forks, are out east in Beltrami county where they expect to build a portable saw mill and do lots of work in sifting up the pine.

—Landlord Morin of the Grand Central hotel is making improvements in his hotel building. The space occupied at present by the verands will be made a part of the front office. Business has become such that the present office accomodation is not sufficient.

—Michael Gorman, who years ago preempted some land in Otter Tail county, is at last in a fair way to secure a title. This land has been contested for many years. Mr. Gorman left the land after making the first payment and claims he received no notice that a second payment was necessary.

Weddings.

LATTA-SARGENT.

Last night at the home of the brides' parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Sargent, who live on South Ash street, Chas. W. Latta was married to Miss May Sargent. Eight o'clock was the hour when the knot was tied. The ceremony was performed by Judge McLean in the presence of the immediate friends of the bride and groom. Miss Orpha AnDyke, of Grand Forks, a cousin of the bride, was the bridesmaid and Irv. W. Kinder, best man. The rooms were tastily and profusely decorated with flowers. Miss Vienna Sargent played the wedding march. After the nuptials the wedding party sat down to a sumptuous supper. The bride, one of the amiable and attractive society young ladies of Crookston, has grown to womanhood in this city. The groom has been a resident of Crookston since the summer of 1893. During most of this time he has been in the newspaper business pushing the pencil for the Tribune almost continually since 1895. Mr. and Mrs. Latta have gone to housekeeping in the Tardiff house on Ash street, directly opposite the bride's old home.

The JOURNAL joins with a large circle of friends in congratulations to the groom and in best wishes to the bride.

SANBERG-GONYEA.

A very pretty wedding occurred last evening at 7:30 at the house of Louis Gonyea. In the presence of relatives and intimate friends A. G. Sanberg was married to Miss Lillian Gonyea, daughter of Crookston's chief of police. The ceremony was performed by Father Murphy. John Sanberg and Miss Hattie Droucher, and Joseph Fortier and Miss Annie Sanberg stood up with the bride and groom. After the wedding a reception was given at the G. A. R. hall to a large number of friends. A most delightful time was spent here in conversation and dancing. At the hour of midnight refreshments of a most delicious kind were served to the company at the Grand Central hotel.

The bride is one of Crookston's charming young ladies well known to a large circle of society people in the city. The groom is one of our energetic business young men, having filled for several years, to the entire satisfaction of the company, the position of manager of the St. Anthony and Dakota elevator.

The JOURNAL wishes the bridal couple long life and happiness.

Deaths.

AMIOT.

J. B. Amiot of Gentilly died last Thursday of pneumonia.

THENO.

The mother of Frank Theno died last week at Antigo, Wis.

TVEDTEN.

Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock, G. B. Tvedten dropped dead at his home in Samson's addition. Heart disease was the cause of death. The funeral took place yesterday from the Lutheran Synod church.

WAGNER.

Miss Annie Wagner of Roseau died Friday at Grand Forks where she has been attending school.

VINE.

The father of George and Charles Vine of this city died of pneumonia about ten days ago at St. Catherines, Canada.

SWANSON.

On Friday Jan. 27, at Nielsville Algas Swanson, aged 21 years. He was buried on Tuesday.

"Logging Crew."

Messrs. Al Vanstrum, Chris Hoch, Gus Schmidt and Joe Koelmel left Monday morning on the Duluth train for a sojourn of a week or more in the country out near Pine Lake. They have some claims in this section that need looking after. They had their hunting and camping outfit with them. Fishing will be one of the sports that the boys will engage in. Lost fauline might overtake them one of the party brought along with him a pail of sauer kraut?

Lincoln Celebration.

The McKinley club are making big preparations to celebrate the anniversary of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. The banquet will be held Monday night Feb. 12. Noted speakers will be present and lend their eloquence to make the occasion a success. Lincoln, beside one of the fathers of the republican party, was yet a national man. Men of all parties, therefore, will be welcome at the banquet, but republicans especially ought to turn out and do honor to the memory of one of America's greatest men.

Into the New City Hall.

The city officials from their various offices in different parts of the city are congregating at the new city hall. Judge Holt, City Clerk Lanetot and City Engineer Ralph can now be consulted at their new quarters. The hand room has been in use for several days and Prof. Riggs is working the lads hard for the next monthly concert. The firemen moved their effects in Tuesday and the assembly room on the second floor will be fitted up tastily. Half a dozen iron bedsteads will be put in the firemen's bedroom.

IN SMOKE AND FLAMES.

Joe Koelmel's Residence Destroyed—Most Household Goods Saved.

A fire alarm was turned in about one o'clock, the firemen in full force responded, but the fire in the residence of Joe Koelmel on Brnndway, just south of the Vance block, had so progressed, that before it could be quenched the building was a complete wreck. The loss on the building, which is owned by Geo. Erskine, is fully covered by insurance.

The fire caught from the stove pipe in the attic and was confined exclusively to the second story and attic. It was noticed that smoke was coming from the upper part of the house and a woman, who was working in the house at the time, attempted to put the fire out with a pail of water, but after unfortunately opened a window and at once every thing was in a blaze.

Two streams of water were soon playing upon the building but it was an hour before the fire inda hnd things their own way. Most of the household goods on the first floor were carried out but the carpets and other furnishings were soaked with water and the plaster completely spoiled. The upper part of the house, goods and all is in ruins. Fortunately the fire was under control before the building was ablaze per yer. With the JOURNAL only on the outside, for otherwise Mr. Vance's private dwelling would in all probability have caught as the smoke poured over it in volumes.

The firemen put up a strong fight literally cutting their way with axes into the attic. When the fire was extinguished most of the boys were encased in ice.

Left for Canada.

Antoine Thomns, charged with putting to death Frank Bushn in Kittson county, appeared before the court commissioner at Hallock and was released on a writ of habens corpus. He thereupon made such a hit run for the International line that the tempera ture in that part of the state became perceptibly warmer.

Medicraft Seated.

The house committee on elections brought in a unanimous report on Tuesday morning in favor of seating Mr. Medicraft of Dunseith. The committee found that there were absolutely no grounds on which the contestant might support his claim. The house adopted the report without debate.

Caledonian Club.

The names of the members of the Red River Valley Caledonian club which the JOURNAL published were taken from the secretary's book. It seems, however, that many of the Scotchmen failed to sign their names. Of the original members of the club these names were omitted: John Crouth, Thomas J. Smith, M. McAskill, McKenzie, St. Clair and Geo. A. Angus, of Grand Forks, D. B. Ferguson A. J. McKinnon, W. D. Scott, W. A. Ball, James M. Bain, W. A. Robertson and Jas. B. McCall. The Burns' club could not well do without such jolly good fellows as these. The banquet and music committee were: Dr. T. J. Smith, John S. Crawford and N. McAskill.

LEADERS AND MEN TELL OF IT.

The First Plans Went Awry—Sopiles Couldn't Be Landed Ahead of Consumption—Army Had to Fight Quick—With the City in Sight, the Cry Was, "Go at Them!"

BY IV.

GEN. YOUNG'S victory at Las Guasimas, June 24, had a decisive bearing upon the Santiago campaign. It showed the army that the Spaniards were not risking heavily in the defence of passes far outside of the city.

The American leaders believed that the Spaniards were intending to make a stubborn fight, in the vindication of their honor, at the gates of the city. The troops generally shared this view.

It had been intended up to June 24 that Lawton's division take a strong defensive position north of Siboney landing, on the road to Santiago, that Kent's division move early west of Lawton, while Wheeler's division would hold the road from Siboney back to Daiquiri, thus keeping up land communication between these two landings. These positions, within easy range of the navy guns, were to have been maintained until all the troops, artillery, transportation wagons and animals, rations and ammunition were safely landed and distributed.

The adjutant general of one of the divisions, who was in a position to know the inside of things, told me at Camp Wikoff that the affair at Las Guasimas forced the rapid movement of the army forward upon El Caney and San Juan hill. The capture of that position drove the army westward to Sevilla, where there were sufficient camping grounds, good water, room to deploy the divisions and to receive the Spaniards in case of attack. It was proposed by many of the general officers that the army would halt in that camp for some time in order to get up artillery and put the whole outfit in shape for an attack in the direction of Santiago.

In spite of the efforts of the staff departments it was impossible to land and transport supplies faster than the men and animals at the front could consume them. There was a lack of steam launches, lighters, scows and wharfs. The army never had a three days' supply of rations ahead.

There had been much marching and countermarching to get the troops into position, and it was very hot. Soldiers had no change of clothing. All they had with them was a roll containing a blanket, in some cases a shelter tent, their arms and haversacks. Frequently men soaked their underclothing as though they had been in a bath, and the frequent rains drenched them on the outside. The soldiers say that while they would not have minded this state of things ordinarily, yet, following their long voyage, it left no time for recuperation. The extreme heat and the peculiar odor rising from the soil affected their appetites, and they could not relish the coarse army rations, nor process anything whatsoever for variety. Those who had access to the native fruits, especially the mango, paid dearly for it. The mango is a little larger than a peach, shaped like a pear. Its meat is coarse, like that of the pumpkin; its rind like an apple, thick and tough. The experienced Cubans warned Americans against eating mangoes, as they said they contained the germs of fever, but as they were very cooling to the throat some men, especially the volunteers, could not resist the temptation.

While the army was strong along the Santiago road between Daiquiri and Sevilla, the region westward toward Santiago was reconnoitered. Just how complete these reconnoissance were is a mystery. I asked the staff officers and division generals whether it was known beforehand that the approaches to San Juan heights were exposed to Spanish view and fire from their works on the crest, particularly the road and trail at the crossing of the San Juan river and its tributaries. I could learn nothing. The answers were, "I suppose that this was known at army headquarters." The fact remains that on July 1 before the battle opened the troops found themselves blocked in the road and in the beds of the streams after daylight with in view of the Spaniards and within range of their small arms.

It was stated that a certain general, who refused to commit himself on any points likely to lead to controversy, examined the region thoroughly and reconnoitered that trail as far as it paralleled the main road and on both sides of it. The General Chaffee said that the region far south of the road to Santiago was examined with a view to making an attack upon the Punta Gorda battery. The Punta Gorda battery was the first objective thought of after the army set its face toward Santiago from the east. This was the strongest battery on the bay and by taking it Shafter's army would have turned Morro, and, in fact, captured the key to the land defenses of the harbor. But the ground in rear was impossible for an attack.

El Caney land been thoroughly reconnoitered as early as June 27 three days after the Guasimas, and three days before the attack upon it. All the commanders as to approaches and defenses were known at headquarters.

There was a difference of opinion around headquarters as to the importance of El Caney. General Shafter said, "We did not wish to leave it as a shelter for a strong Spanish outpost on the right flank of our line," when it should move forward against the high ground east and northeast of Santiago. General Lawton's division was to constitute the right wing of the assaulting forces, and I learned from his headquarters that Lawton was unwilling to have his division against the height assigned him for capture, leaving the Spanish in possession of El Caney close in his rear. It should be said, however, that General Lawton believed he could take El Caney in half an hour, and other generals, more especially Wheeler and Young, who had looked the ground over, said about the same thing. These opinions were based upon information gained before El Caney had been re-enforced and strengthened. When Lawton came to attack, it was another matter. Wheeler says that he asked Shafter to let the cavalry division take El Caney, but Shafter said the task had already been given to Lawton, and he could not change it.

On the 28th and 29th of June the whole corps moved forward from the Sevilla camp toward Santiago, bringing up between La Redonda and El Poso. El Poso is a narrow defile between mountains. Before descending into the defile, the troops obtained from the tops of the mountains on either side of the road glim pses of Santiago and El Caney with their defenses and of the fortifications and valleys intervening.

On the 30th General Shafter gave out his order of battle, which was to carry the San Juan and El Caney road heights, in order to bring Santiago under his guns. From the highest to the lowest the soldiers said that the preparations for this attack were far from what they had expected, from what they should have been, in order to insure success and what they might have been after a few days' delay hulding wagon trains. General Shafter says frankly that the preparations were not, what he desired them to be, but the army, composed wholly of northern men, was in a hot and sickly climate, the rainy season was coming on, when the already bad roads would be made impassable, a tropical storm due at that time might drive the navy as well as the supply ships far out to sea, and it was expected that General Pando, with 6,000 Spanish troops, would join the garrison in the city. Under these conditions Shafter decided to force the battle at once.

From that time on until the beginning of the parley over surrender, the elements active or threatening, the impetuosity of the troops, especially when they came within sight or range of the Spaniards, as well as the restless and eagerness of "Fesse Bill" Shafter, combined to push the army forward at a pace only compared to that of a hurricane.

All this time and afterward until the American flag floated over Santiago the spirit of the soldiers' word was, "Let us go at them! Let us go at them!" This is proof that there was indecent haste, that the men were ready to rush headlong into disaster. The result shows that some of it was. Had the troops been go at the task in the deliberate manner set down for them in their instructions they never for a moment forgot those instructions, line upon line and precept upon precept, and it was their coolness and self control which saved the army from horrible disaster and gave its victory when the turn of a hand might have precipitated defeat.

The Spaniards said that the Americans violated the rules of warfare by not retreating after receiving a volley from the enemy. This method of fighting is not set down in the American tactics. By going ahead in spite of and in face of repeated volleys the well trained regulars took the Spaniards by surprise, quite as much as the smokeless powder and deadly accuracy of the Mauser amazed the Americans.

Lawton had about 6,000 men for the attack on El Caney and the El Caney heights before Santiago. The infantry division of Kent numbered about 6,000 men and Wheeler's Dismounted cavalry about 2,500, making 7,000 for the attack on San Juan heights. Both columns were ordered to take their places on the night of the 30th for a forward movement. Chaffee's brigade, 1,500 strong, took the trail from La Redonda north to a point on the ridge east of El Caney blockhouse, followed by Capron's battery, while the brigades of Miles and Ludlow marched by road from El Poso to the Dicoteman House. Lawton's attack upon El Caney was to begin early in the morning.

The divisions of Wheeler and Kent bivouacked along the road between El Poso and San Juan river. Grimes' battery, which was to co-operate against San Juan heights, took position on the knoll at El Poso. Capron's guns were to open on El Caney early July 1, Lawton's infantry to follow by 7 o'clock. Grimes was to wait until the battle was well on at El Caney, then bombard San Juan blockhouse, and, finally, Kent's division was to follow Wheeler's. Each division was to have its battery in column and behind San Juan hill, crossing a waiting order. On the morrow the fates would decide.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Washington's Tomb.

Washington was buried in what is now known as the old vault, which is perhaps 200 feet away from his present resting place. Before his death he had requested that a new family vault be constructed after his decease, and the reason given for this is that the earth upon the side of the hill where the old vault was placed was likely to slip away in the springtime.

No attention was apparently paid to this request, however, until about 1826, when an employee who had been discharged from the estate broke into the old tomb as an act of revenge and stole a skull which he supposed to be that of George Washington. This he took to Alexandria, and, as usual in such cases, "got drunk," and so his secret was discovered, and the skull, which proved to be that of Lawrence Washington instead, was returned.

This incident led to the final carrying out of the wish of General Washington. The tomb which is his present resting place was promptly built, and in 1831 his remains were removed to it. The old vault was allowed to fall into a state of decay, and only a few years ago it was restored by the aid of flaming funds set in the congressional library. An iron fence has been built around it, and it now receives the same care as the new tomb.—Exchange.

A Greek Colony in Corsica.

At Cargese we have the remarkable spectacle of a Greek population with its own church settled down on the coast of Corsica. Our ties is kept by a Greek from Corfu, as his name, Corbetti, tells us and as the loquacity of his wife would lead us to infer; for at Cargese the Corsican hospitality has given place to the Hellenic love of talk. Rather more than two centuries ago a Greek settlement was founded in Corsica under the auspices of the Genoese republic, to which the island at that time belonged, and when the French came into possession of the country they established the Hellenic exiles, who had meanwhile founded the Chapelle des Grecs just outside Ajaccio at Cargese and built there the church which they have ever since cherished.

Intermarriages between the colonists and the natives, at first rare, have since become frequent, and it is to be feared that the Greek language will soon become as extinct there as the Etruscan. But with that wonderful tenacity which is shown in modern Greece, in spite of centuries of barbarian invasion and Turkish oppression, the Greek type is sure to remain at Cargese to remind the traveler of its eternal youth and its unfailing characteristics.—Westminster Review.

Julius Cæsar.

Of all great conquerors, writes Marion Crawford in "Studies From the Chronicles of Rome," he was the least anxious for he never sacrificed human life without the direct intention of benefiting mankind by an increased amount of safety. Of all great lawgivers, he was the most wise and practical. He wrote his code not down in the Julian clods but the foundation of modern justice. Of all great men who have looked upon the world as upon an unbroken horse, who have guided it with relentless hands and ridden it breathless to the goal of glory, Cæsar is the only one who turned the race into the track of civilization and, dying, left mankind a future in the memory of his past. He is the one great man of whom it is impossible to imagine history without him. It is not take him away and yet leave anything of what was. The world could have been as it is without Alexander, without Charlemagne, without Napoleon. It could not have been the world we know without Caius Julius Cæsar.

It Was Ordered.

In the biography of Prince Bismarck it is said that when he was minister at St. Petersburg he was walking one morning in the summer garden and met the czar, who invited him to join him.

Presently Bismarck noticed a sentry stationed in the middle of a large grass plot and asked the aid-de-camp, who in turn inquired of the sentry.

"It is ordered," was his reply.

Every official gave the same answer, "It is ordered," but nobody knew by whom. A sentry had always stood guard in the middle of that innocent grass plot. The archives were searched but in vain. At last an aged official was found, who had been told by his father that the Empress Catherine had once seen a snowdrop ready to bloom in the spot, and had ordered a sentry to stand guard and allow no one to pluck it. For more than a century the watch had been maintained because "it was ordered," and no one had ever thought of disobeying or of questioning the reason of the order.

Red Hair the Best Wear.

Why are redheaded people thus subject to baldness than those with fair or brown hair? An English physician has answered this conundrum:

The hair of the redheaded is relatively thick, one red hair being as thick as five blond or three brown hairs. There are 80,000 red hairs the scalp is well thatched. With the same number of blond hairs one's is almost bald. It takes 160,000 blond and 105,000 brown hairs to cover adequately an ordinary head.

Mrs. Grey—Yes. I give it for its moral effect exclusively.

Mrs. Grey—Yes, it will have an influence upon him not to catch another cold.—Boston Transcript.

Pirate From a Whale.

The profit from a single whale that is captured is very large. One about 60 feet long weight 140,000 pounds, will give 60,000 pounds of sunbleu, from which 40,000 pounds of illuminating oil can be made, and 8,000 pounds of whalebone.

Expert Swimmers.

The Siamese spend three-fourths of their existence in the water. Their first question on awakening is to bathe. They bathe at 11 o'clock, again at 3 and again at sunset. There is scarcely an hour in the day when bathers may not be seen in all the creeks, even the shallowest and muddiest. Boys go to play in the river just as soon as children go to play in the street. A traveler tells of a young woman sitting on the lowest step of a landing place, while, by a girdle, she held in the water her infant of a few months. Were not the Siamese expert swimmers many lives would be lost, for the tide flows so swiftly that it requires the greatest skill and care to prevent boats from running foul of one another.

A story is told of an English boat running down a small native canoe containing a woman and two children. In an instant they all disappeared. The Englishmen were on the point of jumping to their rescue when they bobbed up and the woman, as a recovering her breath, pointed forth a volley of Siamese curses that relieved her mind. She sighted her canoe, bailed out some of the water and scrambled in the child dren who had been rescued previously standing around her, regarding with unqualified fear and curiosity the barbarians who had caused the mishap.

He Knew Chester.

Mr. Gladstone had a keen taste in heirloom pies. One of the Wesleyan journalists recalls a conversation which R. W. Dale had with Mr. Gladstone at a public dinner in London, when the expressed asked all sorts of questions on matters pertaining to Methodism. A question happened to sit exactly opposite, wishing to divert the conversation into another channel, asked, "Do you know Chester, Mr. Gladstone?"

"Yes, a little," was the answer, an ominous smile playing about the speaker's mouth. "Do you know Chester, Mr. ——?"

"Not very well," said the unwary questioner, "and only the minster."

"Well, if you go to the city of Chester you will find a confectioner's shop in such a street, and in the window of that shop, and you can buy there the most delicious pie, delicously hot," and then Mr. Gladstone smacked his lips, and his face beamed with delight as he recalled the taste and smell of those savory pies, "and all for threepence."

Then, turning to Mr. Perks, in deep earnest tones he said, "Let us resume where we left off."

There was no further interruption from the opposite side of the table.—St. James Gazette.

Beau Nash as a Gambler.

When the late Earl of T——d was a youth he was passionately fond of play and never better pleased than when having Mr. Nash for his antagonist. Nash saw with concern an heir's indolence and undertook to cure him, though by a very disagreeable remedy. He would win of him all he could, and was determined to engage him in single play for a very considerable sum. His lordship, finding no end to his good luck, lost his temper, too, and as he appeared rich the gulf seemed still more eager for ruin.

He lost his estate. Some writings were to be drawn for the purchaser. His very quipnagi was offered as a last stake, and he lost that also. But when he was preparing to sign them his lordship sufficiently punished for his folly, he returned all, only stipulating that he should not game for £5,000 whenever he should think proper to break the bond. However, he never made any such demand during his friend ship's lifetime, but some time after his decease, Mr. Nash's affairs being in (sic) the wane, he demanded the money of his lordship's heirs, who honorably paid it without the least hesitation.—"History of Gambling in England."

Absolute Indifference.

A woman who has been a victim of indigestion and is kept to dyspeptics' diet most of the time, recently was invited to a dinner, which she was anxious to attend.

She went to her telephone and, trusting to a somewhat unreliable memory, she asked the hostess what course would be served. "Is that you, doctor?" the hostess replied. "Then you, doctor, if you please, I am a victim of indigestion and am kept to dyspeptics' diet most of the time. Recently I was invited to a dinner, which she was anxious to attend.

"I want very much to go to a little dinner tomorrow night," she began rapidly, "and do you think it would hurt me if I ate, just a taste of soup, and perhaps a little fish or the leg tirde of game and a bit of salad or ice? I really think my stomach—"

Here she was interrupted by a voice from the other end of the wire.

"Madam," it said coldly, "eat whatever you please. This is the Metropolitan Rubber company."—Youth's Companion.

One of Toole's Jokes.

One of Toole's greatest practical jokes was as follows: He once gave a supper to 50 of his friends and wrote a note to each of them privately beforehand, asking him whether he would be so good as to say grace, as clergymen would be present. It is said that the faces of those 50 men as they rose in a body when Toole dropped on his knees for a signal for grace was a sight which will never be forgotten.

Bargain Desks.

Yes, it was the first ship she had ever been on board a warship. "And this," the lieutenant went on to say, "is the barber desk." And, looking at a child yonder," she exclaimed, indicating the forecastle with a pretty gesture, "is that the 5 cents desk or the 10 cent desk?"—Detroit Journal.

Coffins Shaped Like Violins.

In Russia, where coffins are covered with cloth the color of the covering is a popular fad for burial cases, pink being with blue, the deceased is a child or a young person, crimson for women and gray for widows, but black is in no case employed.

The Desired Result.

"I felt tired all the time and had frequent headaches. My appetite was poor and I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. The result was that after taking one bottle I began to grow stronger and my headaches less severe. I kept on with Hood's until I was perfectly cured." Hood's Pills are the favorite family cathartic. Easy to take, easy to operate. 25c.

A Porto Rico Shave.

The Porto Ricans, who are all, from their highest to the lowest, great dandies in their way, make soap out of cocoanut oil and homemade lye. And a fine soap it is, smooth and fragrant. This cocoanut oil soap is need for shaving. When a man wishes to have a shave in the morning, he starts out with his cocoanut shell cup and his donkey tail brush and leather. It is never any trouble to find an empty bottle in Porto Rico, Cuba, Jamaica or almost any of the larger West Indian islands, even in remote spots in the mountains. At least 20 generations of thirsty people have lived there and thrown away the bottles.

Next comes the mirror. He is too poor to own such a luxury. Not one house in 20 in Porto Rico has even the very cheapest looking glass. But generally rich natures provides the mirror as well as the soap. The man goes to some convenient pool in the mountain stream where the water is quite still. There is his mirror. He breaks his bottle on a stone and deftly picks out a sharp piece of suitable size. Then he lathers his face profusely and begins to scrape away with his piece of glass, which in his hands works as well as the best steel razor. A cut, or even a slight scratch, is extremely rare as a result of this fierce form of shaving.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Larynx.

The larynx has been compared to a wind, a reed and a stringed instrument. The comparison of it to a violin gave rise to the not very accurate phrase "vocal cords," and to the name of the two cushions which are the most prominent features. But no string so short as those "vocal cords" could produce a musical bass note. In fact, the comparison of the larynx to any instrument which produces only one tone is wholly inadequate, to begin with. There is no instrument but the larynx which produces both tone and speech, and so those comparisons view the larynx merely as a producer of musical sounds have no further concern with them at present. Besides, the voice can be realized for speech, execution and oratory without a knowledge of the physiology of the larynx.

The larynx has the power of adjusting the larynx; of varying the tension of its parts, cushions or ligaments, as they have been variously called. We can do these things without scientific technical knowledge of how they are done, without any knowledge at all of vocal physiology, and it is the work of the trainer of the voice to teach his pupils —or her pupils we will be allowed to say—how to do them. — Chambers' Journal.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

CHAPTER VI.

Mrs. Raymond was growing jealous. For years, despite those occasional tiffs and spats with which feminine intimacies are so frequently diversified, she had been Fanny Turner's closest friend. There had been occasions in the lives of both when neither had spoken to the other for as much as 48 hours, and when neither believed it possible for her ever to speak to the other again.

In this stupendous of diplomatic and personal relations, however, no embargo existed as to language descriptive of each other's faults, foibles or falsifications. What the two ladies failed to say to was more than compensated for by what they said of each other, notwithstanding which disturbance of the atmospheric conditions in the fair sky of their friendship the intimacy lived and thrived—even was strengthened if not purified by the brief flashings of such summer lightnings and reverberations of vocal thunder. Indeed it would be hard to say where in all the —th either lady could have found an intimate save in the other, for the maids and matrons their compelling the social element of the regiment had learned wisdom in their generation, were under the influence and guidance of such pure spirits as Mrs. Stannard, Mrs. Barry, Mrs. Freeman and Mrs. Ray, so that even domestic and social tiffs were like Mrs. Willkie's hair—fanned into a certain sanity to the new creed expounded by them, and many a man, many a woman, had remarked that "the —th was a mighty different regiment from what it used to be in the days of Lady Pelham and Arizona."

It was a better regiment in every way, and as we have had all these years in Camp," as they called the colonel, who led them in the days of their exile, but who, luckily, was not often and like restrously led by his wife. The new commander, like the modern Tommy Atkins, was "every inch a soldier and every inch a man," and though Mrs. Atherton lived a cage full with her chronicles as much as any woman alive, she had lived and moved and had her being in wider social circles too large not to have learned the golden rule of silence. Several objectionables had been eliminated in the course of years, some by transfer to other arms of the service as it understood, one or two to other spheres, and several still lingered among the men and Mrs. Turner among the women, and if ever there lived a lady blessed with unbounded confidence in the infallibility of her opinions and the incorruptibility of her intentions it was that same Mrs. Frances Turner.

Other women there were, of course, to circulate here and there in it both, in spiring originality of conception there was none to equal her. Mrs. Turner might not be as alpine as a disburser of regimental gossip, but, as Lieutenant Blake once heart to say, she could start more in a minute than could be stopped in a month.

And now Mrs. Raymond was actually disturbed and jealous because of a new sudden and mysterious intimacy that had sprung up between the friend of her bosom and the hitherto impressive and unapproachable Miss Maynard. From meeting only formally and semiceremonially there had developed an unlooked for and apparently unquenchable desire for each other's company, and where Mrs. Turner used to be dropping in on Mrs. Raymond any morning after her toilet was completed for the day she had taken to bustling by en route to Mrs. Stannard's, never so much as stopping at the Raymonds' to explain the meaning of her haste, and there in Mrs. Stannard's parlor or in solemn promenade along the walk did Mrs. Turner and her new found friend spend hours in close and confidential communion, the object of which was a mystery to Mrs. Raymond, not to mention the rest of Russell. Meantime Maynard was mending fast and needing little nursing. Therefore was his sister at liberty to seek scenes and more the stimulant and exhilaration of the open air. Therefore, too, was it suggested by Mrs. Raymond that the necessity of her remaining a burden on her brother and the Stannards no longer existed. Shenkard and his staunch battalion had gone. The populace of Russell was now made up mainly of the temporarily widowed and fatherless, the invalids and the hand. A small squad had been left from each troop to take care of the stables, quarters and corrals, and from these the post quartermaster detailed eight watchmen to patrol the garrison pending the coming of an infantry company. The colonel and adjutant, too, had taken their field; and Stannard and Mrs. Atherton had gone in to visit relatives in Chicago, and, when they could laugh at all, the ladies were asking each other which of their elders was really in temporary command of the camp, or did the surgeon, chaplain and quartermaster deserve consideration?

Meantime poor Maynard was fuming and fretting in his pretty room, devotedly nursed, carefully attended and prescribed for, but with every day becoming more irascible and unreasonable. It was his first wound since the regiment, he it remembered, and the idea that it should be on the warpath and he mewling in bed was intolerable. Yet the doctor gravely told him he could not ride without certainly of reopening his wound and endangering his life. Maynard could not believe it. Both Mrs. Stannard and his sister strove to read to him, but he would not listen. He wanted all the papers that had news of the field columns, but no other subject in their pages interested him in the least. There was one subject much nearer home to which he would have given ear with more than avidity, but on this subject he could not talk, and Mrs. Stannard and his sister would not talk to him. He longed for daily news of Nathalie Baird and got none. She had even ceased her visits to the house.

Ever since the night of her first apparent illness—the night that order came for Stannard's men to move—she had been drooping visibly, and Mrs. Barry was sore distressed. No more did Nathalie take her long, exhilarating walks upon the open prairie. The stole forth on numberless days at Mrs. Barry's urging, and went timidly up and down the long walk within the sentry beat, but never neared the gate at the east or the open roadway that passed out to the westward beyond the old headquarters building. She seemed to shrink from observation even then. She seemed reluctant to meet or talk with the many kind and sympathetic women who would have welcomed her to their fireides when the swift gales burst upon them from the mountain pass to the northwest or the balmy pinions came on the rare afternoons when soft breezes blew from the Colorado foothills, and the band played sweet melodies, and the children frolicked merrily out on the broad level of the parade.

Mrs. Baird had ever seemed to be, but not startled and afraid as now, and Mrs. Barry, especially self contained and self reliant, had even taken counsel with Mesdames Ray and Truscott, two young matrons she much approved of, and in looked shrk aid in the good work of banishing the evil spirit that had darkened the day dreams of this strange New England girl. Both were ready and willing to help in any way, yet neither could suggest a line of operation. The girl seemed so utterly unapproachable. Mrs. Truscott had paroled Baby Jack for Miss Baird's inspection and expected her to become a slave to that conquering hero's fascinations as did other women, old and young, but Miss Baird had passed his little highness by with such supposition the very next time she met him, and an injured and indignant nurse was not slow to take the tidings home. Mrs. Ray had bidden her to luncheon or tea or both, always with the same result. Nathalie could not come, she said, her invalid or some except for, she would she took each day. Mrs. Stannard, after a most gentle and kindly, to win the confidence of the girl, but Nothalie seemed to divine her object and fled from her in evident alarm. "It is a most uncanny thing," said Mrs. Stannard to Nathalie's friend and protector. "I never met a girl of her years so utterly set against her kind." There was a lovely young girl often visiting at the Freemans' then, a Miss Nonnie Bryan, who was freshness, vivacity and fearlessness personified, and these schemers sought to induce her to cultivate Miss Baird, but that fell through, for Miss Bryan's wooden, open hearted manner seemed to be a reproach in Nathalie's eyes—she who would not or could not confide in anybody.

"She is the loneliest girl in Wyoming," said Mrs. Barry despairingly too friend one sunny afternoon.

"Ah, well," was the reassuring reply, "Mr. Maynard is to be allowed to sit up in the smashing presently, and then you'll see how soon she flutters to his side."

And they did see. She came out from the Barrys' for her customary exercise one brilliant afternoon, and there he sat reclining in an easy chair, well wrapped up in overcoat, robes and blankets, and the straight tawny glimpse of her, and his eyes flashed their signal of joy and recognition, his pale cheek mounted its radiant color in honor of her coming, but she went pale as a lily and, turning hurriedly, stepped to the gate behind her and with obstinately averted head hastened down the row. It was impossible for his sister not to see the depth and bitterness of his disappointment and chagrin. She determined that the hour for her to speak, and so speak plainly, was now at hand, so reluctantly she began. There are women who choose the time when a fellow is down, a helpless invalid, to tell him in extreme the worst news, perhaps that could be brought to his ears. At the moment when he should be free from pain or grievous distress they load upon him this and there the latest rumors or reports that can be rallied upon to bring him infinite heartburning. Such seem—not that they wish to see him suffer, but because the temptation to tell direful tidings is so uncontrollable.

Then, again, when he is up and well and able to dodge away she may not so easily reach his ear. Whatever be the reasoning, Miss Maynard felt that the time for her to speak had come, and speak she did.

"Ronald," she began, "do you care—already—for that girl?"

And Ronald without speaking answered.

Whereupon Miss Maynard in tones of deep distress exclaimed, "Oh, Ronald!" and lapsed into a silence indicative of unspeakable woe, leaving him no alternative but to demand the reason for her strangely significant conduct. No little urging accomplished the object. It required strong persuasion apparently to induce the woman to tell what she knew, or believed she knew, concerning Nathalie Baird, but when once the ice was broken there was no stint to the swift torrents of her accusations.

It gave her infinite pain, she declared, to have to say one word against a girl who was orphaned, homeless and, but for Mrs. Barry, practically friendless, but duty to her brother and that good name their father had given them prompted her to the task. She and papa and Imogene as Miss Baird might look there was a cloud over her name and character. She was carrying on a clandestine correspondence and holding secret meetings in the dead of night with a man, a total stranger to the garrison.

For a moment Maynard could not speak. His face, pallid through illness and suffering, took on a shade of gray that intensified its ghastly hue. His sister looked upon him in astonishment and in fright. "Ronald," she cried, "I did not know—I did not dream it could mean so much to you!"

"It doesn't mean," he interrupted, finding husky voice at last. Then each word seemed to come like the crack of a whip — sharp, snapping, a tone that never in his life had she heard from his lips before. "It doesn't mean, for I don't believed a d——d word of it!"

Shocked and stunned, the woman was for the moment silenced. Never since childhood days had he braved her. Taught by his soldier father the mom scrupulous courtesy and gentleness to women in general, his mother and elder sister in particular, punished promptly if in boyish temper he raised hand or voice against either, he had passed from the jurisdiction of that mother to that of the sister as unopposing as though her sway for all time were unquestioned, and Grace, womanlike, had accepted his submission as her just due, had found him gladly ever ready to her dominion when he returned to her on each furlough and hardly less so when, with broadened abilities and in undoubted manhood and bristling mustache, the young graduate came once more to the peaceful Mohawk Village before joining his regiment in the far west. She had looked upon him as her own to guide and mold and dress as she had planned and directed his toddling steps. She had never known him to oppose his will, his plans, to hare.

She recalled how when, only three weeks before it was time for him to start for Wyoming, he came in all eagerness one day to say that Wharton, Fred and Dingee of his class were to wear their new uniforms for the first time at the "Seventy-eighth Ball" that fall given by the cadets on the 28th of August annually at West Point and how writing for him to go home, as she was wild to go, she had glanced at Gertrude Bonner sitting patiently in the hall below, and, acting on the impulse of the moment, had invited to her brief arguments. How entirely he seemed to be swayed by her wish. How simply for years had the brother been her vassal—"hers to command" indeed! How indefinitely might she not have counted on the continuance of her quenchless love not another woman stepped upon the threshold of her home. Not only to her, to the sister who had been his guide and guardian, to those many years his elder and sometimes his foil in the jealous love of power and possession burning in the woman's breast she had come to regard it as her right to say to whom her princeling should tender, when the time came, the heart and hand that she had held in fancy so ruly hers to bestow.

And he had dared to look with eyes of love upon another, and now had dared to say to her that not one word would he believe of her aspersion of the girl he loved! It stung her to quick resentment, to one supreme effort to regain her old ascendency. For down the row toward the east front the slender form of the fair young girl could be seen. She had well nigh reached the end of the walk. It was too early for the band, but soon after the midday meal for the ladies to appear upon the piazzas. Only a few children were chasing their gay green carpet of the blue grass, only a few nursemaids and baby carriages were visible, lanky trudging along the south path. Not a soul was in sight about the great quadrangle. The barracks were silent and deserted. The guard quartered under the old sergeant prisoners had been drawn within the garrison prison. Orten Maynard was alone with her brother, waiting for as he was by wounds and suffering and mental worry, and it might be her last opportunity.

"Ronald," she exclaimed in tragic resumption of the old, almost imperious tone of mingled amaze, distress and horror with which during little boy and manhood to vaguely realize that they have been guilty of some unpardonable crime, "Ronald, you never, never would have dared so say such words to me were our father still alive!"

"Good," he answered, with fire burning in his dusky eyes, "you would never have dared to speak so of such a girl in his presence, and I'll never listen to it from you or any one again."

And he had gotten to her feet, nearly fainting in his weakness and wrath, with flashing eyes in the direction of the girl she adored.

"You won't listen!" she cried in tones of mingled wrath and grief.

"You won't believe the sister who loved and would stand between you and de-

And, looking as she pointed, Ronald Maynard saw that a tall man in civilian dress had suddenly issued from behind the last house on the row and was bending eagerly, closely over the drooping head of Nathalie Baird.

The Old Man's Wonderful Cure.

Dr. Ordway is well among the medical men of Cleveland, a story which was started by the victim himself. He is a physician of considerable repute, and some time ago was called to attend a gentleman of advanced years who was suffering from a slight complication of disorders. The doctor went to work with a will, and presently had the patient on the road to recovery. In fact, two weeks from the time he took the case he had him "about well."

As he left the house, after announcing that further visits would be unnecessary, the daughter of the restored man accompanied him to the door.

"Doctor," she said in somewhat tremulous tones, "I want to tell you"—

The doctor, who supposed she was anxious to express her gratitude for his skilled attention, waved her hands aside.

"Don't mention it madam," he affably said. "Wa always try to do our duty."

"But, doctor," she persisted, "it is something that will interest you. I feel that"—

"Say no more, madam!" cried the doctor, much moved by the woman's gratitude.

"It is something I must tell you, doctor," she continued. "Please listen."

The doctor halted with his hand on the knob.

"Yesterday," said the woman, "I was down town and met Mrs. Pugsley, the Christian Scientist, and she told me she had been giving father 'absent treatment' for two weeks. Isn't it just too wonderful?"

"Good morning!" said the doctor, dryly.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Only Two Men Know the Trick.

There is one expert in Philadelphia who, it is safe to say, stands entirely alone in his specialty. He is James Tonghill, who has charge of the piling of coin bags at the subtreasury. Not any dose he ever weighs out the piling of the bags, but he does it all himself. He trusts to a secret connected with this work that is known to only one man in the country besides the Philadelphia expert.

It does not seem at first glance to be a very difficult task, but those who have tried it find that it takes years and hundreds, while the first man to do the work properly without a knowledge of the secret was Tonghill, and he alone has ever been known him to oppose his will, his plans, to here.

She recalled how when, only three weeks before it was time for him to start for Wyoming, he came in all eagerness one day to say that Wharton, Fred and Dingee of his class were to wear their new uniforms for the first time at the "Seventy-eighth Ball" that fall given by the cadets on the 28th of August annually at West Point and how writing for him to go home, as she was wild to go, she had glanced at Gertrude Bonner sitting patiently in the hall below, and, acting on the impulse of the moment, had invited to her brief arguments. He Wanted a Pension.

Ople Read tells a funny story of a colored man who had conceived the idea that he could get a pension from the government. He went to a pension agent to learn what steps it would be necessary for him to take to bring about the desired result.

"Were you really in the army, Sam?" asked the agent.

"Yes, sah. Indeed I was, sah. I was in de army for more'n a year, sah."

"What regiment were you in, Sam?"

"Wal, sah, I don't jest dis minute recommember, but I'se gwine to bring de roll an de papers, and dat will explain de matter."

"But you surely remember whom you were with, Sam?"

"Why, yes, sah! I recommember dat all right. I was wid my young master.

"Oh, then you were in the Confederate army, were you?"

"Yas, sah; yas, sah."

"Was you ever wounded, Sam?"

"Yas, sah; indeed I was. See dat scar, sah? I got dat scar in de army, sah."

"What was it hit you, Sam?"

"Why, sah, I was a skelket sah. Indeed it was. A big iron skillet, sah."

"Now, see here, Sam, what chance can you have to get a pension? In the first place you were in the Confederate army, and then the only wound you received anyway was from a skillet. What in the world has our government got to do with your case?"

"Wal, sah, it was a government skillet, sah."—Chicago Times-Herald.

A Woman's Way.

"Here is something that I would like to approach very gently," said Mr. Stoggiebuck; "so as not to give any offense."

"The new woman wants her rights and her privileges, too, and as a matter of fact I am very glad she does cling to her privileges, and I hope she always will, which means that I hope she'll stay a woman. But the way in which she mixes her rights and privileges up is sometimes a little confusing. For instance:

"When walking along the sidewalk she holds her course and lets the man turn out, and she does this just the same down town in the busiest portion of the city as she does in the quiet residence street. You might think that a business woman working among business men in a business street would adopt business methods in everything, and that when you met her in the street she would turn to the right as you do and as all men do, but she doesn't. She holds her course, which is very likely to be along the edge of the walk, and expects you to turn out for her, even if it carries you to the left instead of to the right. She doesn't care about that.

"Any matter who she may be or where you meet her woman expects man to turn out for her, and I hope she always will."—New York Sun.

Insanity's Debt to Medical Science.

Insanity is now recognized as a disease which is the result of some functional or organic disturbance of the brain or of some injury or malformation of that organ. Be it said to the everlasting credit of medical science that it has rescued the whole subject of the diseases of the brain and nervous system from the region of mystery and speculation and placed it on a scientific plane along with the cure of other diseases and injuries to which human flesh is heir.

The old lunatic asylums and the filthy cells or the county jails with all their horrors where the victims of dethroned reason used to be confined, and tortured have been abolished and in their place we now have the modern hospital for the insane, and it stands on the same footing in every respect as a hospital for diseases of the eye and ear or any other medical specialty. It was not the churches, but medical science, inspired by a desire to benefit mankind, which taught the world that the insane are our brothers still and that to them is due the same Christian charity and care and sympathy in times of distress.—Dr. John Girdner in North American Review.

A Bit of Ribbon.

A London paper tells this story of the final signing of the Spanish-American peace treaty: "Every diplomatic instrument bears a seal from which depends a ribbon, and when the seal was about to be affixed to the treaty the commissioners, both of Spain and America, expressed a desire in graceful acknowledgment of the courtesy shown by France, that the dependent ribbon should be tricolored. Search was forthwith made high and low in the Quai d'Orsay, with the result that in the foreign office of the French republic not a bit of ribbon of the French colors could be found.

"At this critical juncture a brilliant inspiration flashed across one of the heads of the commission. 'Go,' he said to a messenger, 'to M. X——, the confectioner, in the Rue St. Honore, for a pound of sausages, and bring them to me; you ask him to tie them up with a tricolor ribbon.' With that bit of confectioner's twine was affixed to the treaty of twelve Spain and the United States was sealed."

Rumors of Speech.

"Coom out of that!" shouted an irate but zealous churchwarden in a rural district to some stragglers who were disturbing the congregation by their noisy manifes against the church door. "If I hit passon know how ye dessicate the sacred place." This word forms a common stumbling block. A grocer once informed us that people took to the paregoric of the name—and frequently asked him for desecrated soap.—Cornhill Magazine.

A Dog and a Kelephone.

At the Redhill railway station a passenger recently came to the station master in great grief, saying that her little pet dog had been left by accident on the platform at Reigate and would likely be either crushed by a locomotive or lost. The courteous official telephoned through respecting the poodle, and the answer came immediately that a dog of that description had just been brought into the police station. The receiver was put to the dog's ear, and the lady was asked to speak to it. She did so. The effect was electrical. The dog barked a cordial recognition of the voice and by its antics expressed a great desire to jump into the apparatus and traverse the wire in order to get to its mistress all the sooner.—Birmingham (England) Mail.

Types of Husbands to Avoid.

There are two distinct types of husbands who do more harm than they would be willing to admit—the man who permits himself to become a generous flavorless in his own family, rarely holding a conversation with his wife or children, goal naturedly responding to any extravagance for the sake of peace, and the man who, though conspicuous in the church and community, tyrannizes over his family in small things until, for the sake of peace, they deceive him on every hand.—Frances Evans in Ladies' Home Journal.

Why He Didn't Reply.

It is not always easy to be polite. Witness this from the Chicago Post:

"Why don't you answer?" said madam impolitely to the Scandinavian on the esplanade suggest in putting up new window fixtures.

The man gulped and replied gruffly: "I have my coust full of vorms. I not can speak till I svaller some."

Didn't Lose His Head.

Prince Louis Esterhazy, military attache of the Austrian embassy at London, was traveling alone in an English railway, when an elegantly dressed woman entered the carriage. Presently she dropped her handkerchief and employed the opportunity to make a declaration, but without avail, for the prince tranquilly smoked his cigar and took no notice of her. At last when the train approached a station the woman suddenly threw her head from her head, disheveled her hair and as the train drew to a standstill put her head out of the window and shrieked for assistance.

The railroad officials hurried to the scene, and to them the woman asserted that she had been forcibly insulted by the prince. The prince did not stir from his seat, but continued tranquilly smoking his cigar, and the station master exclaimed, "What have you got to say to this charge?"

Without the slightest appearance of concern the prince, who was seated in the farther corner of the carriage, replied, "Only this," and with that he pointed to his cigar, which showed a long ash, and coolly carefully over an inch in length.

The station master was like his generation, and on perceiving the ash on the prince's cigar he touched his hat and said quietly, "That's all right, sir," and arrested the woman instead. —San Francisco Argonaut.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Peterson's Bond Approved—Auditor, Surveyor and Others Report.

The county board of commissioners met at the court house Jan. 23. Several petitions asking for the formation of school districts were received and there will be a hearing in these matters, at next meeting. The set reports of the county surveyor for the year were $894.60. Exclusive of money paid in for taxes, and the collections of the clerk of court, register of deeds and jailer $4,427.98 have been paid into the county through the county auditor's office. The official bond of M. G. Peterson as county treasurer in the sum of $126,000, was submitted and approved. The assessed valuation of the Water Works, Power and Light company for 1898 was reduced $3,000. A protest against the repeal of the Special Poor Law of the county was passed and sent to representives at St. Paul. The State Bank of Fosston was designated a county depository and binds to the amount of $7,500 may be deposited there. Bills to the amount of over $1,800 were audited and allowed.

Marriage Licenses.

Permits to wed were issued to the following within the last ten days: Chas. W. Lutts and May Sargent, Chas. H. Amidie and Gertrude F. Mellott, of Polk county; Henry Egley, of Marshall county and Carrie Haddington, of Traill Co., N. D.; Rufus Haddington and Sarah Swedberg of Polk county; John Austin and Mary Sathre, of Polk county; C. O. Lind of Grand Forks county and Annette Hovland of Polk county; Thora Pedersen and Elsie K. Nordgaard, Andrew P. Jones and Lizzie Machley, Andrew C. Sandberg and Lillian E. Gonyea, of Polk county.

Young Men's Christian Association.

The 25th Annual State convention and Quarter Centennial anniversary of the Minnesota Young Men's Christian association will meet in the city of Minneapolis on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Feb. 9, 10 and 11, 1899. Special arrangements have been made for railroad rates, and entertainment while in the city. Any young man of Crookston who is interested and wishes to attend the convention may obtain information and credentials from Rev. Herman P. Fisher, pastor of the Congregational church.

The "Gym."

The Crookston Athletic association already has over fifty members. Prof. La Sore, the director, is fixing up the gymnasium rooms in the basement of the new city hall in fine style. The best thing Spaulding's house in Chicago can furnish has been bought. Besides the class already secured Prof. La Sore expects to start a ladies' class and a boys class in a short time.

Seen In the Sky.

Those who rise early these days are well repaid for the trouble by the beauty that may be seen in the heavens. Last Monday morning to the north of the city and a little above the horizon the city of Winnipeg was plainly visible, and such places as Grace church, Leland hotel, the City Hall, the Douglas monument, etc., could be seen distinctly.

Columbia Club Dance.

The dance given by the Columbia club of the city last Friday evening was one of the swellest society functions of the winter. Both ladies and gentlemen appeared in full dress. A very tasty lunch was served by the ladies. A week from tomorrow night the beauty and the chivalry of Crookston will again assemble at the Columbia club rooms.

GET HURRY ORDERS.

Regulars Selected for the Philippines Must Proceed Without Delay.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—Orders have been issued by the war department to expedite the movement of reinforcements for the Philippines. The transport Sherman will start from New York Thursday, with the Third regiment of infantry and four companies of the Seventeenth infantry. The following Thursday, Feb. 9, the transport Sheridan will sail from the same port with Twelfth infantry and the headquarters and remaining companies of the Seventeenth infantry. The officers in command of these troops have been instructed by telegraph to execute the orders for this movement, without unnecessary delay. Both transports will follow the same route to Manilla taken by the transport Grant, that is, across the Atlantic and through the Mediterranean sea and the Suez canal. The Grant started several days ago, and is now supposed to be in the vicinity of Gibraltar. General Lawton, who is to assume active command of all the military forces in the Philippines when General Otis becomes military governor of the territory, is a passenger on the Grant. Two regiments of infantry are also under orders to proceed to Manilla by way of the Pacific ocean. One of them has already started and it is expected the other will take its departure from San Francisco within a few days.

The arrival of these four regiments will increase General Otis' fighting strength by nearly 7,000 men.

NORTHERN PACIFIC WINS.

Title to a Million Acres of Land in Wisconsin and Minnesota Upheld.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 26.—Judge Lochran of the United States court filed a decision involving the right of the Northern Pacific railroad to select 1,000,000 acres of land in Northern Minnesota and Wisconsin, the company claiming title to that much land.

The contest was over the eastern terminus of the railway, the United States holding that it was at Duluth, while the company insisted that it was at Ashland. The government applied to have the land, which has been patented to the road, restored to the public domain, canceling the patent issued several years ago. The case decided was for a small tract of land, but the point decided involves over 1,000,000 acres, which now goes to the railroad unopposed.

STATE LEGISLATURE

WEDNESDAY JAN. 25.

The bill to reduce interest and extend time of payment on school land contracts was taken up by the house as a special order and after two hours debate was passed—72 to 43.

Although the senate session was brief the work that the committees are doing is much apparent, by the number of reports adopted. Senator Snyder's bill relating to the foreclosure of mortgages by advertisement, Senator J. D. Jones' bill relating to the sale of forfeited property on tax sale and the disposition of the proceeds thereof; Senator Peterson's bill appropriating $5,000 annually for four years to the education of buttermakers; Senator Gaasewitz's bill to regulate the practice of pharmacy, the sale of poisons and the listing of pharmacists; a bill for a tax revision commission of three to be appointed by the governor were recommended by the various committees for passage.

THURSDAY, JAN. 26.

The bill to appropriate $24,500 to reimburse expenditures for the Minnesota exhibit at Omaha was debated at considerable length in the senate. Progress was reported.

The following were favorably reported:

S. F. 81, to legalize certificates issued on mortgage foreclosure sales; S. F. 74, relating to witnesses and evidence; S. F. 64, relating to purchases at judicial or foreclosure sales of real estate for delinquent taxes; S. F. 60, requiring foreign corporations to maintain offices in this state; S. F. 85, providing for appointment of district court reporters; S. F. 65, relating to justice courts; S. F. 94, repealing "corrupt practices act"; S. F. 116, to legalize acknowledgments taken by notaries who are members of concerns interested; Knutvold hill granting village school districts with two or more departments $100 state aid yearly.

Johnson's wolf bounty bill was killed.

In the house the matter of committees reports caused considerable debate.

The Foss mortgage taxation bill was reported favorably and placed on general orders. A resolution calling for information as to state swamp lands, and a bill to prohibit free lunches in saloons were introduced.

FRIDAY, JAN. 27.

In addition to H. F. 10 which provides for the election of railroad commissioners by the people, the house passed H. F. 46, by Mr. Wood, prescribing for the election of assessors in incorporated villages. Under suspension of the rules S. F. 102, relating to the publication of delinquent tax lists in certain cases, and S. F. 118, referring to parties in civil actions, were given their first reading and final vote. All that the house accomplished on general orders was a favorable recommendation of H. F. 105, intended to afford some security to the property of persons committed to the insane hospital.

The committee on appropriations reported favorably the bill to allow a bounty of $10,500 to the sugar factory located at St. Louis Park.

Senator Snyder's bill authorizing the children's home society to take charge of children up to the age of 14 years after a healed debate was placed on the calendar by a vote of 50 to 28.

Both houses of the legislature have been asked to consider a proposition to vast importance to the manufacturing industries of the state. In the house the bill was introduced by Mr. Leyden born and in the upper house by Senator Dougherty, also of Duluth. In both instances the measure was the same. Its chief provision is for a bounty of 50 cents a ton on manufactured pig iron, the purpose of this act of generosity on the part of the state being the encouragement of iron manufacture. In the house and senate the bill was referred to the committees on manufactures.

TUESDAY, JAN. 31.

The senate took up the calendar during the morning session and passed Senator Johnson's bill providing for the discharge of inmates from the insane hospitals when applications for discharge are signed by the superintendent and the secretary of the board of hospital trustees; also Senator Lind's bill regulating appeals from the probate to the district court. Under suspension of the rules H. F. 126, which allows the Minnesota Valley Historical society to erect monuments near Fort Ridgley to the Indians faithful to the whites in the Sioux massacre of 1862, was passed.

An hour was spent in committee of the whole, with Senator Thompson in the chair, discussing Senator Potter's bill for amending the municipal court act. Pending further debate and then it was sent over under report of progress.

The passage of two bills on the calendar and the consideration of a third on general orders, together with the introduction of some 15 or 20 new bills, summed up the work of the morning as performed on the floor of the house. No particular importance attaches to either of the bills forwarded to the senate. H. F. 85, by Mr. Anderson, provides that Lac qui Parle, increasing the gross earnings tax on railroads from 3 to 4 per cent, has been recommended by a vote by the committee on taxes and tax laws.

The Governor's Sensation.

The sensation of the day was a communication to the senate from Governor Lind removing A. S. O'Brien from his position as a member of the board of managers of the state prison and the appointment of David Brooker of Stillwater in his stead. Governor Lind gives as his reason for this action that Mr. O'Brien made dishonorable propositions to him in connection with his application for the surveyorship of logs and lumber of the Stillwater district. Under the rules of the senate the communication went over for the day and its discussion followed its reading. In all probability the senate will acquiesce in the governor's recommendation and permit Mr. O'Brien if he so desires to take his case into the court for settlement.

MILES HAS NO DOUBT OF IT

Reiterates His Charge That Beef Was "Embalmed."

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—Major General Nelson A. Miles was asked by an Evening World reporter what he had done since he reached the United States in the war with Spain.

"I have told Colonel Pope," General Miles replied, "that I appreciated his patriotism and had great respect for the public spirit which he displayed, but I do not think it necessary to spend any such sum to prove such a patent fact that the beef was embalmed. The evidence of nearly 100 officers proves it. The reports made to me establish it beyond a doubt. My report was based solely upon personal observation and statements to me by officers in whom I have every confidence. I think the evidence and the testimony produced is sufficient to establish the truth of everything I said regarding the beef."

General Miles refused to express himself regarding the contemplating of Brigadier General Eagan.

The Boy and the Hare.

A pleasant story of the Duke of Devonshire comes from Chatsworth. He was shooting, grim in hand, through one of his own fields near Baslow when he started a hare, which he shot, and was going to pick it up when a small boy jumped out of a neighboring hedge and warned him off. "Then, sonnie," cried the small boy peremptorily, "yo' must nae touch that."

"Why not?" asked the duke, amused, seeing that he was not recognized.

"Why, it's th' duke's," answered the boy, "an' he'll have yo locked up if he knows."

"Do he?" said his grace. "Then will yon take charge of it?"

"Aye, that I will," answered the boy forward on the floor of the house. No particular importance attaches to either of the bills forwarded to the senate. H. F. 85, by Mr. Anderson, provides that Lac qui Parle, increasing the gross earnings tax on railroads from 3 to 4 per cent, has been recommended by a vote by the committee on taxes and tax laws.

SWAMP LAND GRANT

Proceeds of these Lands Ought to be Used for Reclaiming Said Land.

DRAINAGE BILL OUGHT TO PASS

Thus Loan will be Returned and Taxable Property of State Increased.

The drainage bill now before the legislature is a measure the merits of which few people seem to fully appreciate. Many of the legislators will look upon it as they would a bill appropriating money for any other purpose, when in reality it is a measure demanding that the representatives of the state of Minnesota, return to that part of the state affected by the Swamp Land Grant a part of the money which rightfully belongs to it. In the year 1860 the general government transferred in trust to the state many acres of swamp land for the express purpose of reclaiming such lands. This act of congress contains the following clause: "Provided, however, that the proceeds of said lands, whether from sale or direct appropriation in kind, shall be applied exclusively as far as necessary to the purpose of reclaiming said lands by ly levees and drains aforesaid."

Of these swamp lands already transferred to the state for drainage purposes nearly 500,000 acres are located in the counties of Roseau, Kittson, Marshall, Polk, Red Lake, Bertrand, Norman, Clay and Wilkin. A large portion of these 500,000 acres has already been sold. Swamp land grants have been made to encourage the building of railroads and for other purposes and of the proceeds received from the sale of these lands less than one-tenth has been used for the purpose of reclaiming the swamp lands, as provided in said act. In view of these facts and in view of the further facts that thousands of acres of valuable agricultural lands are overflowed annually thereby destroying valuable crops, in the very localities where it was intended that the proceeds of the swamp land grant should be expended, in draining and protecting such lands, is it not surprising to hear legislators from the southern part of the state strenuously opposing the appropriation of any money for drainage in the northern part of the state, when asa matter of justice such an appropriation means a return of money borrowed, the greater portion of this loan having been expended in encouraging the building of railroads and institutions of learning in the southern part of the state? In talking with the representatives from different parts of state one cannot help but notice the feeling of sectionalism which seems to affect many of the representatives and in some instances this feeling has become so intensified that the representative believes that it is his duty to oppose any measure appropriating money for other than his particular district.

This drainage bill is of such importance that it demands at this time the candid and impartial consideration of every member of the state legislature. Not only because the money is asked for rightfully belongs to the part of the state demanding such an expenditure but because it is a good investment on the part of the state from a financial point of view. For no other purpose could such an amount be expended in the state that would increase the value of the taxable property of the state as much or furnish relief to as many people.

Larsen's Hardware Store.

The new hardware store on Broadway in the J. E. Harris building, formerly occupied by the Peoples' Press, will be opened up by Murch L. E. Larsen, who has bought this property, comes to Crookston from Mayville where he has been in the hardware business. He intends putting in a large first class stock of every thing in his line and will without doubt secure his share of the hardware business of the city. C. W. Mott, who is familiar with the line of business in all its details, will act as Mr. Larsen's chief salesman.

Manitoba Hotel At Winnepeg Burned.

Fire broke out at midnight on Tuesday in the Manitoba Hotel at Winnepeg and in two hours this, the largest and best equipped hotel between Montreal and the Pacific, was in ruins. It was worth $400,000 and was owned and operated by the Northern Pacific railroad. No lives lost.

PRIVATE O'CONNELL SHOT.

He Was Released from East Grand Forks in Order To Enlist.

Private Dennis O'Connel, of East Grand Forks, a member of Co. F of the 15th Regiment of Minnesota was shot at Augusta, Georgia, last Saturday. O'Connell had Hadley, a saloonkeeper, who did the shooting, had both been drinking. Members of O'Connell's regiment attempted to seek out the murderer and take vengeance upon him but they were promptly arrested.

O'Connell, though he enlisted at East Grand Forks, was not a resident of the East Side, but was a transient whom Officer Quigley had pinced under arrest on the charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Upon expressing his willingness to join the volunteers the charge against him was dismissed and he was allowed to go to the front.

Mr. Quigley expressed no surprise upon hearing that O'Connell was shot in a saloon row, as he was undoubtedly a hardened criminal, and under other circumstances would have been vigorously prosecuted here.

OUT IN THE STORM.

A Party of 20 Lose Themselves On Lake Winnebigoshish.

On the day of the big storm two weeks ago a party of 30 men started to cross Lake Winnebigoshish which is 12 miles in width. When they were half way across the blizzard struck them' and for hours they struggled on with the thermometer very low and darkness coming down. They finally reached the shore, built a fire in the thickest of the woods and spent the night there. They were found next morning by some Indians and taken to the camp for which they had started. All were frozen, some quite badly. One of the party, named Reid, was an old sailor who had doubled the Horn and made a trip to the Arctic regions, but he said he never struck anything more terrible than his experience of Wednesday night.

N. P. Calendar Unique and Artistic.

Yesterday C. A. Sharkey, local agent of the Northern Pacific, handed the JOURNAL a very handsome calendar with the compliments of Chas. S. Fee, general passenger agent of the Northern Pacific railroad. Like the railway whose coat of arms, so to speak, it carries, this calendar is unique. Entitling it from some of their designs on the six pages which it includes, it might fittingly be styled Cupid's Calendar, and from another standpoint this name would not be inappropriate for the public is in love with the Northern Pacific. It would not be out of place to call it Uncle Sam's calendar for there is on every page a noble lithograph of a young girl dressed in half a dozen different army and navy costumes and a bow of red, white and blue ribbon adorns the front page. This phase of the calendar is symbolic of the fact that the Northern Pacific is strictly an American line, devoted to the interests of the Americans, whose army and navy are just now the admiration of the world. A particular feature of this register of dates is that the month of January, 1900 is included. This is a 1899 calendar can only mean that the Northern Pacific is not merely always on time but is a little ahead of time.

Boy's Foot Cut Off.

A terrible accident befell the 14-year-old son of Joseph Selinger, a Benton county farmer who lives a few miles to the east of the village of Rice, two or three days ago. The father was engaged in chopping wood, the boy standing at one side watching him and at intervals assisting. By a slivening of the sharp blade the axe flew out of a farmer's hands and striking the boy's leg just above the ankle almost completely severed the foot from the leg.

Lincoln Celebration.

The arrangements by the McKinley club for celebrating Lincoln's birthday have been elaborate and in consequence the physical and intellectual man will be feasted right royally. A galaxy of noted speakers is expected, among whom are Mosses Clapp, ex-attorney general of the state, J. Johnson, Senators Ryder, Moonthy and others. Many from the towns around Crookston will be present. The banquet will be held in Hotel Crookston next Monday night.

A HERO OF SUGAR POINT.

Col. Sheehan of St. Paul Passes Through Crookston Enroute To Warren.

Everybody has read about the fight between Uncle Sam's boys and the Indians at Sugar Point last fall, but when it comes to talking to and shaking hands with one of the heroes of that engagement somehow that is a different matter. Col. W. J. Sheehan, who was in the thickest of the short but hot battle was in Crookston Monday and the JOURNAL reporter had the pleasure of meeting him. Determination is plainly written on his face and his action under fire proves him to be among the bravest of the brave. He was thrice wounded and finally dragged off the field at Sugar Point. In referring to the newspaper men that were at Bear Island he said they were very calm with the bullets whistling around them and aided greatly in carrying the wounded to the rear. Asked as to which place, Bean or Walker, was likely to get the new Leech Lake Indian agency and school he replied that the matter was still in doubt.

Col. Sheehan has fastened to his coat a badge of honor of which any man might justly be proud. It is a medal wherein is written "The Defender of Fort Ridgley," which was given him for his bravery during the Indian uprising of the sixties.

Col. Sheehan was on his way to Warren to serve papers in a case that is before the United States court.

He is and has been for many years deputy United States marshal and is a candidate for the office of United States marshal, which latter appointment will be made by the president within a short time. Col. Sheehan is well fitted by experience to fill this place and his honorable record in behalf of his country entitle him to recognition.

RED RIVER VALLEY FORTUNATE.

$50,000 To Be Used in Constructing a Dam At Outlet at Red Lake.

The house at Washington in the river and harbor bill passed last week granted the Minnesota delegation what they asked for. This section of the state comes in for a generous share: for improving the Red River of the North and tributaries, $25,000, of which $5,000 is to be used "in improving the navigation of the Red River; for making a survey of Red Lake and Red Lake river with a view to construction of a dam at the outlet of the lake, $50,000; and $3,000 is allotted for making a survey of Otter Tail lake and Otter Tail river with a view to construction of a dam at the outlet of the lake.

Minnesota Buttermakers Win More Than Banner.

While Minnesota buttermakers were at Sioux Falls they ran away with another prize that was just as significant in its way as the banner. This was the division of the prize ratio price of $2.200 to every exhibitor scoring 93 points or better.

Of all the exhibits from all the states, thirty-four qualified for this prize. Of these thirty-four, sixteen were from Minnesota. Taking the average of all the exhibits, good and poor, Minnesota won the banner, but who has the largest number of exhibitors, which would tend to bring down the average. Any state could find one or two high class creameries.

And taking the number above an arbitrary standard, Minnesota has half the number that qualified. It tells almost as much as the banner does of the average high grade of all the Minnesota buttermakers.

G. A. R. Dance.

What promises to be one of the great events of the season is the grand promenade to be given at the G. A. R. hall the evening of the anniversary of Washington's birthday, Feb. 22. This social function will be under the direct management of the boys in blue who in the sixties marched to glory over on a bloody field. It is given only by the Grand Commander. Judge McLean, that each and every old soldier who belongs to Crookston Post must, under pain of being sent to the guard house, take part in the dance. The judge intends to lead off himself with the highland fling. Everyone ought to plan to add to making this thrilling one-time movement entertainment of the veterans, a success.

FARMING IN VALLEY.

Superintendent Hoverstad Give Some Results of Experiments.

SYSTEM OF ROTATION OF CROPS

Needed, as Loss of Soil Fertility Is Great—More Animal Industry.

"The Future of Red River Valley Farming" was the subject of an address given by Supt. T. A. Hoverstad, of the Crookston Experimental Farm, at the annual meeting of the State Agricultural society held in St. Paul last month. The JOURNAL has been permitted to look over Mr. Hoverstad's notes and herewith gives in substance what he said. The future of farming in the Red River valley is bright. This conclusion is based upon facts gathered by a personal examination of the situation there. While there are some drawbacks to the country these can be largely overcome when the real conditions are properly approached. When the experiment station was organized in '95 it became necessary to study into the conditions and become familiar with the real situation of the farmers in order to plan the work to meet their needs. Accordingly visits were frequently made into the country districts and the impressions so formed have been the main factors in outlining the plans of the station. In '96 there was harvested in the Red River valley one of the finest crops of grain ever seen in the country. One could travel on the trains nearly all day and see nothing but portions of the great oceans of wheat. All available labor was employed to take care of it, and the price of labor advanced from $1 to $2 per day, and for a short time $2.25 was paid for ordinary threshing labor. In order to take care of the grain, those few who had granaries used them for storage. The elevators were filled. The railroads carried the grain away as fast as they were able, yet the supply was greater than they could handle. At Warren for want of storage capacity, much grain was put in piles on the ground without any protection until cars could be supplied to transport it. It is reported that from that place alone 1,500,000 bushels were taken away. This was from an acreage whose radius was probably ten or twelve miles. While it is a blessing to reap such a large crop there is coupled with it a element of calamity in disguise. The amount of fertility carried away from the country around Warren alone may be estimated between one quarter and one-half a million dollars worth.

T. A. HOVERSTAD,
Supt. Crookston Experimental Station.

The drain theh on the whole valley for that year was enormously great, and the situation becomes still more alarming when we realize that this has been going on ever since the virgin sod was first turned. This loss of soil fertility can not continue. Only a country as fertile as the one referred to could stand such a drain. How to remedy this evil is one of the problems for the experimental station to solve. The experience so far goes to show that it can be done and done easily. In the year following, 1895, the conditions were reversed. In early spring a heavy rain set in and continued a long time. This so flooded the Experimental Farm that the seeding was made impossible. This was the condition on large tracts of land similarly situated. During the season of '97 the spring was favorable but in the early summer a heavy rain set in which destroyed a large proportion of the crop and injured the rest. These experiences show that the two things to be done for the Red River valley are first to drain the land, and second, so to conduct the system of farming that the fertility of the soil will be retained. Mr. Hoverstad is confident that the loss in the crops of '96 and '97 would more than pay for the drainage of the whole valley. No crops are in any way sure so long as the drainage system is incomplete. The larger channels will have to be constructed by state or county aid but there is still somedrainage work that each farmer can do on his own farm that is very essential. The detail of this will be outlined in the forthcoming annual report of the drainage commission. How to so plan a system of farming that the fertility of the soil will be retained is the other problem to be solved. This can only be done by introducing an intelligent system of rotation of crops in connection with live stock. This system should consists three kinds of crops, the first of which should be grain. This is a good starting point as everybody is familiar with it. The Red River valley is preeminently a grain country, and grain should in the future be raised there as now, but if possible should be grown on a smaller acreage and not be as extensive a crop. Grasses form the second step in the rotation and this follows nicely after wheat. The Experimental Station is hopeful in the growth of both permanent and temporary grasses both for meadows and pastures. Clovers have been raised successfully, and there is no question but that clover will be a prominent factor in the future rotations of crops. Bromus Inermis is a more permanent grass. It stands the cold winters well, resists drought admirably, and furnishes a good yield of nutritious food. Cultivated crops and animal forage crops form very valuable adjuncts, and are desirable in more ways than one.

How can this system of rotations be most speedily introduced? Doubtless by the introduction of live stock. So long as the farmers have no live stock they cannot adopt any rotation. Hay and forage crops cannot be disposed of with profit without being first fed and transferred into more valuable and concentrated products. This change in the system would help in many other ways. The weed question would largely solve itself, and as long as grain is raised exclusively the weeds are going to be a constant annoyance. The condition of labor would be improved. As conditions now are the laborer is in demand for a few months only, and when that short season is over he is thrown on his own resources and must migrate to some other country, or take up the life and habits of a professional tramp. A systematic rotation of crops distributes the labor more evenly over the whole year. The work of this man rendered by the laborer, and in return he workingman will have more steady employment, the farm will be more homelike to him and the objectionable system of migratory labor would be abolished.

Not only is it possible to succeed with field crops but also with fruits, vegetables, trees and flowers. Small fruits have been grown successfully for years. Plums grow in a wild and cultivated state. Apples may in the future be a sure crop but as yet apple growing is uncertain. Many trees have stood the winters well on the Experimental Farm but as yet they have not born fruit. It is probable that the apple for the northern country will have to be developed there. Vegetables have given good returns for the expense and attention. Trees for ornament and protection grow rapidly and need but little attention after they have started to grow. Many varieties of roses are hardy and will bloom most profusely during the summer season. Conditions are favorable to the farmer in furnishing him material for accessories for protection and for beauty.

But what is also most encouraging is the fact that the Red River valley is settled by a progressive, enterprising people. There is something in the nature of the country that makes people bold in their undertaking. They do not shrink from attempting an extensive undertaking. A broad country produces a broad people.

Icy Pangs.

The stendy cold weather for the past two weeks has been unusual. For the twelve days proceeding last Tuesday 25 degrees below was the average of the lowest points reached by the thermometer, while eight degrees below was the average of the warmest periods. This computation was made at Anderson's drug store where the government thermometer is. Tuesday morning it was 30 degrees below with a strong northwest wind blowing.

PARENTS' PART IN EDUCATION.

Co-operation Between School and Home Necessary To Best Results.

The superintendent of the St. Paul schools in a public address in that city last week said:

"Parents must take care of their children. Too often they put the responsibility on the teachers, feeling relieved when the wondering, noisy boys and girls have left their sight in the morning and sighing when they come romping home again in the evening. Boys and girls were not born into the world for the benefit of their parents, but to fulfill the purposes of their own inner lives. Let the school do its work of imparting the lessons needed by them in future life, but let the home perform its functions too. Parents must enter into the same sort of life they seek for their children. Cooperate with the school. Encourage punctuality and regularity of attendance. A boy's school record is a pretty good criterion of his fitness for the active world of affairs. The original purpose of sending boys and girls to school is to give them something to do. They should be taught to be truthful, courteous and self-reliant. But without co-operation between school and home the highest purposes of the former are crippled and the best results neutralized.

EDITORS OF THE STATE.

They'll Meet At St. Paul On February 16-17.

The thirty-third annual meeting of the Minnesota Editors and Publishers' Association will be held in St. Paul at the Commercial Club, Feb. 16 and 17. The people of St. Paul will give the association a banquet the first night, and later the Elks will entertain. Among the papers will be one on "Paroxysmal Journalism," by H. A. Castle; one on "How to Temper the Press Before You Sling Ink," by Jess K. Grondahl of Red Wing; another on "Impedimenta," by C. W. Hunt of St. Paul; one on "How to Cure the Bite," by E. C. Huntington of Windom, E. A. Nelson of Hallock will tell of "An Editorial Political Pull."

"Don't Tell Them Where You Found Me."

The above is the name of a new song issued on the following incident: The Rev. Thos. Delaney, when Chaplain of a large Southern penitentiary, while passing through the Hospital Ward was called to the bedside of a dying convict. The last words of this unfortunate youth were; "Father, I see you do not know me, but you know me well enough to tell me that I will die tonight." I prepared his soul's exit into eternity and whilst his hands were clasped in mine his last request was made: "In my dying moment promise me when I will ask." I here gave him my word; he then revealed his parentage who thought him dead. "Now give me your word that you will send my body home, but don't tell them where you found me." I sent the body home to another State, but they never knew where I found him. The Greene Music Publishing Co., 32 E. Fifth St., Cincinnati, Ohio, will send the above song to any address for 20 cents in silver or stamps, regular price 50 cents.

Before Judge Watts.

During Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week the case of Carver Bros. vs. S. C. Bagley was tried in chambers before Judge Watts. The plaintiff sued for $4,000, money which he claims is due for a logging contract in 1897-98. The testimony was all taken and the arguments by the attorneys will be presented within fifty days. H. Steenerson appeared for the defendant and A. A. Miller for the plaintiff.

Wants Both Cure and Money.

Pete Anderson of Fisher deposited certain money with a friend of his by the name of Johnson. The latter secretly gave the cash to Anderson's wife who used it to send her husband to the Kesley cure. Anderson has returned from the latter place, the better for the treatment he received there, but he has entered suit against Johnson for the money left with the latter. He says Johnson had no right to let the money go out of his hands.

—Owing to the cold weather it was a small audience that listened to the Up-to-date Georgia Minstrels at the opera last night. The corset solos were very fine.

CAPRON'S battery opened the ball at El Caney at 6:35 in the morning on July 1. The first shots were 3½ inch shells at 2,900 yards range, aimed at some Spanish cavalry moving out of the village of El Caney toward Santiago. One Spanish officer and 10 men were killed. After shot this battery, which consisted of four breechloading field rifles, fired shrapnel at the trenches around the stone fort, which was 3,400 yards distant. The artillery fire was kept up at intervals until 11 o'clock, directed by General Lawton himself, who staid with the battery. At times the fire was on the fort, again at the loopholed church, the stone buildings around it and the blockhouses on the outskirts of the village.

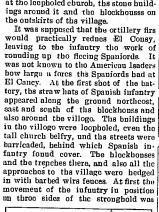
It was supposed that the artillery fire would practically reduce El Caney, leaving to the infantry the work of rounding up the Spaniards. But it was not known to the American leaders how large a force the Spaniards had at El Caney. At the first shot of the battery, the straw hats of Spanish infantry appeared along the ground northeast, east and south of the blockhouse and also around the village. The buildings in the village were loopholed, even the tall church belfry, and the streets were barricaded, behind which Spanish infantry found cover. The blockhouses and the trenches there, and also all the approaches to the village were hedged in with barbed wires fences. At first the movement of the infantry in position on three sides of the stronghold was sharpshooters at about 8 o'clock. While advancing toward a field adjoining the road leading to El Caney it formed in line and charged forward toward the blockhouses at El Caney village. When within 800 yards of the blockhouses, the regiment found a rise of ground which served as shelter, and there it remained until 4 o'clock. The losses of the regiment began when the sharpshooters opened on it and continued during its advance to the shelter and while lying there. One officer wounded, 0 men killed and 45 wounded were the total casualties.



BATTLEFIELD AT EL CANEY.

(Note to Map.—The positions of regiments were as indicated at some stage of the battle. Owing to its smoking Springfield rifles the Second Massachusetts changed position to avoid exposure. The scale of the map is about 1,000 yards to the inch.)

On the line with the Twenty-second and Eighth regulars was the only volunteer organization engaged at El Caney, the Second Massachusetts, a militia regiment with a history in war and in peace. The commander of the Second Massachusetts, Colonel E. P. Charles, is a splendid type of a militia soldier. He had no war experience before he went to Cuba. Lieutenant Colonel Shumway and Major Whipple were both war veterans. The strength of the regiment at El Caney was 805 men, but two companies were detached as a reserve. The Second was armed with the smoking Springfield rifle and naturally drew the fire of the Spaniards. Lieutenant Field of Company Warner were killed and Captain Hapgood- seriously wounded. Total loss, 46 killed and wounded.

General Ludlow was personally conspicuous along his line all day, wearing a white straw hat. His horse was shot under him early in the fight. The general said that he had to hold in his men instead of encouraging them. There was no flinching nor cronching. The work of the brigade was rather negative than positive, because, while it advanced well in the front in order to get cover from the Spanish bullets, it could not at all times answer the Spanish fire, for fear of shooting into Chaffee's men, who had the chief role in the battle and were pressing up closer and closer to the Spanish works on the north and east.

The interval between Ludlow's and Chaffee's brigades was filled almost soon by the Second brigade of the division, commanded just at that time by Lieutenant Colonel A. S. Daggett of the Twenty-fifth United States (colored). Colonel Daggett was a soldier in the civil war in the Fifth Maine, one of the fighting regiments of the Army of the Potomac. He has recently been promoted to brigadier general for skillfully planning the brigade during u crisis July 1.

At El Caney the Second brigade consisted of the First, Fourth and Twenty-fifth regulars. The First was detached to guard the roads in the rear of the division and also to support Capron's battery. About 11 o'clock Colonel Daggett was ordered to lead the Fourth and Twenty-fifth to a position south of at the fort, where there was a gap of three fourths of a mile. The stone fort and against which Capron's guns had been thundering was pointed out to Daggett as the objective of his brigade. The trenches around the fort were very heavy, extending on three sides. These trenches as well as the smokeless powder were something new to the Americans. The Spanish trench is about 50 yards in length, just wide enough for men to stand in in line, and deep enough to cover the body up to the shoulders. The soil taken out of the trench is spread over the ground, and if its color is not like that of the earth it is covered with brush or leaves or sod, so that from a distance an enemy cannot see the trenches except when they are occupied by men. The men keep out of sight except when they rise to fire. There are no exits from the trenches. Men are put into them to fight and reprise the enemy or be killed in the ditch.

The Spaniards had no skirmishers nor outposts at El Caney, but were ready with their blind trenches, loopholed fortresses, smokeless powder and barbed wire fences to slaughter the Americans at close quarters.

The Twenty-fifth regiment hasg diligently opposite the fort, Colonel Daggett led it forward across a stream 6 feet wide and 1 foot deep. The men found sones cover under the high bank, but beyond the bank the ground was open. Across that ground the colored troops advanced by rushes—that is to say, they rushed in groups of platoons from cover to cover. By successive rushes of 40 or 50 yards the line slowly advanced. On its second advance from the bank the regiment met with its heaviest loss. Volley after volley was poured into the stone fort, from the village and from blockhouses on its left. Colonel Daggett says that many of the Spaniards left the fort and came out into the open, seemingly deliberating whether to surrender or attempt to reach the village. Their combativeness was gone. He supposed they were about to surrender. The fort had been breached in many places by Capron's shells, and just as the Twenty-fifth got almost over it a company of the Twelfth regiment of Chaffee's brigade entered through a breach and got the flag which had been out down by a shell. The strength of the Twenty-fifth regiment was 800 men, but only five companies, numbering 200 men, took part in the charge. The principal loss of 41 killed and wounded came out of the 200. None of the officers or men of the regiment, excepting Colonel Daggett, had ever heard a hostile shot before. Three of the companies in the charging column were gallantly led by three young lieutenants, Caldwell, Moss and Hunt.

The Fourth regiment, on the left of the Twenty-fifth, did not advance beyond the line within 600 yards range of the fort, from which the Twenty-fifth charged. The reason was that further advance would have brought it under fire and cuffire from the village, the blockhouses around it, as well as the fort itself. There was smooth ground in front of it all the way, and Colonel Daggett was satisfied that it would have been annihilated in attempting to advance. Company G of the Fourth skirmished on the front of its regiment to within 200 yards of the fort and lost 28 of its men wounded—out of 43 in the line.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

One of Life's Tragedies.

A story was told by London Truth not long since and its correctness vouched for, which shows the folly of acting hastily and impulsively in important concerns in life.

The son of a very wealthy man at his father's death found himself free to indulge every whim. He had certain horses, an island on which he played king at his pleasure. He was not an immoral man, int idis and foolish.

One day while using a long distance telephone he was charmed by the voice of the operator at the other end of the line. He managed to discover that it was that of a woman, young, single and pretty. In the course of n few days he convinced himself that the owner of the voice was the one human being who should be his wife and that life would be empty and desolate without her.

The girl was poor and listened to his proposals. She wished her money to buy her trousseau and to secure a chaperon to accompany her to the town where he resided.

In due time she arrived. Her looks were as attractive as her voice. He married her and a few days later was found dead by his own hand in his room. He left no explanation beyond the words, "I have made a mistake," scrawled on a sheet of paper left on the table.

As With One Voice They Spoke Up.

At a little uptown gathering not long ago the guests played some simple games and told ghost stories and managed to have a good time in the old fashioned way.

Pretty soon one of the gentlemen said:

"I don't believe we appreciate what a steady old slow coach the human brain is. Notwithstanding all our talk about quick wits and flashes of intelligence the brain is not so easily thrown from its accustomed ruts. If, for instance, I ask a question which is entirely new to you, but which you have an old brain mistakes for a query quite similar in construction, it will go right ahead and telegraph the reply in its own hidebound way."

"That sounds interesting," said one of the guests. "but show us an example.

"I will," said the first speaker, "with the proviso that you answer it promptly." He smiled, and then, without any haste, quietly asked, "Who saved the life of Pocahontas?"

"John Smith!" roared 39 voices.

"You see," said the questioner.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

When a Soldier Is Degraded.

This is how most armies degrade an officer who has been proved a traitor to his country. The day before the traitor is to be publicly degraded, the military tailor removes all the lace and gold stripes from the officer's uniform, replacing them with a single stitch, so that they can be readily torn away. The condemned man's sword is also filed almost in two, in order that it may be easily snapped.

At the time appointed the traitor, who has, of course, been tried by court-martial, is marched out with his regiment, wearing his uniform for the last time. A halt is called, a superior officer repeats the verdict of the court-martial, advances toward the traitor and says:

"You have disgraced the uniform you wear; you are unworthy to carry arms. In the name of our country we degrade you."

The decorations are torn from the breast, the sword broken in twain, and amid the muffled rumbling of drums the ceremony ends, although a long form of imprisonment is invariably followed.—Pearson's Weekly.

Poor Chance For Poets.

A poet is cross with me because I decline firmly to wait his unsought pupil advise him as to the desirableness of taking to verse with all his young energy. Other poets may take a statistical view of their case. Let them consider the estimated population of the globe. How many of these a year are justified in conduct in being poets? At this hour is there one such being anywhere? Suppose, for the sake of argument, that there are six. How many millions to one is it against the success of the neophyte? But, if verse be mixed, let him send his work to all the editors. If they think his poems worth printing (and paying for), then let him make friends with certain young critics, who will blow his trumpet before him. But do not let him bother busy old men, who, by reason of their age, are no longer good judges.—Andrew Lang in Longman's Magazine.

Tit For Tat.

Brothers and sisters ought to be glad to give and receive candy and presents.

"You show such bad taste in the selection of your neckties, Horace," said the elder sister of a youth in his teens. "They always look so wrinkled and shapeless too. You ought to let me buy them and tie them for you."

"I'm willing, sis," he answered, looking at her pinched waist, "if you'll let me buy your bobs and fasten them around you."—Youth's Companion.

Anchored.

"Up in my den," said a New Orleans bachelor, who lives in a couple of quaintly furnished rooms in a business block down town, "between the fireplace and the first bookcase on the left you will find two large slippers nailed to the wall, some four feet above the wainscoting. The heels of the slippers are quite close together, the toes spread slightly outward, and being made of brightly flowered dragget they look not unlike two enormous particolored beetles, clinging to the wall with folded wings. They are not, however, intended as ornaments, but have a very homely and practical purpose.

"When I retreat to my den at night, take down the book that suits my mood, get into a comfortable, ragged old jacket, turn the lamp just right and light my pipe—when I have performed these preliminary ceremonies, I place a chair directly in front of the slippers, insert my feet in their depths and lean back with the blissful consciousness that I can't possibly tip over and break my neck. I am anchored, so to speak, to the wall, and the light is so arranged as to make the position the best possible one for reading. My friends claim that the habit is pulling out my legs to an abnormal length, but I don't let that worry me. I'm thinking of having the scheme copyrighted."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

One One Good Point.

The English woman was arraigning America and everything American and in particular American. "Your bed springs are uncomfortable," she said, "I never slept in a comfortable bed the whole time I was in the States. And your breakfasts—such great, overfed meals as they are! I don't see how you live, breakfasting as you do. As for your American voices, well, they go without saying, or rather they won't go with saying, but so many more eloquent than I have so often scored upon that I won't pretend to compete. Of all the many unfruitful things about America, though, there's nothing so bad as your voices."

"Can't you think of something good about us?" came in a still, small voice from the American. "Haven't we a single redeeming quality?"

The English woman thought a bit. "Well, yes, you have one," she said at last in the tone of one who is making a great concession, "and that is your little elastic bands. They are so convenient and they seem to be so plentiful. I never saw so many in all my life as I did in the States. I must confess that to my mind very many of your worst traits are more than made up for by your little elastic bands."—New York Sun.

Milton and Dante's Heaven.

Milton's heaven is earthly and obvious, though with none but celestial inhabitants; where ews and moors succeed each other and "grateful twilight" has its appointed hour; where > the trees

> Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines
> Yield nectar;

whose angels sleep "fanned with cool winds" in their celestial tabernacles and cot not seemingly "nor in mist," but "with keen dispatch of real business." Dante's heaven is no less definite and orderly to the imagination, but mystical and ethereal, even while peopled by the soul and daughters of earth, passing from uniform, the sword broken in twain, and with divine visions that come and go like stars in a cloudy night and attended by the music of the spheres. Where are the two extremes between which lesser poets paint and plent their Edens. —Blackwood's Magazine.

Consumption and Canaries.

We do not in this paragraph allude to the islands to which people fly for the cure of consumption, but to the little birds which sing songs to us in their captivity, and are, according to Dr. Tucker Wise, a cause from which consumption comes. This gentleman says that from his own observation he is of opinion that in many instances diseased cage birds, such as canaries, communicate tuberculosis to u serious extent among human beings. As about 400,000 canaries are reputed to be sold every year in the United Kingdom, and as it is stated that tuberculosis is one of the most common diseases of birds, it does not seem unlikely that the canary may have considerable influence in the distribution of tuberculous infection.—London Hospital.

Accepted the Amendment.

Joseph Jefferson, at a dinner in New York, said that when called upon for a curtain speech in New Haven Billy Florence once delivered himself thus: "It is here and to you, ladies and gentlemen, that I owe my present success and my future hopes. I owe much when boys and girls. We played marbles together under the shadow of the old church, and now as we renew this warm welcome from old friends—what can I say? Simply that I never can forget the people of New Haven." A man in the front row said, "This is New Haven, sir." Florence: "I mean New Haven, of course," said Florence gravely.

"TRUMPETER CROW," NOBLE BLOOD...

CHAPTER VII.

"Nathalie, dear," said Mrs. Barry, looking up from her sofa a day or two later, "it is high time you were indulging in a new gown and a spring hat. Why don't you drive to town with Mrs. Freeman one of these warm afternoons? She'd only be too glad to take you and help you, and you'll be surprised to see what pretty things you can get or have made here in Cheyenne."

The girl's color, ever betraying, came and went, leaving her even paler than before. She turned away as though searching for a book and for a moment made no reply.

"I know how self denying you are, Nathalie, but think, dear, a young girl like you should not be so aggressively plain in her dress, and while your jacket and hat are all very well for winter our bright days are here now and there are warm hours in the sunshine no matter how cold it grows toward night. You're not sending money home, are you?"

"I—I've been helping dress Cousin Ruth," faltered the girl.

"But that isn't right, Nathalie, child, and your uncle is the last man to allow it, if indeed he knows of it. Your little salary should go to keeping you nicely dressed and in laying up for a rainy day. The major will pay you and put most of it in the bank. Do they allow you interest on it? Forgive me, dear. I don't want to interfere on your personal affairs, but you've become very dear to me, Nathalie, and I cannot see you pinching and denying yourself if it be to provide for others who are quite as well able to take care of themselves as you are; more so, I fear, for you are not looking a bit well of late."

No answer but the girl's face was averted, and she was trembling now from head to foot. Big tears were starting from her eyes. She was biting her lips in the effort to control their mad quivering.

"I did not dream it could mean so much to you."

Anxious and troubled, Mrs. Barry half turned on the couch and strove to see what Nathalie was doing. She held forth a fragile white hand. "Nathalie," she said softly.

It was too much. The girl turned suddenly, as though to throw herself upon her knee—laid clasp the extended hand, but at that very instant brisk steps and cheery voices were heard at the door, the gong bell clanged, and Nathalie rushed from the room up the narrow stairs.

It was Mrs. Freeman and Mrs. Ray who entered, fresh, radiant, blithe and joyous, the picture of health and happiness despite the fact that their respective lords were for afield and no man yet liberated or could say when they would be allowed to return to their post and to comfort. The renegade Indians, far from rushing northward on the old accustomed trail, as had been predicted, had lashed out westward and made a wide circuit before striking for the sand hills of Nebraska. There had been no conflict between them and the squadrons of the —th. The latter were now trotting a stern chase with the quarry long leagues ahead, and while they were saying unbecoming and unpublishable things about their letter halves were thanking heaven at their army homes for the news that the fleeing warriors were safely across the Union Pacific and "scooting" for the savage fastnesses in far northwest Nebraska, news which brought disgust unspeakable to the pursuing troopers, but to these women left at Russell joy utterly unconfined.

"Isn't it too good for anything?" exclaimed Mrs. Freeman as she led the way into Mrs. Barry's pretty parlor. "They have got so long a start our troops can't possibly overtake them, and the cavalry from Robinson and Red Cloud will have to do it all. I've been in misery until I got the news, and now, Where's Nathalie? Is she ready? I wanted to drive in before luncheon."

But Mrs. Barry put her finger to her lips and glanced significantly aloft.

"Nathalie is utterly upset about something this morning," she murmured. "Do sit down a moment, won't you? I want to talk with you about her. I am so troubled on her account. She has been ailing for days, as you know, seeming nervous and troubled, and it has become so much worse of late. What can be the matter?"

Then Mrs. Freeman looked appealingly at Mrs. Ray, and as she remained silent the former spoke:

"Mrs. Barry, if you, too, didn't think everything of Nathalie I should say this, but we both feel—Mrs. Ray and I—that you should know the story that has been going round. We've both heard it. We couldn't help hearing it. Every body seems to have heard it in the last two days, and it isn't all Mrs. Turner's doing either. Marion," she said, turning impulsively to her younger friend, "do help me, it is so hard."

Looking first at one, then at the other, Mrs. Barry saw too plainly the sorrow and embarrassment in each fair face.

"Tell me everything," she murmured. "Surely if trouble comes to her we should be the ones to help."

"It is hardly this, Mrs. Barry. It is told that Nathalie has several times been seen either away out on the prairie before the troops took away, or else down here near the store since that time, talking earnestly, pleadingly with a strange man—not a soldier—a tall, powerful fellow. At first it was thought to be—you know—one of Fanny Turner's fabrications, but Miss Maynard solemnly assured Mrs. Stannard she had seen it twice, and now, Mrs. Ray, you've got to tell the rest."

"It is only this, Mrs. Barry: You know the one-armed Hogan, our Irish groom, has. He is devoted to Captain Ray, but once in a long while he yields to temptation, and the other night he was in town and had evidently been drinking when he came back and had lost his key to the door of the little room he has in the extension at the rear of the quarters. Will had gone over to the barracks, and I heard our cook go to let Hogan in and heard him telling her that Nathalie was downtown. He had his arm excited and talked loudly, and I feared it would awaken you and Mrs. Ray, so I never spoke to him, but Hogan was very much provoked at being kept waiting, and he began exploring and crying, and the man answered her roughly, and Hogan thought the girl was your housemaid, for she heard his step and ran indoors at once, and then he himself had some words with the man and got knocked down, he said, so quick he never knew what hit him, and the man had vanished when he regained his feet. Hogan's man and the description by Miss Maynard are apparently the same. Who can it be and what possible hold can one like him have on a girl so sweet and refined as Nathalie?"

Mrs. Barry listened without interposing a word, but her eyes were clouding with sorrow and perplexity. At last she spoke.

"Can you remember the night, Mrs. Ray?"

"Yes, it was the night I was here with you—the night the news came that our battalion, too, had to go."

There was a moment of silence. Mrs. Barry had covered her eyes with her thin white hand and was thinking intensely, and presently, without removing her hand, she asked, and the question itself was significant:

"Did you notice that Mrs. Turner been very much with Miss Maynard lately?"

And her callers looked at each other without speaking. After waiting a moment for an answer and receiving none Mrs. Barry asked again. "Why do you not speak?" she said to Mrs. Freeman, who sat nearest. "You know that your silence tells me that my conjecture is correct. And now about Mr. Maynard. Mrs. Stannard told me that he sat up late days ago, was out on the porch awhile, but that he seemed anything but troubled. Did he see Nathalie and this man down by the store? Is that one reason he has not left his room since?"

"Yes, Mrs. Barry. Miss Maynard has told Mrs. Stannard and others, too, that not only she, but her brother, saw the meeting, and her brother recognized the man as one he had seen in the crowd the day of the trouble in town. But you've no idea how things ahead, and while they were saying unbecoming and unpublishable things shrouded their letter halves were thanking heaven at their army homes for the news that the fleeing warriors were safely across the Union Pacific and "scooting" for the savage fastnesses in far northwest Nebraska, news which brought disgust unspeakable to the pursuing troopers, but to these women left at Russell joy utterly unconfined.

"Isn't it too good for anything?" exclaimed Mrs. Freeman as she led the way into Mrs. Barry's pretty parlor. "They have got so long a start our troops can't possibly overtake them, and the cavalry from Robinson and Red Cloud will have to do it all. I've been in misery until I got the news, and now, Where's Nathalie? Is she ready? I wanted to drive in before luncheon."

But Mrs. Barry put her finger to her lips and glanced significantly aloft.

ing night penetrated the little parlor the girl knelt nerveless, encircled by those loving arms. Mrs. Barry would not question, seek an explanation now. Her one aim was to calm and comfort. Confidences, she assured herself, would follow. The maid came to the doorway with the parlor lamp, but was bidden to leave it in the adjoining room and to see that Nathalie should visitors appear. At last Nathalie herself attempted words. "Why, it is long past time for your tea," she murmured brokenly. "How selfish and forgetful I've been! Let me get it," she pleaded.

"And you, too, Nathalie, have not tasted a mouthful since breakfast. Order tea, dear. Then we'll talk."

But even after the soothing cup Nathalie Baird seemed her friend's comforter. To every plea that she should reveal the name of the man who had so destroyed her peace of mind and to disclose the nature of the claim she held the girl was dear and determined. "I'm not ask me that," she said. "I'd have pledged my very word not to tell. All that is to be allowed you is to believe Jon of my shame and anxiety my staying would surely cause. Oh, Mrs. Barry, Mrs. Barry," she cried aloud, "you do not dream what he could do. His threatens me even here under your roof. He says unless I bring or send him more he will come here to this house to demand it. Oh, don't you see—don't you know why I do not tell it all, and by stealing away at night and hiding from the train goes where only I could relieve you of all this misery? Mrs. Barry, I haven't a penny in the world. He has taken every cent."

CHAPTER VIII.

The doctor, once away from Ronald Maynard's room that evening a puzzled man. He was not the most astute person in the service. Of the three "medicos" employed at the post two were in the field with the battalions of Barry and Stannard, and the third—we need not give his name—remained to look after the women and children, the hand and noncombatants and the infantry guard sent over from Steele. He was a good-natured young man. He had found the lieutenant so much improved that he had ventured to advise his sitting out on the porch and sunning himself and was surprised at the request that he had not been very much in the way—a nuisance to her and to her shrieking lover? Very bitter were his thoughts, and, manlike, he included in his jealous anger not only the girl who had caused him such poignant suffering, but Clara Singleton's sister who had been the first to open his eyes to his queen's unworthiness.

And so when Grace Maynard came to him soon after evening gun fire with some dainty refreshment Mrs. Stannard had prepared for him he turned away almost petulantly and with his face to the wall said he could not hear the sight of anything to eat. And this was the brother who ever since childhood had been her charge to keep, her loyal and obedient vassal.

Sighing hopelessly, she turned away and would have gone, but he called her back. "Grace," he said, "there's something I've got to say. I'm getting all right. I can sit up just as well as not, and there's no reason why tomorrow or next day I shouldn't go to my own room and why within the week I shouldn't hear from the regiment."

"Oh, Ronald," she interrupted, "the doctor says it would be death to you to try it,"

"Well, better that kind of death than fretting to death here. It's killing me by inches, Grace, and I want to get away, and—we've staid too long here at the Stannards' anyhow. It's awfully good of them, but we have no right, as I claim, so I'm going to move day after tomorrow and no more about it, and you ought to be thinking about starting for home."

Think about starting for home, indeed? Was she in her sound senses? Was this her little Ronald telling her she should be returning to that fiend of Modoc village before he was fairly well? It was incredible, it was more than that it was unnatural, unfeeling, cruel, heartless. She had arranged it all on very different lines. The doctor was to give a certificate. She had studied out the whole situation—a certificate on which Ronald was to be granted a month's leave with permission to apply for another, and then she would bundle up her brave boy brother, and by easy stages she would trundle him home, and there he would swing in his hammock and she and Gertrude would do all the reading and nursing and petting—she and Gertrude at first, so as to arouse no jealousy and consequent rebellion—then she would gradually slip away for a few months at a time, then for half a year or so, and more and more leave them alone together, and Cupid and Psyche would do the rest.

But here he was calmly, positively telling her that it was his purpose to leave Stannard's quarters, to order packing that she should follow and occupy Dana's room or Hollis', but with all that had she said nothing saying it was time for her to be thinking of the homeward start because he meant to be with the field. It was not to be. He meant defeat to her hopes and plans. It might leave him still under the influence of this dangerously lovely New England girl, whom she was bound to regard as unworthy his notice, yet could not really believe guilty, no matter what Mrs. Turner thought, of anything grave than indiscretion.

The same gloaming that shrouded Nathalie and her gentle friend in the adjoining quarters had stolen in upon this unprompted conference. The sister could no longer see her brother's face. He lay there vaguely conscious of, yet never hearing, the rapid beating of her aching heart. Perhaps in his own dumb misery the young fellow did not wish to see or hear the first symptom of either pain or remembrance. The one thought uppermost in his mind was that for long, radiant, beautiful days, and weeks, and months, Nathalie Baird had lived queen of his heart's first love, pure and strong and fervent, and that from that queendom had been dashed to earth a broken idol, and it was his sister whom he held where that shattered her throne. For Mrs. Turner he felt only impatient contempt. He recalled now how often he had heard of her as seeing wrong in and saying wrong of every woman of whom she felt the faintest envy, and already there was growing up in his heart strong resentment against the two "scheming" as he called them, and new excuse, new explanation, of Nathalie's strange conduct. He did not wish to wound his sister, lest if he had to prepare her for the news he at least could not wound her half so deep as her revelation had stabbed him. For several minutes she had stood there after he had ceased. Her first impulse was to protest, and vehemently, against his decision. Then she was minded of the doctor's demand that he should be spared all worry and excitement, for his sleep had been fitful and broken, and he surely needed calm repose. At last she ventured to trust herself.

"We will not decide tonight, Ronald," she said as gently as she could. "I will think over all you say, and if the doctor agrees with you"—

"Never he agrees with me or not," broke in the young soldier impatiently, "I leave this house tomorrow or next day. I will not remain here a day on Mrs. Stannard's kindness, and I'm going to the field the moment I can walk. I shall tell Mrs. Stannard of the thing tomorrow morning."

But when morning came it brought new distraction, and for the time at least banished all thought of change of quarters.

He had passed a wretched night despite the doctor's late visit and a suspicion of soothing syrup in his medicine. Once or twice long hours and he was only falling into a troubled doze when the rafters shook with the dull boom of the reveille gun, and the jingle of harness-ry summoned the little garrison to roll call. Not ten minutes thereafter came the sound of voices on the parade, one broadly Irish, loud, truculent, semi-defiant, the other low, firm, but authoritative.

"I tell ye the leddy will see me—she'll see me the first thing in the morning." the first was saying. "Him that sint it's dying on me hands wid sorra a"—

"Stop your lieferal talk, you upper!" was the fierce interruption. "You'll see no one here until people are up, and not then until you can give an account of yourself."

And Maynard, painfully struggling out of bed, reached the window with no little effort and gazed out upon the scene. Writhing in the grasp of the corporal of the guard, to whose assistance another soldier had run, was a brawny Irishman, and Maynard knew him at a glance. It was the same fellow whose shock head had peered from the upper window of the Empire saloon the day of his luckless mission in search of absentees.

Frantically now he was waving a paper in his hand as though striving to attract attention, and the stalwart arm and hand nearly throttled him and sorely stopped his speech, and even while Maynard looked there marveling and with sinking heart asking himself what new complication impended the girl he so hopelessly loved he felt a light touch on his arm, and his sister in dressing gown and slippers stood close behind him. "Ronald, this is most imprudent," she began, but he shook her off roughly, relentlessly, for there on the roadway below before his very eyes a tall, slender girl, her beautiful hair adrift, clad, like his sister, in loose wrapper, was hastening toward the struggling group, and at sight of her the contest ceased. Her head was bareher shawl lost with its cap. The furious captive forgot, for a moment at least, his wrath and eagerly held forth the scrap of paper in his hand. She took it hastily, read it rapidly through, turned as though to utter imperious command, but changed her mind, and instantly sought his window for an instant! Then as suddenly she turned. "Say I'm coming quick as possible. Go!" she cried and then fled back into the house.

Official Paper of the City of Crookston.

THE lower house of the legislature has the reputation of being particularly industrious. Business methods obtain.

MERRIAM will be the director of the new census. This is the last report with reference to this many-offered man. Next.

SENATOR RYDER is one of the Mark Twains of the Senate. Bright-jeweled scintillations of wit occasionally flash forth from him.

SPANIARDS in Havana have issued an appeal to their compatriots in Cuba urging that a united movement be made for annexation to the United States.

THE federation of the separate states or provinces of Australia is almost an assured fact. Members of the national house of representatives will be elected for three years.

THE HALLOCK NEWS appeared last week in its new form as a six-column quarto. This is a vast improvement. Editors Nelson and LeMasurier are keeping right up with the times.

SENATOR RYDER covered himself with glory by his speech in favor of his bill for the election by the people of insurance commissioner, labor commissioner and superintendent of public instruction.

IN reporting last week that a bill providing for the election by the people of the railroad and warehouse commissioners has become a law the JOURNAL was in error. The bill has only passed the house.

THE peace treaty with Spain was ratified by the United States senate last Monday afternoon. There were three votes more than the necessary two-thirds. Twenty-seven senators voted against the treaty.

CHANGES emanate from the Leech Lake Indian agency to the effect that a large proportion of the timber now being cut is green. There is fear of an uprising among the Indians unless this stenling of their timber is stopped.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY has commuted Eagan's sentence of dismissal from the army to six years' suspension from rank and duty. As General Eagan retires at the end of the period this sentence virtually removes him from active service in the army.

THE fact that word of the ratification of the Spanish peace was immediately cabled to Manila and instructions sent that Aguinaldo be at once notified of the same shows clearly what the Washington authorities think as to the cause of the assault of Sunday.

THOUGH the state is not likely to have the school text books printed at our prisons, it seems possible that this printing may be done under some contract system, for the sentiment is quite general that the school book companies are exorbitant in their charges.

UNDER the Torrens system of transferring real estate, the state would make one examination of title of land, and if the title was passed, the state guaranteed the title behind it, and the property is transferred by a simple certificate of transfer, noted on the margin of the records.

MR. WHEATON, the only colored representative in the house, made a plea last week in behalf of the men of his color. The privileges of saloons, under the present civil rights laws, are denied the negroes and Mr. Wheaton wishes this matter rectified. His eloquence were worthy a better object.

A COURT of inquiry is likely to be appointed by the president to investigate the charges that have been and are being made by General Miles. If what the general has been saying is untrue then we think he should be summarily punished and if true then the ones responsible for this condition should suffer.

MINNESOTA timber will not be wanting in the next United States senate. There will be Senators Davis and Nelson of course, then McCumber, of North Dakota, who received his early training in this state and A. G. Foster, senator-elect from Washington, who for years was a prominent business man of St. Paul.

THE demand for popular election of United States senators has become more general than ever before. The Wisconsin senate has sent a memorial to congress advocating a constitutional amendment that will take this power of election out of the hands of the state legislatures. It is being felt that the factional fights growing out of the present method are very injurious to state politics, and besides state legislation is effected by deals and promises made where men are under great excitement.

THE time during which those seeking divorce must remain before the desired documents can be secured has been extended in North Dakota from 90 days to 12 months. A correspondent at Fargo says that "the average business man of Fargo will see the colony disappear with regret." But the moral tone of the state will be raised.

SENATOR RYDER wants some of the senators from the southern part of the state to come to Crookston on Feb. 13 to look at the state experimental station, and incidentally to help the citizens in celebrating Lincoln's birthday. That's right senator. Bring them along. We will be pleased to welcome them and promise that their time here will not be wasted.

IF ever base ingratitude was shown it was shown by Aguinaldo and his followers when they charged the American lines at Manila. Treasures, both money and life, have been expended by the United States in an effort to release the natives of the Philippines from the thraldom of Spain and yet those who were befriended turned against their benefactors.

THERE has been an exchange of greetings between President McKinley and General Gomez of Cuba. The latter has agreed to co-operate in the pacification of Cuba and as the president says, "this will be of the greatest value to both peoples." The Cuban army will be disbanded and the United States will give each Cuban soldier $100 with which to buy tools. "And they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks."

DULUTH has been making strenuous efforts to have a normal school established in that city and the evidence of the normal school directors before the legislative committee shows that either a new Normal school must be built or large special appropriations must be made to the Normals, for the latter, with present facilities, cannot accommodate all the students who wish instructions in these schools. The committee will take a jaunt and inspect the schools for themselves.

C. L. SMITH, state inspector of the Dairy and Food Department, has been removed from office. J. M. Bowler, Dairy and Food commissioner, who discharged Mr. Smith, says that he was governed in the case by the "iron rule of politics," and that there was no lack of merit on Mr. Smith's part. He was indeed a general favorite with the dairy farmers of the state. We cannot but admire Bowler for stating openly why he made the change but it is becoming more evident every day why the so-called reform party should not be in power.

THE more the question of additional drainage in the Red River Valley is discussed the more the people and their representatives in the state legislature are convinced that the demand for this is imperative. Thousands upon thousands of acres of the most fertile soil in the land now uncultivated needing only the work of the skilled engineer to make them ready for the plough and the harvest. We are pleased to learn that the joint committee of the legislature which has made an exhaustive study of the question has unanimously decided to report favorably upon the bill providing for an appropriation of $100,000. These legislators are on the committee and who in consequence have had neither the time nor the opportunity to thoroughly examine the matter would do well to follow the recommendation of the committee and vote for the appropriation.

Senators Coming To Crookston.

Will Bloom, who has in charge the Lincoln banquet, received a telegram today from Senator Ryder saying that Senators McCarthy, Horton, Snyder, J. Somerville, Prowett, Potter, Reeves, Smith, Grindeland and Ryder would be at Crookston to help in the Lincoln celebration.

In Memory of Lincoln.

At the Congregational church next Sunday evening a "Lincoln Anniversary" service will be held. It is planned and prepared by the Citizenship committee of the young people's society of Christian Endeavor and, aside from the singing, nearly all the parts will be taken by the young men. A short sketch of Lincoln's life will be given, and an address on "The Contemporaries of Lincoln," together with extracts from the two inaugurals, the Gettysburg speech and the Emmancipation Proclamation. A short responsive service, in which all may participate, illustrating the great work which the martyred president began, and which patriotic citizens are now carrying forward, has been prepared for the occasion.

London has a resident population of nearly 1,000 professional orchestral instrumentalists.

The eggs of the silkworm are about the size of mustard seeds.

Klondikers' Farewell.

Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Calhoon were At Home Friday night to about 40 of their friends. The occasion was something of a farewell to Mr. Calhoon who with Mr. Hawes leaves for the Klondike county the day after tomorrow. Supper was served at 6:30. The first dish was "Klondike Hash," served in wooden bowls and eaten with chop sticks. A delightful time was spent by all.

A Record Breaker.

Yesterday was one of the coldest days on record in this section. The government thermometer registered 40 below on the lowest and at any time during the temperature remained close to that figure, a strong northwest wind blowing at the same time.

The Ungainly Russian Sailor.

A real salleraan has fingers bent up like fishhooks from the lifelong habit of gripping things. The Russian sailor carries his hands like a soldier and cannot possibly be "handy." A sailor's gait ashore has a slight roll. This arises from the need at sea of keeping up the windward side of a rolling ship. And the rolling gait marks one of a sailor's finest qualities—balance. Unless the body balances and poises to meet every motion of a ship the result is seasick more.

Now, the Russian blue jacket does not roll in his gait ashore, but marches. Neither has he any sense of balancing at sea and seasickness in the Russian fleet is a source of actual weakness and danger. The Black sea squadron can only put to sea in the three calmest months of the summer, and the so-called maneuvers take place ashore on the Crimean peninsula, consisting mainly of battalion drill.

One more trait of the real sailor is his self reliance, which makes him fit for facing emergencies single handed. But the Russian blue jacket has none of this. He is not a machine in himself, but only a little bit of a machine which cannot work without the other bits. He is huge in status—a giant compared with our men—but in his winter overcoat it is impossible to distinguish him from a soldier. Tehandy, insular, reliant only in drill discipline, he is utterly unfit for active service.—London Answers.

Silent Brides.

In Korea during the whole of the marriage day the bride must be as mute as a statue. If she says a word, or even makes a sign, she becomes an object of ridicule, and her silence must remain unbroken, even in her own room, though her husband should attempt to break it by taunts, jeers or coaxing; for the female servants are all on the watch for such a breach of etiquette as speech, hanging about the doors and shutters to catch up and repeat even a single utterance which would cause her to lose caste forever in her circle.

This custom of silence is observed with the greatest rigidity among the higher classes. It may be a week or several months before the husband knows the sound of his wife's voice, and even after that for a length of time she only coms her mouth for necessary speech. With the father-in-law the custom of silence is still more rigid, and the daughter-in-law often passes years without raising her eyes to his or addressing a word to him. In Bulgaria a month's silence is imposed on brides unless specially addressed by the husband.

Smart Little Girl.

A little girl who has just entered school jubilantly announced to her father that she had beaten all the girls above her in the arithmetic class and gone to the top.

"That was clever of you," said he encouragingly. "How was it?"

"Well, you see, the teacher asked the girl at the head how much was 8 and 6, and she didn't know and said 13, and the next girl said 9, and the next one said 11, and the next one said 14. Such silly answers! Then the teacher asked me, and I said 15, and she told me to go top. 'Course it was 15."

"That was nice," said the father. "I didn't think you could add so well. How did you know it was 13?"

"Why, I guessed it. Nobody said 18."—Pearson's Weekly.

The Libelous "They Say."

The one term "they say" is responsible for nine-tenths of the lies which repetition and familiarity finally convert into seemingly bona fide evidence. One usually hears an exciting bit of gossip launched forth with those words while at the same time the speaker adroitly shields himself by denying that personally she does not know it to be true. The man or woman who thus screens himself or herself is looking short of a coward.—Josephine Hill in Woman's Home Companion.

Soap Mixed In the Dough.

Epicures may be interested to know that continental bakers are in the habit of mixing soap with their doughs to give their bread and pastry nice and light. The quantity of soap varies. In fancy articles, like vanilla and frisbees, it is much larger than in bread. The soap is dissolved in water, oil is added, and the mixture, after being well whipped, is added to the flour.

STATE LEGISLATURE

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 1.

The Omaha exposition bill caused a lively time in the senate, but was finally recommended for passage. The wolf bounty bill took up some time but progress was reported. The committee of the whole also recommended a report of progress on Senator Potter's graduated tax penalty law and Senator Greer's tax commission bill.

The appointment of David Bronson of Stillwater as a member of the prison board in place of J. S. O'Brien, "removed," was confirmed without opposition.

Wilson's divorce bill, which restores the former requirement of three years absence before the plea of desertion will be valid, was indefinitely postponed.

The house passed the newspaper consolidation bill and one for the distribution of bonds.

Under the head of committee reports the Jacobson bill for increasing the gross earnings tax on railroads was transmitted to the house. Mr. Jacobson moved a special order for Tuesday, Feb. 7, at 10:30 and the house assented.

THURSDAY, JAN. 2.

Senator Somerville's foreign corporation bill was debated most of the morning in the senate. After much discussion and many amendments had been killed a recess was moved on the understanding that the bill would be taken up again in the afternoon, but during the confusion a motion to adjourn till morning was carried.

Four bills on general orders were recommended to pass as follows: Senator Potter's bill providing for a graduated penalty for overdue taxes, Senator Jacobson's wolf bounty bill, Senator Ganeswitz's pharmacy bill, and Senator E. E. Smith's bill allowing telephone companies to obtain rights of way along rights of way controlled by railroads.

In committee of the whole the house considered H. F. 72, the biggest piece of work of the session. But one measure was indefinitely postponed, Mr. Grass' bill limiting the collection of road taxes. The most important bills recommended to pass were:

To protect bicycle paths and bicyclists; to permit evidence before the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners to be accepted in courts of appeal; to abolish days of grace; to punish disorderly conduct on public conveyances.

Donohue's resolution for an exposition in 1902 was indefinitely postponed.

FRIDAY, FEB. 3.

The house passed a dozen bills, among them the Wallace measure to protect bicycle paths and others favorably recommended in committee Thursday.

The Omaha exposition bill passed the senate 36 to 11, about all of the senators excusing themselves from voting on the ground that they were ignorant of Omaha exposition notes. The bill passed was H. F. 72, which was substituted for Senator McGilvra's S. F. 85, as it was identical in wording and had received the favorable attention of the committee. Other bills passed were:

S. F. 110—To authorize counties to purchase land to be used as agricultural fair grounds.

H. F. 65—To provide for the distribution of certain state funds now held by the farmers and agricultural schools of the state.

S. F. 84—To repeal an act to prevent corrupt practices in elections, etc.

SATURDAY, FEB. 4.

The state senate has recommended for passage Senatorville bill for taxing foreign corporations. The measure was bitterly fought and numerous amendments that would have crippled it were voted down and defeated. The bill provides that foreign corporations, hereafter established in Minnesota or that have been established in the state but which are not filing articles of corporation and paying the license fee required by the law of 1889, governing domestic corporations shall now comply with the 1889 law in all things. This means that they must pay a fee amounting in the aggregate to about $525 on every million dollars of capital stock that the concern may have invested in Minnesota, also that they must maintain a business office and a resident agent.

MONDAY, FEB. 6.

The lower house held a brief session, much of the time being occupied in an attempt to correct the previous day's journal. The following bills were passed: To fix the return day for juries in certain cases; appropriating $19,870 to Minnesota Sugar Beet company as bounty provided under chapter 356 general laws; amending existing laws relative to municipal court at the city of Duluth.

TUESDAY, FEB. 7.

Much the greatest portion of the five hours the house was in session was taken up in the discussion on the Jacobson bill providing for the increase in taxation of railroad companies on their gross earnings from 3 to 4 per cent. The bill was passed with but five opposing votes. Messrs. Allen, Knyvenbuhl, Lommen, W. Olson and Winston. It will be submitted to the people at the next general election, providing it is not killed in the senate.

The committee on manufactures recommended for passage the bill of Mr. Laybourn (Rep.) of St. Louis, H. F. 170, providing for the payment of 50 cents per ton per acre on all pig iron manufactured in the state.

The senate held uneventful sessions. Nearly the entire time was spent in committee of the whole with Senator Johnson in the chair.

A dozen or more bills on general orders were considered. Two most important measures recommended to pass were S. F. 23, Senator Snyder's teachers' retirement bill, and S. F. 24, Senator Miller's grain and warehouse bill.

Committee Favorable To $100,000 For Drainage.

City Engineer Geo. A. Ralph returned yesterday morning from St. Paul where he has been for several days working in the interest of some bills that are up before the legislature: one for the appointment of a civil engineers' state examining board and another for the Red River Valley Drainage. He says that the committee of both houses will report unanimously in favor of a $100,000 appropriation for ditch making in this section.

The Doctored Result.

"I felt tired all the time and had constant headaches. My appetite was poor and I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. The result was that after taking one bottle I began to grow stronger and my headaches less severe. I kept on with Hood's until I was perfectly cured."—Lizzie Page, Potoski, Wis.

The English of 1453.

The English population consisted of churchmen, nobles and craftsmen, as well as common people. It was a novel and significant division. Traders and manufacturers took their places somewhat noisily beside their fellow politicians of older standing. Filling the whole land till it seems for a moment as if nothing counted any more in English life save its middle class—busy, hard, prosperous, pugnacious middle class, slowly emerging from its early obscurity. In this century it had arrived at power definitely, ostentatiously, carrying a proud look and a high stomach. Intent on its own affairs, heedless of the court, regardless of ministers save when it had to bribe them, irreverent to the noble, the "proud penniless with, his painted sleeve," tolerant of ecclesiastics only so long as they could be kept rigidly within their allotted religious functions. — Denton's "England in the Fifteenth Century."

His Last Question.

The counsel for the opposition had been bullying the witness for an hour or more, when he finally asked:

"Is it true that there are traces of insanity in your family?"

"It would be folly to deny it," replied the witness. "My great-grandfather, who was studying for the ministry, grew it up to become a lawyer."—Exchange.

A Remarkable Vase.

On the roof of a brewery at Middleton, Kent, is to be seen one of the most remarkable vases in England. It represents an old brown jug and glass. The jug, which is made of copper, stands 3 feet 6 inches in height and is 3 feet in diameter and capable of holding 108 gallons.

Overdid It.

"I understand she married him to reform him."

"That was it. And she did the job so thoroughly that now he doesn't like the kind of woman he liked when he married her and is trying to get a divorce."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Married.

VANSTRUM-SAMPSON.

On Monday afternoon last at the home of Hon. B. Sampson occurred the marriage of Miss Olga Bermandine, the third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sampson, to Mr. Albert Emmanuel Vanstrum of this city. Owing to the illness of the bride's mother only the family and a few of the intimate friends were present. The wedding gifts were choice and useful. The pastor of the Congregational church, Rev. Herman P. Fisher, officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Hegg, at whose wedding Mr. Fisher officiated a few weeks since were present from Duluth. Mr. Sampson is one of the old residents of this city and Miss Olga is the second one of the family to be married and go forth from the paternal home. The wedded couple left on the evening train for Minneapolis where they will spend a few weeks and then return to make their home in this city.

Sydney Smith's Preception.

The late Henry Reeve, C. B., D. C. L., for many years leader writer of the London Times and until his death editor of the Edinburgh Review, has narrated much amusing gossip of the celebrities of his acquaintance in his "Memoirs and Correspondence." The book contains one great rarity—a new story of Sydney Smith.

Mr. Reeve was dining one night at a house where the other distinguished guests included Macaulay and Sydney Smith. Macaulay was at that time laying up society waste with his waterspouts of talk. People in his company were always bursting for want of an opportunity of dropping a word, and this was not an exceptional occasion.

At length: dinner being over, Sydney Smith, Reeve relates, a few chairs went away by themselves, and immediately got on the overpowering subject of Macaulay.

"He confounds soliloquy and colloquy," said Reeve.

"He is a book in breeches," Smith declared.

"The very worst feature in Macaulay's character is his appalling memory," said Reeve.

"Ayes, indeed," said Sydney Smith. "Why, he could repeat the whole 'History of the Virtuous Bisecont Boy,' in three volumes, post 8vo, without a slip."

After a pause, as if of consideration, the witty divine added, "He should take two tablespoonfuls of the waters of Lethe every morning to correct his retentive powers."

Cheap Living.

Government experts say that a man can be well fed for 33 cents a day. This however, means boarding him in mass. There is a man in Philadelphia, however, who laughs at this lavish expenditure, inasmuch as his bill of fare for the entire week only costs that amount. Twenty years ago he made up his mind that Americans ate too much. His staple meal is in the middle of the day, and it always consists of soup—good, rich soup—and a baked potato. Some days instead of the baked potato he has what southerners call corpus, which are extremely cheap and whole soup. They cost 5 cents a pound and serve very much in cooking. He cooks them with a bit of salt pork. Rice is also one of his staple foods and occasionally a bit of fish. He buys two loaves of stale bread a week, which cost 2½ cents a loaf. These are always toasted.

Cabbage is another article of diet, being cheap and of great value. He has an arrangement with his grocer by which he buys the scrape of cheese left over from the large cuttings at 3 cents for a day's scrape. He is in sound health and has not had indigestion for 20 years.—New York World.

Linked Eyebrows.

It is popularly believed that if one's eyebrows meet it indicates deceit. Charles Kingsley endorses this belief, but Tennyson has other ideas and poetically speaks of "married brows."

In Turkey meeting eyebrows are greatly admired, and the women use artificial means to bring the brows to this condition, and art cannot induce this eyebrows to grow they make up by drawing a black line with paste.

It would appear that the Greeks admired brows which almost met, and the fashionable inhabitants of Rome not only approved of them, but resorted to pigments to make up the lack which sometimes existed.

Some proverbs state that the person whose eyebrows meet will always have good luck, while others state exactly the reverse. The Chinese say that "people whose eyebrows meet can never hope to attain to the dignity of a minister of state," and in Greece of today the man whose brows meet is said to be a vampire, while in Denmark and Germany it is said he is a werewolf.

FROM FOOT TO KNEE

Ohio Woman Suffered Great Agony From a Terrible Sore—Her Story of the Case, and Her Cure.

"For many years I was afflicted with a milk leg, and a few years ago it broke out in a sore and spread from my foot to my knee. I suffered great agony. It would burn and itch all the time and discharge a great deal. My health was good with the exception of this sore. I tried a great many kinds of salve, but some would irritate the sore so that I could hardly stand the pain. I could not go near the fire without suffering intensely. Someone sent me papers containing testimonials of cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I told my husband I would like to try this medicine. He got me a bottle and I found it helped me. I kept on taking it until my limb was completely healed. I cannot praise Hood's Sarsaparilla enough for the great benefit it has been to me. It cleanses the blood of all impurities and leaves it rich and pure." MRS. ANNA E. EAKEN, Whittlesey, Ohio.

You can buy Hood's Sarsaparilla of all druggists. Be sure to get only Hood's.

Absquatulated.

The JOURNAL reporter was recently in the law chambers of one of the members of the Crookston bar when an individual with the exact appearance of "Old Hoss" opened the door and inquired after the learned advocate. The high and mighty personage ensconced in the lofty backed office chair informed the stranger that the sought-for forensic pleader had absquatulated. Not a word was spoken in reply by the interrogator but legible on his physiognomy were these words: Young man, the grammaticulations that have but now proceeded forth from the infinite windings of your evidently attenuated gray substance are confoundable to and withal wholly incomprehensible for the intellectuality of your humble servant. At this point in the proceedings the paper on which the JOURNAL representative was taking notes fell through itself. This rather unusual action was occasioned by the superincumbent weight of verbiage.

Jungle Food and Jungle Poison.

Those who have traveled much through the damp jungles of India, such as the Terai, cannot have helped noticing the large amount of fungoid growth, both terrestrial and epiphytical, that presents itself, much of which is edible, but requires an intimate acquaintance with botany to determine between the poisonous and uninimical. What were not long since considered semisavage races on the northeast frontier are the best guides the uninitiated, however, can employ to distinguish the two classes. So close is the resemblance that it would be dangerous for the ignorant traveler to trust to his own unaided discrimination, and if the services of a human nomad are not available the fungi should be submitted to the equally au fait judgment of a tame monkey—a thing no traveler should be without.

The animal must be very closely watched when sitting in judgment, especial notice being taken of his countenance. If the specimen is poisonous, there is a decided look of disgust apparent, as the creature throws it from him, but if nonpoisonous it is torn into fragments, first smelled and then transferred to the mouth, in which case one may rest perfectly satisfied that it is edible, even though "jackoo" may not eat it. In no case will our remote connections make a mistake, nor, for that matter, will an elephant either. A spare elephant or two is also a handy thing to have among your luggage.—Indian Planters' Gazette.

Tricks of a Pet Crane.

My friend has a pet Florida crane of which he is very fond. The crane stands at one side by the hour, just pluming himself, then picking at shoe buttons and finger rings. Occasionally he is indulged in a favorite pastime—that of taking the hairpins out of his mistress' hair. In nature he is as gentle and affectionate as a kitten, and as he has never been teased he has no enmity for anything except a dog. One night he was attacked by a strange dog, and since then his hatred for any canine other than the home dog is intense.

Dick has always been inordinately fond of his master, whom he makes every effort to please. It is at his command that he will dance, bowing and twirling in the most graceful manner; then circling with wings distended around the yard and back again to bow and courtesy as before.

Another very pleasing recognition of his intelligence is the manner in which he always welcomes his owner. He recognizes his horse and carriage as far as his eye can reach, and long before the bird is in view his voice is heard trumpeting a greeting, which is continued until the master reaches the gate, when at the single command, "Louder, Dick!" he throws his head back and gives forth a long gurgling note, indicating joy and pleasure. To no one else will he give this welcome. It is unique and peculiar—for his owner alone.—Forest and Stream.

Sold Tickets on Him.

It is good to be a celebrity, and it is sometimes profitable merely to recognize one. While Chauncey M. Depew was at the Omaha exposition, says the New York Times, he and President Callaway of the New York Central chanced to go into a booth on the Midway Plaisance.

It was a tame entertainment, and there was only a meager attendance when Mr. Depew and Mr. Callaway entered. Their stay would have been very brief except for the fact that they had scarcely taken their seats before there began a steady inpouring of people, which continued until the small auditorium was crowded.

Taking this extraordinary increase of spectators as an indication that something of an interesting nature was about to be disclosed the two New Yorkers concluded to sit it out. Half an hour's waiting failed to reward their patient expectancy, however, and Mr. Callaway suggested that they move on.

Just then ex-Secretary of Agriculture J. Sterling Morton pushed his way through the crowd and, extending his hand to Mr. Depew, exclaimed:

"Well, Dr. Depew, so you are really here! I thought that 'barker' was lying."

"What do you mean?" inquired Mr. Depew.

"Why, the 'barker' for this show is standing outside and inviting the crowd to 'step up lively' and pay 10 cents for the privilege of seeing the 'great and only Chauncey M. Depew.'"

Value of a Comma.

A Prussian school inspector appeared at the office of the burgomaster of a little town to ask him to accompany him on a tour of inspection through the schools.

The burgomaster was out of sorts, and was heard to mutter to himself:

"What is this donkey here again for?"

The inspector said nothing, but waited his time, and with the unwilling burgomaster set out on his tour.

At the first school he announced his wish to see how well punctuation was taught.

"Oh, never mind that," grumbled the burgomaster. "We don't care for commas and such trifles."

But the inspector sent a boy to the blackboard and ordered him to write:

"The burgomaster of R. says the inspector is a donkey."

Then he ordered him to transpose the comma, placing it after R., and to insert another one after inspector, and the boy wrote:

"The burgomaster of R., says the inspector, is a donkey."

It is probable that the refractory official gained a new idea of the value of "commas and such trifles."—London Tit-Bits.

Men's Dress In London.

In London the female make up has no significance whatever. All kinds of men ranking anywhere above "lower class," however, have their frock coats and tall hats. A tailor made frock coat is not a luxury in London.

Take it in the United States, and a man wishes to attire himself in the extreme of what the British call "afternoon wear," must be willing to spend money. Compare the prices of a Sunday outfit:

	England.	U. S.
Frock coat and waistcoat....	$15 00	$50 00
Trousers..................	4 00	10 00
Silk hat..................	4 00	6 00

You can buy a bunch of violets on a London street corner for 4 cents. It costs sixpence to have a silk hat ironed. When it comes to the mere making of a personal front on a small income, no other city can offer such advantages as London.—Chicago Record.

The "Terrier."

A document known by the name of a "terrier" is supposed to be kept at every old parish church setting forth the sources of the income of the benefice—especially glebe lands; hence the derivation from the Latin "terra." Ignorance of this purely technical term led a clergyman into a curious mistake. He was a sporting parson and had just been appointed to his first living. During the early days of his incumbency he received a form from the bishop which he was required to fill up. Among the questions asked was, "Do you keep a terrier?"

"No," wrote the cleric in reply, "but I have two well bred pointers, and your lordship is welcome to one if you care to have it."—St. James Gazette.

Farmer Sinclair.

John Sutherland Sinclair is a farmer in North Dakota. His farm is called Berriedale farm. In the book of the peerage Mr. Sinclair is put down as Earl of Caithness, Lord Berriedale and a baronet of Nova Scotia. All the castles and vast estates which his ancestors owned have shrunk to the North Dakota farm. The earldom of Caithness once embraced all the northern part of Scotland, from sea to sea, and the Sinclairs were earls of Orkney too.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

He Was Explicit.

An ex-soldier who had lost a leg in the war and was tired waiting for his pension wrote to headquarters at Washington:

"Ef you won't send me my pension, won't you please send me a wooden leg, so'e I kin git about? The leg I lost wuz a bowleg on the left side an had three corns on the three little toes. So, now, you can't go wrong in makin a new one."—Atlanta Constitution.

The farmer's boy looks with scorn at the city boy, who doesn't know which the off horse and which the nigh horse is.—Somerville Journal.

Cooking Down South.

A thoughtful Virginian of mature years undertook yesterday to explain to me why southern people living in the north revert so often to the old fashioned cooking: "The beauty of the southern family dinner lay in the seasoning of the food to suit the taste of all the members of the household, individually and collectively. Old Aunt Dinah, or Aunt Sarah, or Aunt Chloe, the cook, knew exactly from years of practice what each of the children liked, what the father submitted to and what the mistress demanded, and she could please all.

"Take, for example, a rice pudding, one of the familiar stand bys. In the mixing of the ingredients Aunt Chloe would mutter to herself: 'Mars Willie 'e like plenty o' cinnamon. I'll jes put in 'nother little piece o' cinnamon for Mars Willie. Miss Tavy she like allspice. I'll jes put in a little mo' allspice for Miss Tavy. Mars Habersham 'e like plenty o' cloves. I must please Mars Habby wid a little mo' cloves. Miss Julia she fond o' nutmeg. Dar's a little mo' nutmeg for Miss Julia. Marster 'e all right if dey's plenty o' rice, an ole missus eat all de egg an milk. Dey all fond o' reesins, an dey all likes sugar plenty; so dar dey goes an de puddin's ready for de oven.'

"She has been stirring all the time for dear life, and, having looked out for each member of the family, the dish is bound to be a success."—New York Press.

The Woman of It.

The Philadelphia Record says: "Almost the first thing a visitor does upon entering the room in which the Declaration of Independence was signed is to add his autograph to the vast collection of more than 20 years. The custodian of the book a few days ago, in speaking of his experience, said: 'You wouldn't believe it, but we have had only two attempts to mutilate the register or to write anything in it except names and addresses, and on both of those occasions the culprits were women.

"'There's another strange thing about the visitors,' he continued. 'Of the thousands who come here the only ones we have any trouble with are the women. We have a tape stretched across all those chairs,' he said, as he pointed to a long line of 'seats of the mighty,' as it were—chairs of the signers—'to prevent people from sitting in them. Well, one woman only yesterday wanted us to cut the tape for her, because she claimed she was a descendent of one of the signers and thought she had a right to sit in his chair, and she went away mad when we wouldn't make an exception in her case.'"

Old and New.

An English newspaper contains an interesting parallel, discovered by a classical scholar. First comes a translation from the original Greek of Antipater of Thessalonica:

Once upon a time, when a ship was shattered at sea, two men fell at strife, fighting for one plank. Antagoras struck away Pisistratus. One could not blame him; it was for his life. But justice took cognizance. The other swam ashore; but him (Antagoras) a dogfish seized. Surely, the avenger of the fates rests not, even in the watery deep.

Then an incident recorded in the London Chronicle serves to translate the story into a modern event and to show how life repeats itself:

Two bluejackets, named Friday and Painter, were capsized from a boat at Weymouth. After a struggle to get into the waterlogged boat Friday beat his comrade off, and Painter swam ashore. Friday got into the boat and was drowned.

His Mustard Plaster.

The mustard plaster is a harmless looking wafer, but it must be handled with as much circumspection as a woman. There was a newly married man once whose wife told him to put on a mustard plaster to cure a cold. He had faith in her, and put it on. Then he went to sleep, being gifted with the power of sleeping under torments which is not given to one man in a thousand. The plaster seemed to him somewhat unreasonably hot, but he argued that the hotter it was the better. Besides, he had confidence in his wife. Next day he found a well developed blister on his chest, and his wife only laughed and said she had supposed any one would have sense enough to take off a plaster when it hurt him. Though that was 11 months ago, the mark of the plaster is still upon the man like a brand, and he now regards his wife's remedies with suspicion.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Married by Blood.

In the island of Bunquey there is a tribe of Dusuns differing widely in language, religion and customs from other tribes bearing that name. Marriages are performed in the forest in the presence of two families. There is no public gathering or feast.

The rite consists in transferring a drop of blood from a wooden knife in the calf of the man's leg to a similar cut in the woman's leg. After marriage the man takes the bride to her home, where he resides in future as a member of the family.

Whimsical Advertisements.

The author of "Pages From a Private Diary" gives some whimsical advertisements, as, for instance: "Respectable girls, about 18, wanted for bottling."

And from a bookseller's catalogue: "Clergymen.—A fine collection of 200 clergymen, consisting of Protestant ministers, Roman Catholics, Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians and Presbyterians, nice clean lot—5 shillings."

A Valid Excuse.

"Please excuse William from school today," wrote the boy's mother to the teacher, "as he sat up late last night studying his lessons and is too sleepy to come today."—Philadelphia North American.

City Ordinance.

An ordinance to provide for the numbering of lots in the city of Crookston and to provide for the placing of numbers upon the buildings erected in said city.

THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF CROOKSTON DO ORDAIN:

Section I. That all buildings within the city of Crookston shall be numbered in accordance with the map and plat showing the system of numbering such buildings, now on file in the office of the city engineer of the city of Crookston. The north and south dividing line for such numbering shall be Stearns avenue from its northern terminus to its intersection with Broadway extended, Broadway for its entire length, thence across the wagon bridge across the Red Lake river to Polk street, and along Polk street southerly to Main Street, and along Main street to its southern terminus; and the east and west dividing line shall be Bridge street through its entire length, thence along Robert street to St. Paul street, thence along St. Paul street to Woodland avenue, thence along Woodland avenue to its western terminus. The said plat showing the system of numbering and showing the number of each lot shall be kept in a public and convenient place in the office of the city engineer.

Section II. The numbers of all buildings within the city of Crookston shall be exhibited in plain sight on the street side of each and every of said buildings, within thirty days after the publication of this ordinance, and each and every building hereafter erected within said city shall have exhibited on the street side thereof the number of said building in accordance with this ordinance within thirty days after the completion of such building.

Section III. The figures indicating the number of each building shall be plain, and be a least two and one-half inches in height.

Section IV. Any owner of any of said buildings now erected or hereafter erected within said city, or other person having the custody and control of said building who shall refuse or neglect to cause to be placed thereon the number thereof, in accordance with the foregoing sections of this ordinance, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not less than one dollar nor more than ten dollars for each offense. And in addition to the penalty herein prescribed, the city council shall on such refusal or neglect have the power and authority to cause the number of said building to be placed thereon as herein before set forth, the cost of so doing to be collected from the owner or person having control thereof, in a civil action by the city, or the city council may by resolution assess the cost of such numbering so done by the city against the property so numbered.

Section V. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and legal publication.

Delicate Children

They do not complain of anything in particular. They eat enough, but keep thin and pale. They appear fairly well, but have no strength. You cannot say they are really sick, and so you call them delicate.

What can be done for them? Our answer is the same that the best physicians have been giving for a quarter of a century. Give them of Cod-Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It has most remarkable nourishing power. It gives color to the blood. It brings strength to the muscles. It adds power to the nerves. It means robust health and vigor. Even delicate infants rapidly gain in flesh if given a small amount three or four times each day.

THE POOL IS BROKEN.

Iron Ore Combine Will Not Govern the Output This Season.

DULUTH, Feb. 8.—The combination of iron ore miners that for the past half dozen years has governed the price of bessemer ores and has allotted to each range and every mine the amount it could sell in the market, is broken.

It put together this month in Cleveland, but the interests failed to agree on an allotment and the whole thing broke up. Before the break, however, the pool managed to make a price on ore for the coming year about 20 cents above that of last year.

Contrary to the general result when pools are broken, there will probably be no decline when the prices arranged by the agreement are changed, but an advance. It was the fact that some interests thought the pool prices too low that caused the failure of negotiations for an allotment agreement.

At the first sound of hoofs upon the dry sod Amelia deserted the dishpan and stationed herself at the front door.

"Well, for the land's sake, what brings you here?" she cried as the horseman finally reined in near the porch and slid from his saddle.

Before ventruring a reply the big stoop shouldered fellow cautiously surveyed the premises and indulged in an apologetic cough.

"Where's y'r pa?" he at last inquired, his uneasy eyes resting for a moment upon the plump little figure in the doorway.

"I reckon you're terrible anxious to see him," laughed Amelia, drying her moist hands in the folds of a blue gingham apron. "He ain't here, though—nor Jim, nor anybody—only me. It's too bad, Dave."

"Oh, I s'pose it might be worse," said Dave as he proceeded leisurely to hitch his horse to a convenient post. Having accomplished this to his entire satisfaction, he grasped the porch rail and vaulted over, alighting close to Amelia.

"Now, Dave, don't you dare!" she cried warningly, divining his intent and immediately seeking safety in flight.

But Dave started in pursuit, and, overtaking Amelia in the hall, he dared an energetic kiss on her own browned cheek.

"I think I hear pa comin," giggled Amelia, and Dave started guiltily.

"Nothin of the kind" he exclaimed reproachfully. "Y'r just foolin me." Nevertheless he hurried to the door, ready for instant flight.

"Don't see why you're so 'fraid of pa," she observed, leaning over the rail to pat the restive pony. "People say pa on me are as like as two peas."

"Didn't he ever tell you 'bout last election day down at Westcenter?"

"Not a word," was the untruthful reply.

"Well," began Dave, seating himself on the steps, "this county's the evenest one in the state, an' it's a mighty even state. So last year the committee happened along with some money an says, Dave, put this here stuff where you think it'll do some good.' Well, 'lection day y'r pa drove into Westcenter an hitched right in front of the polls. Then, quietlike, I made him an offer to put 'er in for Judkins."

"IT SURE IS MONEY."

"An then he said things!"

"Oh, I guess he did, an'—

"An hit y'on a jolt between the eyes, an you didn't come to till they had carried you into the drug story'—

"See here, 'Melia, I reckon you lied when you told me'—

"An when you come to pa says, 'If I ever catch you hangin round my ranch again, I'll take a horsewhip to you' Didn't he?"

"Yes, he did," acknowledged Dave with commendable candor. "An here I am hangin."

"Yes," repeated Amelia, "here you are a-hangin. What brought you away out here anyhow?"

"Yon," was the brief, but gallant response.

"Ah, go on!" retorted Amelia, with a derisive sniff.

There was silence for a moment, during which time Dave scraped the accumulation of dried mud from his boots with the blade of his knife and Amelia gazed out over the dead level prairie.

"Now, Dave," she said at last "I know just as well as I'm standin here that you've come for somethin else. Why don't you act white an tell me?"

"Well," he began, clearing his throat as if for a great effort, "I heard in town that there was a fellow comin out tomorrow to break in his dogs on sage hens—goin to put up here at the ranch."

"Well?"

"I got to thinkin"—

"Did he send you ont here to break the way for him?" inquired Amelia.

"No, he didn't—blast him! But I thought I'd just come an warn you not to have anything to do with him."

"Why, ie he so awful good lookin?" asked Amelia, with a provoking show of interest.

With an exclamation of anger Dave sprang up and mounted his pony.

"Don't go," said Amelia, and she straightway fell to laughing.

"Never mind; you'll be sorry!" shouted Dave as he looked back from the road.

The day following Dave's visit a young men in hunting garb arrived at the ranch and made arrangements with Miss Barnhill for a week's lodging. The stranger made a very favorable impression, for his dogs were of the finest breed and his gunsof the latest pattern. He and Jim spent the entire evening in instructing him as to the very best place to find big birds, and even the old man warmed up to the point of relating some of his personal adventures in the "airly days."

As a matter of fact, old man Barnhill and his sons would have killed nothing better than to accompany their guest on his first day's hunting, but by some oversight that gentlemenly young man failed to express a desire that they should do so.

When he returned just before dusk, the boys grinned openly at the limited amount of game which he produced from the yawning pockets of his canvas coat. Four sage hens and a snipe constituted the day's kill, which was certainly not one to grow reminiscent over.

While the men gathered around the stove to smoke and talk politics Amelia set about preparing the birds for supper.

"Well, 'pon my word!" she suddenly cried. "Will you look at that!"

In one hand she held the recently severed crop of a bird and in the other a gold dollar.

"Tepar to die if I didn't just cut it

"Lordy, Lordy!" quavered the old man excitedly.

"Why, pa," remonstrated Amelia. "that's swearin!" And without wasting further words she attacked another of the sage hens.

"Blest if them ain't more comfortin 'an Elijah's ravens," laughed Ike.

By the time the third and fourth sage hens had each produced one gold dollar the emotions of the Barnhills and their guest were too deep for words. They sat gazing at the remains and trying to think it all out.

At bedtime the old man lighted a candle and left the room.

"Well, I be durn!" he kept muttering to himself as he climbed the ladder which led up to the loft. "It's nothin short of a miracle!"

The Barnhills were early risers, but before they opened their eyes the following morning the fortunate hunter had left for his day's sport.

"I don't know as anybody can blame him," growled Jim as he started on his round of morning chores; "only I'd like to take a few cracks at them gold bird birds too."

And it was in very much the same strain that the other members of the Barnhill family communed with themselves.

Late that night the hunter returned to the ranch. Drawing a chair up before the fire, he sat down and fell to studying his boots in moody silence.

"Didn't you hit nothin?" queried Ike, though he could see the bulging game pockets.

Without replying directly the stranger threw out six large birds and laid them upon the table.

"Peel 'em," he suggested in a husky voice.

This time Amelia was assisted in her work by the old man and the two boys, and the kitchen soon bore the marks of the terrible carnage. There was little said, but they all worked with extreme energy, while great beads of perspiration stood out on the old man's forehead.

They thought themselves prepared for the result, yet with the disclosure of each successive gold dollar they cried out in amazement. The old man wiped his face on his sleeve and swore joyously, while Amelia was too much occupied to check him.

"Look here, stranger," he at last faltered as he dragged his guest around in front porch, "I want to make you a proposition! Let's all blaze away tomorrow an divide whatever we get!"

The stranger sighed heavily. "Oh, if I only could!" he lamented. "But you see tomorrow is election day, and I am under oath to appear in Westcenter."

The old man said nothing further, but the light of avarice burned in his faded eyes.

"Dad like findin money," he mused. "I'm right glad he's goin."

"Jim," whispered Ike when they were all in bed that night, "I reckon we're goin to town tomorrow an put in on first votes."

Jim chuckled.

"I reckon we're goin to put some shot into them sage hens," he replied.

With the first tinge of dawn Jordan Barnhill and his two sons were gone from the ranch. Amelia preserved a discreet silence as she went about preparing the stranger's breakfast.

Later in the day the disappointed hunter gathered together his guns and bags—and gold dollars—and departed for Westcenter.

"Shall I remember you to Dave?" he inquired as he bade Amelia goodby.

"What do you know about Dave?" she demanded, with a sudden show of interest.

The stranger only shook his head and drove away.

Several weeks after the election Dave might have been seen approaching the Barnhill ranch with all the caution of an Indian scout in hostile country. Having convinced himself that there were no "town folks" about the place, he advanced to the front of the house and rapped.

"Well," said Amelia sharply, "do you want to die real sudden?"

"He ain't about, is he?" questioned Dave, with sudden solicitude.

"If you mean pa, he is flat on his back in bed. Blistered his feet huntin."

Dave repressed a grin with difficulty. "Heard about the 'lection?" he asked in a subdued tone.

"Yes Pa said everything had gone to the devil."

"We only swung the state by two majority," chuckled Dave. "If y'r pa an the boys had voted, we'd have lost the whole thing."

Amelia's eyes grew big, and a cloud of suspicion slowly spread over her face.

"Dave Dietz," she cried with sudden anger, "who was that young fool that was ahootin out here?"

Dave hung his head and looked foolish.

"Who was he?" persisted Amelia.

"Well, since the 'lection he's been the new governor's son. Did you think he was good lookin, 'Melia?"

Getting no response, Dave looked up and found Amelia in tears.

"Oh, we've been took in!" she sobbed. Then raising her voice she shouted, "Pa, pa, we've been took in, an that's gaines fool salted them birds just as sure as you're alive!"

From somewhere above there came a terrific explosion of profanity, and Dave made ready for flight.

"You'll be a dead man as soon as I tell pa that his party lost the state for want of three votes," declared Amelia, as Dave paused to call him right now."

With wonderful presence of mind Dave caught her in his arms and effectually silenced any further words.

"Don't say nothin," he whispered. "I'm goin to be made a deputy sheriff an then we can get married, even if the old man don't like me."

Amelia's sobs gradually died away, and her head came to rest on Dave's corduroy coat.

"I wouldn't 'a cared," said Amelia a little later, "if only we hadn't 'a' been so took in on them sage hens an gold dollars."

SHELLED THE TOWN

ADMIRAL DEWEY'S GUNBOATS GET ACTION ON CALOOCAN,

Destroying Outskirts—Insurgents in That Vicinity Had Attacked Americans While Reconnoitering—Kansas Company Suffers—Lieutenant and One Private Killed, and Six Others Members Wounded, Penetrated the Heart of the City but Were Forced to Withdraw.

MANILA, Feb. 8.—Lieutenant Alford, Company I, Twentieth Kansas infantry, and a private of that company were killed and six other members of the regiment were wounded near Caloocan while reconnoitering. The party was in a jungle when it was attacked by the enemy.

Two companies of the Kansas regiment were sent to the relief of their comrades and drove the Filipinos into Caloocan, penetrating to the very heart of the town. Meanwhile the gunboats shelled the outskirts.

General Otis finally recalled the troops, but the natives, misunderstanding the retreat, failed to take advantage of it. The outskirts of the town were burned.

ANOTHER HOT SKIRMISH.

Nebraskans Lose One Man Killed and Three Wounded.

MANILA, Feb. 8.—10:30 a. m.—Late Monday, General Hale's brigade advanced and took the waterworks at Singalon. Four companies of the Nebraska regiment and a part of the Utah battery, with two field guns and two Hotchkiss guns, met the enemy on the hill, a half mile ont, and a sharp engagement took place, in which the Nebraskans lost one dead and three wounded.

Dr. Young, formerly quartermaster sergeant in the Third artillery, was wounded, captured and brutally murdered, and his body, when recovered, was found to have been horribly mutilated. The Filipinos were driven back, retiring in bad order and carrying with them the valves and heads of the steam chest and cylinder of the pumping machinery.

General Ovenshire's brigade advanced and took Barnaaque, capturing two field guns. They met with no opposition.

General McArthur's division advanced beyond Gagalangin, without loss, the enemy retreating upon Caloocan.

The Americans now have steam car line to Malabon and 600 marines, with four Maxims have been landed from the fleet on the beach, north of the city.

BURIED FIVE HUNDRED.

General Otis Gives Some Idea of the Filipino Losses.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The war department received the following dispatch from General Otis:

Manila, Feb. 8.—Adjutant General, Washington: The insurgent army concentrated around Manila, from Luzon provinces, numbering over 40,000, possessing several quick-firing and Krupp field guns. Good portion of enemy armed with Mansere latest pattern. Two Krupp and great many rifles captured. Insurgents fired great quantity of ammunition. Quite a number of Spanish soldiers in insurgent service who served artillery. Insurgents constructed strong intrenchments near our lines, mostly in bamboo thickets. These our men charged, killing or capturing many of the enemy. Our casualties probably aggregate 250. Full reports today. Casualties of insurgents very heavy. Have buried some 500 of their dead and hold 500 prisoners. Their loss in killed, wounded and captured probably 4,000. Took waterworks pumping station yesterday, six miles ont. Considerable skirmishing with enemy, who made no stand. Pumps damaged. Will be working in a week. Have a number of confederates up in city which furnish good water. Troops in excellent spirits. Quiet prevails.

TOTAL CASUALTIES.

Americans at Manila Lost 60 Killed and 146 Wounded.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The total casualties in the Manila engagement was 192. Of these 49 were officers and men killed and 143 wounded.

MASTERS OF SITUATION.

Americans Now in Complete Control at Manila.

MANILA, Feb. 8.—3:43 p. m.—The Americans as the dispatch is sent, are in complete control of the situation within a radius of nine miles of Manila. Their lines, extending to Malabon, on the north and to Paranaque on the south, are fully twenty-five miles long.

While a few detached bodies of the enemy offer desultory opposition, the main body of the rebels is in full retreat and utterly routed.

Of the bodies of troops originally drawn up in battle array against the Americans, fully one-third are already incapacitated and the others are scattered in every direction.

The terrible loss of the Filipinos may be explained from the fact that sixteen of them were buried in one rice field on Monday, near Passa, and that eighty-seven were interred between Paco and Santana.

Gunboat Did Terrible Work.

A converted river gunboat did terrible execution among the rebels, sweeping both banks of the river with her Gatling guns and her heavier battery. Hundreds of Filipinos undoubtedly crawled into the cane-brakes and died there.

The Americans are working nobly in their efforts to find the wounded and are bringing hundreds of suffering rebels to the hospitals for treatment. The natives are unable to understand the humane motives which prompt the victors to succor the wounded of the enemy.

The correspondent of the Associated Press is informed that members of the hospital corps have made the startling discovery that there are several women, in male dress and with hair cropped, among the dead.

The first shot from the American sentry was evidently accepted as a prearranged signal, for it was followed almost immediately by a terrific fusilade along the entire Filipino line on the north side of the Pasig river.

The American outposts returned the fire with such vigor that the Filipino fire was checked until the arrival of reinforcements.

At 10 o'clock the firing was resumed, the American firing line consisting of the Third artillery, the Kansas, South Dakota, Colorado and Montana regiments, the Pennsylvanians, the Nebraskans, the Utah battery, the Idahos, the Washingtons, the Californians, the Fourth cavalry, North Dakota volunteers, Sixth artillery and Fourteenth infantry.

Concentrate Their Forces.

The Filipinos concentrated their forces at three points, Caloocan, Santa Mesa and Gulingalan, and maintained an intermittent fusilade for some hours. They brought artillery into action at Gulingalan at 10:30, but only one gun annoyed the Americans to any appreciable extent, a howitzer on the road beyond Santa Mesa. The Third artillery silenced the Gulingalan battery by firing two guns simultaneously, which was followed immediately by volleys from the infantry.

About midnight there was a lull in the firing, lasting until 3:45 a. m., when the whole Filipino line reopened fire. The Americans poured a terrific fire into the darkness for 20 minutes, and then there was another lull until daylight, when the Americans generally advanced.

Shelled by the Charleston and Concord.

During the night, in response to Admiral Dewey's signals flashed across from Cavite, the United States cruiser Charleston and the gunboat Concord, stationed at Malatabon, ponred a deadly fire from their secondary batteries into the Filipino line at Caloocan.

After daylight the United States double-turret sausging monitor Monadnock opened fire off Malate and kept shelling the Filipino' left flank, while the other vessels shelled the right flank for several hours.

By 1 o'clock the Americans had apparently completely routed the enemy and had taken the villages of Paluwpong, Santa Mesa, Paco, Santana, San Pedro, Macorta, Pandacan and Pasai, had destroyed hundreds of native huts and had secured possession of the water works reservoirs, a distance of over six miles.

WILL SEIZE ILOILO.

Forward Movement on That Town Now Probable.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—A forward movement is probable at Iloilo, where General Miller has been for weeks lying in front of the town in his transports. He has never had any doubt of his ability to take the place whenever he got the word, but there has been a restraining influence from Washington based in part on the hope that the insurgents could be brought to a peaceful retirement from the town and apprehension that an effort to force a larding might result in serious injury to foreign interests. Now, however, it is felt that the latter are perhaps more in jeopardy from a continuance of the existing state of affairs than they would be through a rapid seizure of the town.

PROSECUTED WITH VIGOR.

Administration Decides on No Let-Up Against the Filipinos.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—It is understood that the campaign against the Philippine islands insurgents is to be prosecuted with vigor. The question was fully discussed at the cabinet meeting, and the conclusion was reached that before permanent peace or security to life and property could be secured, Aguinaldo's forces must be made to lay down their arms, and it is expected that General Otis, in co-operation with Admiral Dewey, will push forward at once and give the insurgents no chance to recover from the defeat of last Sunday. So far no can be learned, no positive instructions have yet been cabled to our commanders at Manila, but it is the expressions of the members of the administration, presumably based on cabled advices from Manila, that this course will be pursued. Iloilo is to be occupied at once by the American naval forces, and it is expected that General Otis will move immediately on Malaloc, the insurgent capital, and capture or disperse the so-called Filipino government. The more closely the insurgents are pressed and the more vigorous and determined the campaign, it is said, the sooner may we expect peace.

CANNOT BE DISLODGED.

Filipinos Claim Aguinaldo Can Hold All Suit Manila.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The president of the European Filipino junta, in an interview, said:

"The Filipinos will now have to retire to the mountains of San Mateo and Boso-Boso, which, as they are only an hour's distance, command the capital and it will be impossible to dislodge them from there.

"The whole Filipino strength will now be devoted to the protection of the country outside of Manila, as Aguinaldo is aware that even if he captured the city he could not hold it with American warships in the bay.

"The Americans will have to depend for their food supply on shipments from abroad, as the insurgents will effectually cut off the supplies from the interior."

ONE VOTE TO SPARE

PEACE TREATY RATIFIED BY A NARROW MARGIN.

Vote Taken in Executive Session Amid the Most Intense Interest—The President Gratified—Expressed Satisfaction at the Result When the Decision—Secretary Hay Anticipates No Obstacles in the Spanish Parliament.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The treaty of peace negotiated between the commissioners of the United States and Spain at Paris has been ratified by the United States senate, the vote being 57 ayes to 27 nays, or one vote more than two-thirds majority necessary to secure senatorial concurrence in a treaty document.

The vote was taken in executive session and until the injunction of secrecy was removed the result was supposed to be private, but the vice president had no more than announced the figures than senators rushed out of every door leading from the senate chamber, declaring that the treaty had been ratified. Some made the mistake of stating that there were three votes to spare. There was in fact only the balloting resulting 57 ayes to 27 nays. No vote has been taken in the senate since that on the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law that has been followed with as close interest as was the vote on the treaty. This anxiety was due not only to the magnitude of the question at issue but to the uncertainty which attended the matter up to the last moment. Only the select few knew how Senators McEnery of Louisiana and Jones of Nevada would vote half an hour before their votes were cast.

One Vote More Than Was Necessary,

In advance of the voting speeches were made by Senators Rèss, Money and Fairbanks. Senator Stewart, who had just arrived from his successful campaign in Nevada for re-election, announced informally that in his entire trip across the continent he had not encountered one man who was opposed to the ratification of the treaty.

Promptly at Three O'clock

the vice president interrupted Senator Money, who was speaking, to announce that the time had arrived for a vote. But one amendment was offered, that proposed by Senator Vest, placing the Philippines on the same footing as Cuba in the treaty. In the temporary absence of Mr. Vest it was presented by Mr. Gorman. This amendment was defeated. The vote on the treaty itself was then taken, Messrs. McLaurin, McEnery and Jones of Nevada explaining their votes.

On the motion of Senator Davis it was then ordered that the yeas and nays be made public and soon afterwards the doors were reopened and the senate proceeded with legislative business, attempting to pass the McEnery declaratory resolution as per the promise to the senator. The vote on the treaty was as follows:

How the Senators Lined Up.

Yeas—Aldrich, Allen, Allison, Baker, Burrows, Butler, Carter, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Cullom, Davis, Deboe, Elkins, Fairbanks, Faulkner, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Gray, Hanna, Hansbrough, Harris, Hawley, Jones (Nev.), Kenny, Kyle, Lindsay, Lodge, McBridge, McEnery, McLaurin, McMillan, Mantle, Mason, Morgan, Nelson, Penrose, Perkins, Pettus, Platt (Conn.), Platt (N. Y.), Pritchard, Quay, Ross, Sewell, Shoup, Simon, Spooner, Thurston, Wolcott—57.

Nays—Bacon, Bate, Berry, Caffery, Chilton, Cockrell, Daniel, Gorman, Hale, Heitfeld, Hoar, Jones (Ark.), Mallory, Martin, Mills, Mitchell, Money, Murphy, Pasco, Pettigrew, Rawlins, Rench, Smith, Tillman, Turly, Turner, Vest—27.

General Otis Hears the News.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.— When the news of the ratification of the peace treaty reached the president at his direction it was cabled to General Otis at Manila, who promptly replied acknowledging the receipt of the message containing the information.

Keep an Eye on Agoncillo.

MONTREAL, Feb. 7.—Agoncillo and his secretary are being watched by two strangers, supposed to be United States secret service men. One of them shadowed Marti, the secretary, who went out for a drive, and the other remained in the hotel to watch Agoncillo, who busied himself with tearing up a number of documents.

EAGAN IS SENTENCED.

President Commutes the Verdict of Dismissal to Suspension.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The president has caused to be promulgated the sentence in the case of General Charles P. Eagan. The countermartial sentence was dismissal from the service and the president has commuted this to six years suspension from duty, which covers the remainder of the time prior to General Eagan's retirement in January, 1903. The sentence of suspension, according to the legal officers of the department, does not deprive General Eagan of any part of his pay, but as the sentence reads "without rank and duty," he loses his allowances which include quarters, rations and fuel and his hospital allowance. This is quite a large financial item.

CITY FULL OF ARMED MEN.

Evident Aguinaldo Had Many Allies Inside Manila.

MANILA, Feb. 8.—There are many indications that Manila is full of sleepers who had intended to co-operate with Aguinaldo. The police are continually capturing men and women with weapons concealed in their clothing. The vigilance of the authorities in this respect is highly reassuring.

RIOTOUS SOLDIERS.

Fifteenth Minnesota Volunteers Would Avenge a Comrade's Death.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Feb. 6.—This has been a day of wild excitement in and around Augusta. The trouble arose over the killing of Dennis O'Connell, Company F, Fifteenth Minnesota, by Brown Hadley, a hackeyeer. The difficulty began, it is said, over profane language used in the hearing of Hadley's wife. Many of the soldiers of the Fifteenth Minnesota were vengeful, and shortly after breakfast about 160 of the men made plans for the capture of the murderer. The enlisted men had no ball cartridges for their rifles, but going to the regimental company store they took pickaxes and broke open the ammunition cases, each man taking about 80 rounds of ammunition. The news soon reached General Lee, the commander of the First division of the Second army corps, and he

Ordered Out the Third Cavalry,

the Tenth Ohio and Thirty-fifth Michigan regiments. The men were deployed as skirmishers and the woods in the vicinity of the camp were scoured thoroughly. It was some time before any of the men who were breaking away could be found, but about 10:30 Troop A, under command of Lieutenant Hawkins, found the entire lot, about 60 men, huddled together.

They were taken to division headquarters and put under guard. General Sumner issued orders that all passes should be confiscated and that no more be issued. The ringleaders were put in irons. The military authorities refuse to give the names of the men under arrest.

Hadley gave himself up to the authorities and was taken to the Atlanta jail.

ACCEPTS THE $3,000,000.

Gomez Will Assist in the Reconstruction of Cuba.

REMEDIOS, Cuba, via Havana, Feb. 8.—General Gomez, the commander-in-chief of the Cuban army, has placed himself at my disposition as an active ally of the United States government in the work of reconstruction in Cuba. As a result of the conference which R. P. Porter, the special commissioner of President McKinley, has had with General Gomez, the latter called to President McKinley assuring him of his co-operation in disbanding the Cuban soldiers and accepting the $3,000,000 appropriated by congress for enabling them to return to their homes. General Gomez also telegraphed to Major General Brooke saying he would accept the latter's invitation to go to Havana.

The success of Mr. Porter's mission greatly simplifies the return of the people to the pursuit of peace.

In view of General Gomez's assumed hostility toward the United States, Mr. Porter came here clothed with absolute authority and the force of public opinion was practically a verbal ultimatum. Had it not been accepted, no more ultimatums would have been sent.

Anti-Quay Mass Meeting.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Feb. 8.—An unusual incident of a senatorial contest was the anti-Quay mass meeting held in the courthouse last night. The following resolution was adopted as the sense of the meeting: "That no man guilty of arrest and awaiting trial for conspiracy to misuse state funds is a fit person to represent this great commonwealth in the United States senate."

Wanted Her Money's Worth.

Bridget Rafferty had served the best years of her life as a cook, and now that she was nearly "forty-seven" and an operation became necessary she naughtily declined to go to a ward, but took one of the best rooms in the house. The operation was successful, but the patient was allowed very little food. During her convalescence she made frequent use of the electric bell at her bed. The nurse would fly to her, to be greeted with some trifling question or the remark, "I only wanted to know if you were there."

As each frequent use of her bell suggested to the matron on that flour that the nurse was neglecting her patient, the matron remonstrated, and received the following unique explanation:

"Well, you see, miss, here I am paying $30 a week, and I'm not seeing anything. I'm not hearing anything, and I'm not getting anything. So I just ring the bell to get my money's worth, and, anyways, I enjoy hearing it ring."—San Francisco Argonaut.

No Diamonds For Her.

Here is a story from The Bookman, told by Rudyard Kipling. His father, John Kipling, went to pay a visit to an Indian rajah who was about to bring home a queen. The elder Kipling had been engaged in the decorations of the palace, and its owner showed him the gifts of stuffs and perfumes he had procured for his coming queen. The rajah also sent for his jewel caskets and asked Mr. Kipling to assist him in selecting some to be taken as presents to the bride. The selection was a pleasure. Finally he lifted a wonderful diamond, one of the choicest gems in the collection, and said: "You should send this. No woman could refuse it." The rajah looked on, caught it and held it jealously to his breast, then, slowly replacing it in the casket, answered, "Nay, such gems be not for women."

They Were New.

"Now, George, quit pulling my ear!"

"It's my ear now, sweet! Going to pull it all I please!"

This is why the hard featured passenger with the iron gray chin beard, who had been sitting in the seat behind a young man in a new black broadcloth suit and a young woman in a gray silk traveling dress, got up hastily and went forward into the smoking car.—Chicago Tribune.

OVERFLOWS DESTROY

Crops of 1896 and 1897 in Certain Localities a Total Failure.

COUNTIES CAN'T BUILD DITCHES

Cost of Drainage a Trifle as Compared with the Benefits.

Editor Polk County Journal:

Your article in the issue of the JOURNAL of the first inst. relative to the drainage of the Red River valley brings up for consideration a question concerning the development of the resources of this part of the state, which is probably of much greater importance than many of your readers are apt to place upon it. The effects of the floods which occurred in May and June in 1896 and the floods of July and August of 1897 should not soon be forgotten.

In 1896 owing to the unusual quantities of flood water which at times transforms this section of the country into a vast lake, thousands of acres of the most fertile land could not be cultivated or seeded, the result of which was that the wheat acreage of the Red River valley was reduced nearly one-third from what was under cultivation in the year 1895 and a great deal of wheat seeded, (owing to the condition of the ground and the lateness of the season when the seeding was done) was not worth harvesting. In 1897 floods, caused by excessive rains in July and August, reached their highest stage about the tenth of August. At this time the grain was all nicely headed out, and it was not an uncommon sight to behold vast fields of wheat almost submerged. The result was that many fields of grain were either crushed down by the flood water or the ground was left in such a condition that it was impossible to harvest. Much of the wheat was left standing. It was a notable fact that in localities where ditches had been constructed, little if any damage was done. The water in these instances receded rapidly and in a very few days little trace of the flood was left. It is estimated that this one flood cost the farmers of Norman county not less than $100,000. In the spring of 1896 when the floods had subsided sufficiently to allow cultivation on the higher lands, and lands near where ditches had been constructed the lands in localities where no such waterways had been provided could not be gotten on to for two or three weeks until it was too late in the season to seed and have any assurance that the grain would ever mature.

It might be said that it would be a good investment for the farmers to construct the necessary ditches required to drain the overflowed lands of the Red River valley, and pay for the same by issuing ditch bonds as provided in drainage laws enacted in 1881. It would undoubtedly be a good undertaking considering the question from a business standpoint, but the plan is not practicable. In order to carry out the plan of drainage as decided upon by the Red River drainage commission of 1886 it is necessary first to construct outlet ditches and open up the closed waterways, (for which purpose the state received the state swamp land grant from the Federal government in the year 1858.) To undertake to construct these large outlet ditches and open these waterways which must necessarily be expensive, and assess the cost of the same to the lands benefited, and assess these same lands over again for the construction of supplemental ditches leading into the outlet ditches would be contrary to the spirit of the drainage law and an injustice to land owners so assessed.

Norman county furnishes a good example of the impracticability of undertaking to carry out the whole plans of drainage in this county. Here it will be necessary to improve and straighten the channel of Wild Rice river in order to furnish an outlet sufficient for proposed connecting waterways.

The rapid development of the township of Scandia, Polk county is good evidence of what can be accomplished in this county by ditching. A few years ago this whole township was a veritable duck pond. There was scarcely an acre of dry land in the township. Since the construction of the Sand Hill River ditch there has been a remarkable change. The township is becoming dotted all over with farm buildings and cultivated fields. The waters of the Sand Hill river which used to spread over this whole township are now all confined to one channel—the Sand Hill river ditch, and every acre of land in the township has become productive. It would not be unreasonable to predict that inside of ten years this township will be one of the richest townships in the county.

In the northwestern part of Polk county where considerable ditching has been done by the county the farmers are taking hold with renewed courage, feeling assured that what they sow they may reap, and that the destruction of their crops by floods has become a thing of the past. The result is that the amount of land under cultivation has materially increased and the coming season will be notable for the increased acreage that will be under cultivation.

The same good results from ditching are experienced in the other counties in the valley. The southwestern part of Marshall county, which a few years ago was valuable only as hay land, is since the construction of the state ditch there rapidly assuming a different appearance. The land in this part of the county which consists of a rich vegetable mold and black loam is now being cultivated and is producing the kind of crops, unequalled in any other part of the county.

In fact I cannot recall a single case in the whole Red River valley where the cost of constructing the necessary drainage ditches has been but a trifle compared with the benefits that must necessarily result. This work should not abate nor slacken, but should be encouraged by every resident of the state, and when the drainage of all of the overflowed lands of the state shall have been accomplished, Minnesota will occupy first place in the sisterhood of states, which the hand of nature has destined that she should.

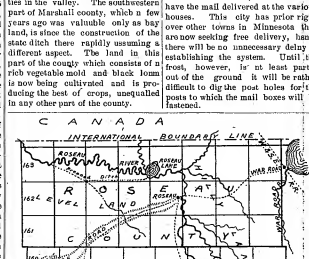
GEORGE A. RALPH.

Free Delivery.

Special Agent Thiele of the post office department was in the city last Saturday to see what preliminary steps the council had taken with a view to the introduction of free delivery. He met the council in the City hall and learned that the city was now doing all that the post office department demanded should be done before a free delivery system is instituted. Mr. Thiele reported to Washington the situation and he will return here as soon as the houses are numbered and the street signs up.

This will probably not be before the end of three weeks. The postoffice department will then be notified that all is in readiness here and forthwith, or at least in a short time, Crookston will have the mail delivered at the various houses.

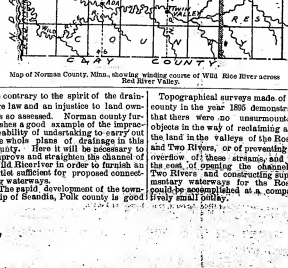
This city has prior right over other towns in Minnesota that are now seeking free delivery, hence there will be no unnecessary delay in establishing the system. Until the fresh, however, is at least partly out of the ground it will be rather difficult to dig the post holes for the posts to which the mail boxes will be fastened.



Map of Roseau County, Minn., showing winding curve of Roseau River, west of Lake, which causes the overflow of Roseau River.

Roseau county, which has been less fortunate than the other counties in the valley, not having had the benefit of any of the drainage propositions in such in need of ditches, and in my opinion the development of this county will be very much retarded unless artificial waterways are provided, which will relive existing conditions in the western part of the county. The streams in the eastern part of the county are generally swift and nearly all empty their waters into the Roseau river. The Roseau river proper from Roseau lake westward to where it crosses the international boundary line is a slow, tortous stream, winding back and forth through the valley, making the distance of the river from the lake to the boundary line, fully three times as great as in a direct line.

Two Rivers, the outlet for the southwestern part of the county, has become choked up from the accumulation of the rank growth of vegetation which prevail along its banks and for the distance of about ten miles the channel is entirely lost, resulting in the overflow of a vast area of rich lands along either side of the original channel.



Map of Norman County, Minn., showing winding course of Wild Rice River across Red River Valley.

Topographical surveys made of this county in the year 1895 demonstrated that there were no insurmountable objects in the way of reclaiming all of the land in the valleys of the Roseau and Two Rivers, or of preventing the overflow of these streams, and that the cost of opening the channel of Two Rivers and constructing supplementary waterways for the Roseau could be accomplished at a comparatively small outlay.

SHARE STATE AID.

Red River Valley Ought to Receive a Large Quota for Drainage.

DEVELOP NORTHERN PART.

Southern Portion of State Has Heretofore Received Most of the Appropriations.

The settlers in the Red River valley are asking the present legislature to appropriate money with which large outlet ditches may be constructed, that valuable land in the valley may be reclaimed. The JOURNAL has already pointed out several cogent reasons why this grant should be made. The fact that the state has received money from the sale of swamp land which money the general government intended should be used to reclaim other swamp land; that the crops on thousands of acres will be made sure in case the present drainage system is completed—on this point T. A. Hoverstad, superintendent of the Crookston Experimental station says: "I am confident that the loss in the crops of '96 and '97 would more than pay for the drainage of the whole valley." That this expenditure on the part of the state will be returned with large interest; that some of the state ditches already dug out are partly useless and will remain so till the work is finished; that extensive tracts of most fertile land will thus be reclaimed; that the several counties though willing to go on with their part of the work are unable to do it till the state constructs the large outlet ditches, etc.

But there is one reason that has not as yet been particularly emphasized and that is that the northern part of the state has received less money from the state government than the southern part has. It is not intended to complain of this fact but to call it to the attention of the representatives from the south section. The southern part unsettled first and naturally received the more attention, the northern part only the last years, comparatively speaking, has begun to forge ahead and now the people up here are asking that they be helped, and as the people in the southern part have been. State institutions are scattered all over that part of the state, three magnificent ones at Faribault, one at Owatonna, Rochester and St. Peter have asylums, the capitol of the state is down there with the state buildings, the state university is at Minneapolis, ad infinit am. All this is alright and the north is glad of it and has indirectly benefited by it, but they now direct benefit is asked and as "turn about is fair play" it is only right that money be appropriated to improve this farming territory.

It is a case too where a small grant will give no relief. A large sum is asked and in asking for such a sum the people here disclaim all relationship with that species of animal that thirty hundred years ago rushed headlong down a precipice in the land of Palestine and perished in the sea. They see their needs clearly and they ask the legislature to look at this matter from a business standpoint. They see also that there is the northern part of the state that now needs to have practical attention paid to it and they ask the legislators to give them their just deserts.

CROOKSTON EXPERIMENT FARM.

Legislature Considers Advisability of Making It a Grant.

The JOURNAL published last week the substance of an address on the future of Red River Valley Farming, delivered by Prof. T. A. Hoverstad at St. Paul. In this article were given some of the results of the experiments made at the Experimental Station at Crookston and those were such as to lend one to the conclusion that the more this work is carried on the better for the farming community. Scientific farming is the fashion that is going to pay, but the majority of farmers cannot afford to experiment to any great extent, hence this work must be done at the Experimental Farms. There is now before the legislature a bill appropriating some money to the Crookston Experimental Station. This is a companion measure, as it were, to the drainage bill, as after the land is ready for cultivation it is necessary to know how best to cultivate it. A prosperous farming community upholds the nation. Hence any money spent to improve the condition of the tillers of the soil has a far reaching influence.

The appropriation for the Experiment Station ought to pass.

A PACK OF WOLVES.

A Log-scaler in Aitkin County Severely Torn But Finally Rescued.

Halvor Johnson, a logscaler from the Williams camp on Pine river, Aitkin county, had a lively encounter with a pack of wolves near Lake Washburn and had not a party of rescuers reached him just when they did the hungry animals would soon have made short work of him. He was found on the top of a pile of logs with his scaling rule in his hands. He had defended himself with the scaling rule until completely surrounded and snapped just from all sides by the wolves. His legs are covered with bites and tears and there are some severe slashes in the upper parts of his body which indicate that he must have been hard pressed when succor came.

LINCOLN BANQUET.

Crookston and Vicinity Do Honor To One of America's Greatest Men.

Chosen for large designs, he had the art
Of winning with his humour, and he won
Straight to his aim, which was the human heart;
Wise, too, for what he could not break he bent.
Upon his back a more than Atlas load—
The burden of the Commonwealth—he took,
He stooped, and rose up to it though the road
Shot suddenly down steep, as a rift disclosed.
Hold, warriors, statesmen, kings! All now give place
To this dear benefactor of the human race.
—STEDMAN.

Lincoln was such a great man that the celebration of the anniversary of his birthday could hardly fail to be a success, and such indeed was the result of the banquet at Hotel Crookston last Monday night, notwithstanding the fact that the speakers from abroad did not appear. Early in the day Mr. Bloom received a telegram from J. Adam Bede saying that he would not be able to be here, and one also from Senator Ryder to the effect that the senators from St. Paul and Minneapolis had failed to connect and hence none of them would be here. Local talent, however, supplied the deficiency and Crookston is not lacking in eloquent speakers.

The Crookston band gave a free concert in the hotel lobby, after which the dining room doors were thrown open and about 130 men passed in and took their seats. After the feast prepared by Messrs. Scott and Lyon had been disposed of, there was a flow of reason and eloquence. Mayor Brown introduced Halvor Steenerson as toastmaster. After some introductory remarks by Mr. Steenerson toasts were responded to by Rev. Mr. Green, J. E. O'Brien, Attorney Geo. Finlayson, Judge Montague, L. E. Gossman, Nat Campbell, E. B. Child and J. W. Wheeler. It was the sense of the meeting that just as the American people had, thirty odd years ago, under the inspiring leadership of Abraham Lincoln, entered upon a broader policy in their treatment of many millions within their own borders, so now the United States, with William McKinley as their standard bearer, ought to "take up the white man's burden" and for humanity's sake, not commercial reasons, develop our new possessions in the Pacific.

A quartet consisting of Messrs. Durand, Lanctot, Mitchell and Mix sang several selections at different times in the evening and were heartily encored.

Encourage the Farmers.

Speaking of the question of an appropriation for Drainage in the Red River valley the Hutchinson Times says: The people of our state owe more than a debt of gratitude to the men who have attempted the development of the rich semi-humus region of the Red River. Appropriations for increased normal school facilities should wait until this region of exhaustless wealth and men made surely prosperous by proper drainage. A valley as rich in agricultural possibilities as the valley of the Nile should be made a source of income to the state and wealth and comfort to those who till the soil. A liberal drainage appropriation is simply money loaned. It isn't charity and will prove a wise and paying investment. Cut down the fund for summer training schools; reduce the salaries of state officers; increase the taxes of corporations; consolidate and reduce the expenses of various state boards; shorten the sessions of the legislature and encourage the men who are endeavoring to farm the sloughs and quagmires of our western counties and by this encouragement build up the state.

Greater America—The New Pacific Colonies.

The JOURNAL has received a booklet entitled "Greater America," published by the passenger department of the Great Northern railway. It contains a description of the new Pacific colonies of the United States and how to reach them. The idea is to call attention to the great possibilities of trade with these lands and how the Northwest and the Pacific coast may be benefited. "If we take advantage, now, of the immensely important opportunity presented to us, then the tide of oriental commerce that is destined soon to assume vast proportions can be directed to the west coast of the United States, and, as a natural consequence, the Northwest will enter upon an era of prosperity that will occupy its vacant lands, fill its towns and cities with busy merchants and darken the western skies with the smoke of its factories and steamships."

IN SOCIETY CIRCLES.

Ante-Lenten Season Filled with Brilliant Social Events.

THE DANCE IS THE FAVORITE

Crookston's Beauty and Chivalry Glide Gracefully over Waxed Floors.

Owing to the fact that the Lenten season was drawing near society functions were very much in evidence during the week preceding yesterday, Ash Wednesday.

A brilliant society affair occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Turner. This party was given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Thorson of Seattle, who are visiting in the city. Cards were the entertainment. Riggs' orchestra discovered sweet music which added much to the pleasures of the evening.

Tuesday evening a unique social and entertainment took place at the G. A. R. hall under the auspices of the Worth While club. A very tasty lunch was served to all the guests, but the feature of the evening was the reveries of a batchelor. Mr. Will Martin represented this somewhat forlorn hat at the same time very fastidious individual. As he communed with himself about the various charms of the maidens whom he had met, these young ladies, one by one, were presented to the audience from behind a thin veil. The gowns of the ladies were very handsome, not to say anything of the ladies themselves, but Will rejected them all.

Friday night there were two swell dances. One at the lodge rooms of the Modern Woodmen, the other at the Columbia Club rooms. At the former there was a large turnout and it was indeed a very enjoyable affair. Riggs' orchestra furnished the music to which many a foot beat time. The Columbia Club promenade was a full dress affair, the costumes of the ladies being particularly stylish and becoming. The German and the cake walk were special features of the evening. In the latter the prize cake was won by Miss Mary Montague and Mr. Swenson.

Saturday evening mirth and music made many merry at the lodge rooms of the Commercial Travelers. Those men of the grip who were unable to be present become very envious when their more fortunate brethren tell their tale of joy. Prof. Joliot fingered his harp and sings in such a manner as to delight all his listeners.

A Valentine social was the attraction at the Baptist church last Tuesday evening for the young people of the old people too. The program consisted of piano solos by Miss Vienna Sargent and Miss Nellie Nelson, solo by Miss McIntyre and Mrs. Nelson, vocal solo by Miss Alice LaDue, guitar music by Misses Vienna Sargent, Louise Smith and Lela Grieve, a short address by the pastor Mr. Poole, and a piano duet by Misses Lucile Pierce and Nettie Gleason. After the program was given the valentine feature of the evening came. The young men brought valentines—handsome ones—wrote the names on them, the valentines were put in a grab bag and the young ladies drew their luck. Delicious refreshments were served and altogether a delightful evening was spent by all.

Everyone always enjoys himself at the dances given by the firemen and last Tuesday was no exception, save that the time there was spent perhaps a little more pleasantly than it usually is if that were possible. They attended in a body, still the floor was not so crowded but that the dancing could be done easily and gracefully. Prof. Riggs' orchestra furnished the music and such music that one could not help but dance well. The firemen are royal entertainers and deserve the patronage which they always receive.

Prices of Binding Twine.

At a meeting of the board of prison managers last week prices for binding twine were fixed at 7¾ cents per pound for mixed twine and 8 cents per pound for pure manila. The orders coming under the prices dictated by the board must be from farmers and the time will be limited to May 1, after which date the board reserves the right to dispose of the twine to dealers if it proves necessary.

STATE LEGISLATURE

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 8.

The Fosmoe bill, which is a measure to amend the divorce laws by requiring a term of separation of two years passed the house by a vote of 82 to 29.

In committee of the whole Dyer's bill relating to the taxation of express companies was recommended to pass.

Senator Snyder's children's home bill, which bo has fought for on at least four occasions, and which escaped death in general orders by but one vote, came up on the senate calendar, and was passed with a vote of 44 yeas and 7 nays.

Of the other bills on the calendar four were passed as follows: Potter's, for a graduated tax penalty; Smith's, allowing telephone companies to obtain rights of way by condemnation proceedings along rights of way controlled by railroads; Gauswevitz', providing for examination of pharmacists and punishing adulteration of goods, and Somerville's, requiring foreign corporations to pay to the secretary of state the same fees as domestic corporations.

The two Horton bills, providing for amendment to the new capitol bill, were under discussion during the afternoon and considerable opposition developed. Progress was finally reported.

THURSDAY, JAN. 9.

The Jepson bill to regulate the practice of medicines and the measure introduced in the interest of the osteopaths were before the senate during the afternoon as a special order. After a long debate it was decided to appoint a committee of five who should prepare a bill fair to all schools and protecting the public.

The Snyder bill creating a teachers' retirement fund was passed. Several minor bills were also passed.

The finance committee has adopted a resolution serving notice on all interested parties that appropriations for state institutions should be introduced as early as possible, and on no account later than Feb. 25.

The house held but one session and little business was transacted. Three bills were passed, the most important being the Dyer bill, increasing the gross earnings tax on express companies from 3 to 6 per cent and providing for the seizure and sale of sufficient goods and chattels in the transit to make up the amount of the tax in case it is defaulted. The Roberts bill, which compels employment bureaus to keep more complete records of all transactions, and Kravenbuhl's bill, which defines forgery in the third degree and provides punishments therefor were also passed.

FRIDAY, FEB. 10.

The senate made a record for itself, passing a score of measures. The bills were mainly local and very little debate was indulged in.

One of the features of the introduction of bills was a measure sent in by Senator Wilson alleged to be in the interest of the Younger brothers now confined in the Stillwater penitentiary. The bill provides that any life convict who has had served a full 20 years, obeying the rules of the prison, may be paroled by the board of managers of the institution. The usual rules governing a paroled prisoner are amended in this case so as to permit the prisoner to go out of the state, the board having the power to extend or reduce the geographical limits of the parole at its will. There are only three prisoners at the state prison, it is said, to whom the bill, if passed, can possibly apply now. These are James and Thomas Coleman Younger, sent up from Rice county Nov. 20, 1876, for their complicity in the famous Northfield bank robbery, and Frank Johnson, sent from Hennepin county April 11 of the same year.

Joe house in the committee of the whole recommended for passage H. F. 16, by Mr. Jacobson. The measure prevents railroad companies from raising the rates of transportation on freight between points in Minnesota without the consent of the railroad and warehouse committee. The particular commodities on which rates cannot be raised without the consent of the commission are grain, flax, coal, live stock and lumber.

TUESDAY, FEB. 14.

The house listened to a 10-minute address by Colonel W. J. Bryan and spent another 10 minutes in a general reception to the noted Democratic leader. The calendar was taken up and several measures passed, among them the following:

H. F. 29, Torson—To amend an act to provide for the incorporation of villages.

H. F. 189, Lydiard—To provide for the payment of all moneys from the sale of liquor licenses in counties with a population of 200,000 or over to the town granting such licenses.

H. F. 16, Jacobson—To prevent railroad companies from raising rates for the transportation of freight between points in this state without the consent of the railroad and warehouse commission.

S. F. 29, Smith—To amend existing laws relating to property exempt from execution.

One of the first committee reports in the senate settled the fate of the Fosmoe divorce bill, which came in from the house as a substitute for the Wilson bill. The Fosmoe bill makes two years' desertion the requirement for an action in divorces, where the Wilson bill made it three years. Senator Somerville, for the judiciary committee, recommended that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

A breezy debate occurred during the discussion upon the bill introduced by the committee on roads and bridges, which levies an annual tax of one-twentieth of 1 mill on all property for state road and bridge fund, thus making effective the constitutional amendment recently adopted. One senator said it had been urged that cities were discriminated against, but while they would not draw deeply on the fund proposed they were drawing heavily on state funds for the capitol, the university and other state institutions. It was finally recommended for passage.

Bloody Work For the Seventh, Seventeenth and Twelfth United States Infantry—Capron's Guns Smashed Things—Story of the Fight—"Fortune of War Goes."

(Copyright, 1898, by the Author.)

VI.

GEN. ADNA R. CHAFFEE, whose brigade and the hardest fighting, planned the first attack, and, although the supreme moment was delayed for hours, the battle was fought precisely as planned. General Chaffee is universally pronounced by his equals in rank as well as his superiors the able soldier. He personally reconnoitered all the region around El Caney before submitting the plan which Lawton adopted without change. Of course it was supposed that the artillery fire would speedily render the fort, the blockhouses, the church and other buildings practically useless for defense and that a short fight between the infantry would end the battle. But there were only two guns at hand, and while these were of the very best and were splendidly served, under the personal direction of Lieutenants W. E. Healy and Allston Hamilton, they were not able at the ranges which their smoking powder compelled them to take to make things for Chaffee in the required time.

Every discharge of the guns was followed by showers of Mauser bullets, flying wild, of course, but the result showed that the battery would not have been silenced by Mauser fire alone had it attempted to do its work at short range. The style of fighting in which where both sides used smoking powder and short range rifles, infantry were ordered upon to keep down infantry fire and give the artillery a chance. At the old artillery range of 900 yards Capron could have smashed the entire fort and blockhouses in short order.

A veteran who commanded a regiment at El Caney told me that the Spanish position there was an ideal one; that one Spaniard was equal to four Americans in the charging line. The village of El Caney itself is a compact group of stone houses. The tallest of these, as well as the church on the hillside back of them and the battery, were loopholed, and on the outskirts of the village there were several ordinary blockhouses filled in with earth and also made of stone. The key to the position, as before stated, was the strong stone fort, sunken deep in the hillside, with a hill about 100 feet high. The El Caney garrison has been variously estimated from 500 to 1,000 infantry and artillery nor machine guns. An estimate, which seems to be generally accepted, places the strength at 460 men. It has also been stated that 460 men were killed, wounded and taken prisoners. The Spanish general, Vara del Rey, with his brother and two sons, were among the killed.

General Chaffee's plan was to throw the left regiment of his brigade against the stone fort, swinging his right into line with it around so as to sweep the interval between the fort and the village and thus hold the Spanish between his line and that of Lodiow's. During the night of the 30th he placed a company of the Twelfth regiment at the base of a hill which lay between his bivouac and the stone fort, with orders to seize the hill in the morning. He also placed a company of the Seventh regiment on a height northeast of El Caney.

At daylight of the 1st Chaffee sent the Twelfth regiment to deploy to the right of the company posted in the hill and attack in a southwest direction—that is, toward the fort, and at the same time he led the Seventh and Seventeenth north by a road from Montamano, changing directions southwest toward the village and the interval between that and the fort. At about 7:30, or an hour after Capron's guns opened, these regiments came in view of the Twelfth and formed connection, so as to cover the whole Spanish position. The brigade line was actually formed about 8 o'clock, for in advancing the men on the right found themselves confronted by a blockhouse northeast of El Caney village. Fifty Cubans were sent against the blockhouse to keep its fire down.

The glory of taking the stone fort fell to the Twelfth regiment, but the Seventh on the extreme right, near the village, crept forward to a sunken road on the crest, looking down into a valley open to the village. Then there was a hollow through which I rune a creek, but when they attempted to advance down the slope toward the creek the men had no cover at all. In the lowland was a ravine completely covered by Spanish fire. The orders of the regiment were not to fire except they could do so effectively, which was rare, as the Spaniards plying their Mausers at them were hidden behind the stone walls of houses, in blind trenches and behind barricades where their smokeless powder did not give them away. The regiment went into the fight at El Caney 400 strong and lost 11 men killed and 40 wounded. Lieutenant Colonel J. E. Haskell was wounded by three Mauser bullets, and the volved upon Major L. M. O'Brien, a veteran soldier of the Twenty-seventh Michigan. The men of this regiment fought all day upon empty stomaches, having had no prepared meal since noon the day before. They had left their packs and haversacks behind them. Major O'Brien said that it was a matter of surprise that the men were so ready and waiting, as they had been on board the transport 16 days before landing in Cuba. The voice of the grumbler was drowned by a chorus from his comrades. "What is the use?" they said. "The government is doing all it can."

In the deployment of the right of Chaffee's brigade, the Seventh regiment took the lead, marching over the ridge up a path in single file. Finally it struck a sunken road on the crest of the ridge 325 yards from the Spanish blockhouse, northeast of El Caney. The crest of the ridge offered some protection from Spanish fire. Looking across the hollow between them and the village, the men could see the enemy in their trenches. Firing sometimes by volleys and sometimes at will, the Seventh was unable to silence the Spanish fire. All day, for eight hours, the high key of the Mauser rifle could be heard above the pop of the Krag-Jorgensen.

The slope in front of the Seventh was a dense chaparral, and a charge down that across the ravine under the muzzles of the Mausers would have annihilated the regiment. Besides, in advancing to the fort the Seventh would have gotten under the fire of Capron's guns. They kept their colors flying all day as markers for Capron. The losses were distributed over every hour of the day and over all the companies in the regiment. The officers were surprised in the end to learn how many had been lost, a total of 140 out of 830 in line. At it was impossible for a man to show the smallest part of his body without getting it punctured, all the firing was done while lying down, and all the killed were shot in the head. Its commander, G. S. Carpenter, a veteran of the civil war, was on the firing line all day. When the Twelfth regiment advanced against the stone fort early in the morning, it drew the Spanish fire from the trenches, the loopholed fort and the Spaniards in the ohnrch belfry first sighted the Twelfth as it moved from the mountain down through the hollow to reach high ground 700 or 800 yards from the fort.

Captain Waltz's company crept up within 250 to 400 yards, moving right and left and trying to get a position unswept by the Spanish fire. After the fort had been reached by Capron's guns a complete regimental line was formed and swept forward to the fort, which was taken possession of by companies A, D and F under Captain Wood, Lieutenant Wilde and Captain Clarke. It was then 3 o'clock. Some of the men of Company F crept through the holes which Capron's shells had made in the stone walls and got the Spanish flag. Private Abel of Company A raised the colors of the Seventh over the fort. Soldiers of the regiment were wounded in the fort after it had been taken. The Spanish flag was handed first to Captain H. L. Haskell, commanding the battalion and Company F belonged. Captain Haskell gave it to Crealman, the correspondent, who was also wounded. Colonel Comba, of veteran, was wounded, and was succeeded in command by Major H. A. Humphrey, another war veteran.

After the fort fell the Spaniards in the village made a weak attempt to retake it. They advanced with a scattering line under cover of the fire from the houses in the village, but were driven back. Capron's battery moved up and opened on the blockhouses around the village, while Chaffee's regiments charged forward through the hollow. For an hour it was a struggling fight between the two lines, the Spaniards trying to get away, Americans heading them off, and the few misguided Spaniards, who would not give in. General Chaffee said to a Spanish officer who had given himself up, "Call on your men to surrender or they will be killed." "With a shrug of his shoulders the Spaniard exclaimed cynically, "It is the fortune of war!" Chaffee then said: "All right! Fortune of war goes!" And the Americans went on killing until the last den was dead or had grounded arms. The general says he saw 25 or 30 Spaniards shot in the village while trying to get away.

Colonel Daggett said that from the general appearance of the El Caney fortifications and their capacity he judged that the garrison numbered 2,000. The Spanish estimate was 1,300. The colonel said: "I am satisfied from all I saw that in modern warfare places may be made absolutely impregnable, and that written in a small exaggerated slaughter, but do not add to strength. An official Spanish estimate gave the loss at El Caney as 400; killed and wounded in Lawton's division about 500.

After the battle the dead and wounded were gathered, and at 7 p. m. the division marched toward Santiago.

CHAPTER IX.

The excitement consequent upon the appearance of the Empire's "bouncer," Mr. P. Maloney, at the early hour of half past 5 o'clock this fine April morning was not slow in spreading itself from the guardroom to the quarters and thence to officers' row. By the time the bugle sounded for guard mounting at 9 there was hardly a household along the line that did not know that just before 6 gun fire the Celtic Cerberus of this once popular resort had turned up in person, boldly demanding the right to flag at Major Barry's door and meekly asking where it was.

Very properly the corporal of the guard had been summoned by the sentry who first sighted the presumable prowler, and very properly the corporal had told Mr. Maloney that this was no hour to be calling at officers' quarters and that he'd have to come with him to the guardhouse and wait there the pleasure of the temporary post commander, and very properly the corporal was amazed if not shocked at the sudden appearance of the young lady inmate of the Barrys' quarters and her announcement that she would follow the messenger without delay. True to her word, not half an hour later Miss Baird issued from the eastern gate and started swiftly on her three mile walk to town. The corporal saw her go, so did the hospital steward and thoman of all work, sweeping on the stoop, and so did the lone sentry, pacing his post along the row of storehouses, and such a thing had never before been heard of at Roosnll. Maloney, it seems, had ridden on a borrowed horse and had hastened back with his answer the moment the bewildered noncommissioned officer let him go. Whatever else the men could understand was how it happened that one so fair and delicate as Miss Baird should have to take that lonely walk instead of being sent in by some one of the several ladies owned among the officers' families. What they did not dream was that of all the women in the wounded garrison not one of their number at that moment felt so friendless, so utterly alone in the world, as Natalie Baird.

At 8 o'clock Mrs. Stannard had received a brief line by the hands of Mrs. Barry's maid. It merely said, "Come to me for a moment as soon as you can," and Mrs. Stannard lost no time.

She found her invalid friend and neighbor pallid, distressed and alone. Her eyes soon told the story that she had for Mrs. Barry, without a word, handed her a little note, and, opening, Mrs. Stannard read:

I am called away by a summons that cannot be ignored. He is desperately ill, and wandering, and has sent for me. After this you know why I might never be certain in your mind. The shame of it all overpowers me, and yet I cannot do less than go to him. Forgive me, if you cannot, must not, tell your husband. Tonight—to-morrow—you also have trust in me. Let me go home and let me be forgotten. Your heartbroken

NATALIE.

"What can we do?" was Mrs. Stannard's exclamation after the momentary stupefaction caused by the reading.

"May I not get the doctor and drive after her with him?"

"Could you?" asked Mrs. Barry, almost weeping. "Ah, I knew you would! Send first for him, and then I'll tell you all I know."

But as luck would have it the little doctor had his hands full this fateful morning. The only practitioner left at the post, it was but natural that half the laundress' children should be down with various infantile maladies and that officers' row should find itself in urgent need of his services. Many a time there had come many a caller to the Barrys' door—women like Mrs. Ray and Mrs. Freeman, full of sympathy and sorrow; others, like Mrs. Turner and Mrs. Raymond, inspired by a rage of curiosity veiled beneath the conventionalities of "kind inquiries." Mrs. Barry could see no one at first, but yielded to Mrs. Freeman's importunities, and she, too, with Mrs. Ray, was taken into confidence. It was nearly half past 10 when at last the doctor drove up with the post surgeon's team and double seated carriage, and just as Mrs. Stannard was being handed in and numbers of interested spectators were looking on and down the row came a cantered unit garrison on a scrub of a pony's daughter who used to earn a precarious livelihood in those days carrying travelers' band luggage, running errands and doing odd jobs around the few hotels and many barrooms, and he had a note for Mrs. Barry addressed in Natalie's small and tremulous hand. They took it in to her at once, and she opened it.

It was a brief, piteous, yet almost impassioned appeal for $65 to be sent to her by the bearer.

The doctor shook his head. Mrs. Stannard looked grave, but Mrs. Barry never hesitated. "It's the last thing she would ever have done had it not been vitally necessary." The bills were placed in an envelope with a few lines begging her to be ready to see Mrs. Stannard and the doctor and return with them without fail if by that time she had finished what had to be done, and she nagged Mcenary trotted away with the message clutched in a dingy hand, all Russell wondering the while.

Half an hour later the doctor, leaving Mrs. Stannard with the carriage at the postoffice, strolled quietly around to the Empire and asked to see the proprietor. He wasn't in. Maloney then. He'd just gone out and wouldn't be back. Then could they tell him where he could find Maloney? No, they'd no idea where he'd gone. Evidently information was lacking at the Empire, but a happy thought occurred to the doctor. Hannifin's was just across the way, and to Hannifin's he went, feeling well assured that the rivalry between the establishments would prompt some one at the latter to tell what might be detrimental to the other, and he was right. "There had been a drunken row at the Empire late last night," said Hannifin, "between tonight that wouldn't be allowed in a respectable saloon like this, for instance." Two fellows were badly cut, and others were wounded by the city marshal, but Hannifin could only tell that a man called Boston was mixed up in it and had been slashed by somebody else, and that it was claimed that the whole gang were strangers in Cheyenne, only two of them having been seen there before last night. Then the doctor asked if any of Boston's people had been seen, and they hadn't. So far as Hannifin knew Boston had no friends or relatives, and he couldn't tell where he was now in hiding. Even the police, what there was of them, didn't know that.

So the doctor reluctantly turned away, and after reporting his ill success to Mrs. Stannard it was proposed that they should find Rackets, the boy messenger, and question him again, and find him they did at noon, but not before, and his story was straight as a string. The man who gave him the job at the ferry platform was there to wait for him when he got back. He took the package, paid the dollar bargained for and would rapidly away from the town. Where he'd gone Rackets didn't know. Who he was Rackets didn't know, neither did anybody at the depot. "Him and two other fellers" had reached Cheyenne by the Denver train the day before.

"There had been a drunken row at the Empire late last night," said Hannifin.

Troubled and perplexed, these would be messengers turned their horses' heads and drove back into town, hardly knowing what to do. The one police official the doctor had an acquaintance with was at the Railroad House and had there declared that one of their force of five or six "occasionals" had seen anything of the young lady or knew anything of the man, but they were straining every nerve to know. "What we do know is that there was a knife fight at the Empire between those strangers and this fellow Boston, who's been a looking character for some ten days, but what one become of him is more than we can find out. The town is full of strangers getting ready for the hills, and we're just as apt to run in the wrong man as the right one. What we hope is to corral them on the night train. But where they carried Boston to after he was knifed is what gets me."

To think of having to return to Mrs. Barry with a report so meager as this! Mrs. Stannard could not bear it, but return was imperative, for the doctor had patients who needed his attention, and to and not see Maynard at all that day. Reluctantly they abandoned the investigation after a few more words with the police and promise to return that afternoon if nothing were heard of the young lady in the meantime.

Then the horses were headed for the open prairie, which they reached at a spanking trot, and there, far out across the breezy levels, was trundling briskly toward the post the little team of grays and the covered spring wagon owned by an old retired soldier who had a ranch near by, and before the surgeon's well matched bays had covered half the distance the leading equipage disappeared within the gate, and ten minutes later, when Mrs. Stannard sadly stepped from the carriage at Mrs. Barry's door, she was accosted by Mrs. Turner, who came tripping from Mrs. Maynard's side to meet her and to say with eager dilation of the eye and prurigine of the mouth:

"She's back—she's just got here. Where on earth can she have been?"

And turning, unsatisfied, from her questioner, Mrs. Stannard rang at the Barrys' door and entered and found Natalie sobbing her heart out as she knelt by Mrs. Barry's side, encircled by that lady's loving arms.

"I declare," said Mrs. Turner that afternoon, "there's just ten times as much sorrow and misery about this old post when the men are away as when they're here," for that night the doctor had a patient at Barrys' who needed all his care—Natalie's strength had given way and she was very ill indeed.

And then came stirring, thrilling news next day from the front. Both battalions of the —th, diving after the Cheyennes into the sand hills, had suddenly been brought to bay. Yellow Wolf and his desperate band, finding themselves confronted, so said the young men sent far out in advance, by troops in force of cavalry and infantry from the northern agencies, had recoiled to certain well known old fastnesses in the deep breaks to the south of the Niobrara, and in recalling had stumbled against Stannard's advance, thereby bringing on a sharp and rattling fight that had warned the cockles of the old campaigner's heart and shown even his recruits to be fellows of excellent metal.

All the same, Yellow Wolf was in no mood for a general melee, or he could have made it hot for Stannard that April morning, for he had only four troops, Barry being some miles away to the southeast. The two battalions were converging as they hastened northward, and had Yellow Wolf been a strategist he had excellent opportunity to beat his opponents in detail. The Indians, however, really wished to avoid conflict with the cavalry. Every life was precious in the long badgered and fast diminishing tribe, and there was something almost pathetic in the efforts of the old chief and leader of the Cheyennes to get his people, warriors, women and children, safely in touch with their kindred of the northern tribes, the very thing which the interior department was most anxious to prevent.

For an hour his young men had kept up their dashing, long range fight with Stannard's skirmish line, striving to kill and wound as many of the soldiers as possible so as to hamper their subsequent movements. Others at the same time far to the north kept watch over the slow advance of the force from the agencies, while other braves still safely escorted the village—the old men, women and children—far in among the fastnesses of the sand hills to the west. Then, as among the Bad Lands along the Dakota border, were natural fortifications and tortuous, intricate trails, along which only in single file could partisans march, and 30 braves could hold the passage against a regiment of soldiers. So perfectly was this masked from the sight of the cavalry, constantly advancing from the north, but still nearly a dozen miles away, and from Stannard's view, thanks to the intervening ridges at which his men were impetuously dashing, that when, after a long morning of skirmishing with not a little loss to officers, men and mounts, the major ordered the recall and assembly sounded and proper disposition made for the care of the wounded, nothing whatever had been seen of the final movement of the village.

An hour later, just about 1 o'clock, when the warriors themselves seemed to have drawn away from his widely dispersed skirmishers now forming on a big circle about the pack train and wounded, the veteran soldier sent an officer and a dozen men to see what could be seen from the summits of a butte barely a mile distant, and almost instantly these began signaling, and presently a trooper came tearing back at a gallop. "Big, savage Dog with Red River, sir, the lieutenant says. You can see 'em plain not more than six or eight miles off to the north."

"Damn the cavalry from White River!" said Stannard explosively. "Where are the Indians?"

NATHANIEL.

"None in sight, sir, anywhere."

"Well, then, they've got to their holes in the sand hills, and we'll have bell to pay rooting 'em on," was the old dragoon's disgusted outbreak.

And Stannard was a true prophet. The news that reached Russell by telegraph late the April evening was that Colonel Atherton himself had hastened from the railway northward to the field, that Barry was ordered to close on Stannard, that the Indians had got into the strongest of their strongholds and that war to the knife was the least that could be expected. Still, with Atherton in general command with two strong battalions sneh as were led by Barry and Stannard, with the strong force from White River all in the field in front of him, perhaps old Yellow Wolf might think it best to surrender, sure as he was of kind treatment, and this was the flattering union laid to the ears and hearts of the wives and mothers at Russell that anxious evening when the list of casualties came in by wire, and this was what their infantry friends prescbed and prophesied and what they all tried to believe—all but poor Maynard, who felt sure there would be a sharp fight all because he wasn't there to win his spurs. From more causes than one he was profoundly unhappy, feverish and intractable, and the doctor had to chide him earnestly when he called later to see him.

"This won't do, sir," was the medico's rebuke. "By good rights you ought now to be nearly well enough to mount and ride, but you've been standing, fretting and retarding your recovery; I'm not so confident in the matter of patients as not to be able to spare a few, and you ought to be helping, not hampering me. I suppose you know Miss Baird is quite ill."

"Miss Baird?" stammered Maynard, his face filling instantly with anxiety, his fine young eyes oloonding. At the word had Grace said to him upon the subject.

"You. You know she went to town today?"

"I—heard her say that she would go," faltered the lieutenant.

"Well," continued the doctor, "God only knows what that poor child has been going through, but she's all unstrung, all broken up, and although she has youth and strength and elasticity in her favor and will probably recover in a short time she is utterly prostrated tonight. Now, if you were only able to be about—"

"If," interrupted Maynard. "What then? You know well enough that I am fit for many kinds of work even now."

"Not for trailing the gang of sharps that we're searching in vain for today," said the doctor. "Even the police could not locate them. Yet some one of their number has some hold on that poor girl —the big, burly tough they call Boston. I fancy, and after getting every cent of her earnings he got into a knife scrape last night, has been stabbed, sends for her and then sends her ordering her across dead than alive. I suppose the money is needed to buy him relief some trouble and start him away from here, but that's only my theory. She will not tell anything about him, which confirms my belief that he's a jail bird. Now, what can a girl like her be doing with a man like that?"

Maynard winced as though the doctor had used an actual instead of a verbal probe.

"You never heard her speak of any such?" asked his visitor, eying him searchingly.

"No," was the short answer, and Maynard's face looked white and drawn. He arose from his easy chair and limped to the window and gazed miserably out upon the starlit heavens in what direction lay lumps across the dim parade. He wished the doctor in Jericho, and that practitioner was not slow to see it.

"Well, I'll leave you, youngster," said he parentingly. "What you've got to do to pull out of this is to quit fret and worry if you want to get after the field without delay." And then he went trotting down the stairs where certain voices had been heard for some little time in conversation. Mrs. Stannard was away with Mrs. Barry. It was then he Grace Maynard and her now inseparable friend, Mrs. Turner. The latter pounced upon the doctor with a cooing inquiry for "poor Miss Baird" and was briefly told that the trouble seemed to be nervous prostration more than anything else. "What your brother needs is freedom from worry," he began at once. "He is fretting himself into another fever," and the doctor turned abruptly to Miss Maynard—he couldn't bear Mrs. Turner. "Now I'm going to send over a sedative that he is to take, for he's very nervous and frets at delay."

With that and blandly unconscious of the fact that much of the nervousness was due to the sedatives administrations the little man departed.

"Thru I'll go, too," said Mrs. Turner in her drawl of sisterly sympathy. "I know you must be longing to be with him, but I'll come and sit with him in the morning. Isn't it dreadful to have no one to watch him with—no man, I mean?" she hastily added as Miss Maynard took down the major's cape, which she had fallen quite into the way of wearing.

A little later brother and sister were alone in the room. He had recovered over a kettle and stowed it in the pocket of the dressing gown as she entered.

"I missed Mr. Maloney with the mail today, Ronald. Did you beer from fatherly the mail?"

He shook his head, but made no other reply.

"Well, wasn't that a letter?" she asked, with a glance at the gaping pocket.

"Yes, but not from him, Grace. And I must tell you again I am so troubled about him. You must let Aunt Willett to care for him there"—

"He has Gertrude, who is sweetness and devotion itself, whom he loves as he would his own daughter, as he hoped he —as I hoped, you and everybody else —who would and should be, or that at least she should and we should have your assurance by this time that such was your intention. You know it has long been the dearest wish of your father's heart."

"Not another word, Grace, not another word," he exclaimed.

"I do not know what it, Grace, nor do I believe it. He never so much as hinted at such a thing. You alone," said Maynard, his cheeks flushing and with an angry light in his eyes as he rose from his chair—"you alone persist in this scheme—I don't like to call it by such a name—and I don't think Gertrude would thank you in the least."

"Gertrude had every right short of a positive engagement to consider herself pledged to you and you to her, Ronald, and not until you met this stranger, of whom you know nothing that he not most unsatisfactory, to say the least"—

"Grace!"

"Oh, I know how infatuated a boy can be, and that is why I stand here, as I have time and again in your past, a shield between you and many a punishment! Ronald, Ronald, for the sake of all those years," she cried, softening and tearful now as she clasped her thin hands and bent yearningly toward him, "listen to me, my brother! Don't make me say harsh things about an unfortunate girl. Don't force from me what I know. But do you not understand that I cannot leave you now? It is dread, Ronald—dread lest you become utterly entangled in that—in that girl's toils and bring shame and ruin to us all."

"Not another word, Grace, not another word," he exclaimed, angrily drawing away from her. In her pleading she had caught up the cord and tassel of his flowered gown—her own manufacture, her own gift—and he fairly snatched them from her hands. "I will believe no ill of her. I know everything that has taken place today. I know of her going to town to see that fellow. He is some blood relation, some lunkless, reckless outcast from home, and I'll swear to it."

"Reckless and outcast he may be, Ronald, but he is that girl's lover, and I know it."

An Empress' Pen.

I heard an interesting fact regarding the former empress of the French the other night which deserves to what direction her thoughts run. Whenever she has occasion to write anything about her lamented husband, she always uses the diamond pen which signed the treaty of Paris. All those who participated in this historical occasion wanted the pen as a memento. But so keen was the empress on possessing it that she begged that only one pen should be used, which she thought she had a right to retain as a souvenir. This was agreed to. The pen takes the form of a quill plucked from a golden eagle's wing and richly mounted with diamonds and gold.—Woman's Life.

The Collies and Amen.

I once witnessed a phase of prompt evolution of practical and of devotional religion in Scotch sheepdogs on a communion Sabbath among the mountains.

The churchyard was crowded with shepherds, accompanied by their dogs, which lay quietly asleep at the feet of their masters. The sermon was finished, the psalm had been sung, the final prayer was being offered, and there was no sign of impatience, but the moment the benediction commenced the devotional doggies all roused themselves, and before the "Amen" they were in marching order.—"Newman Hall," an Autobiography.

The Dangerous Stage.

The gentleman had rung the bell several times before the servant let him in. "Is your master engaged?" was a trifle apprehensive when Mrs. Hykins came into the room.

"I called," he explained, "to inquire about your husband's health. He and I belong to the same organization, and several of the members desired me to call to see how he is getting along. We were very sorry to hear of his illness."

"It's very kind of you," she answered. There was a crash which shook the whole house.

She paid no attention to it.

"I think I will be only a day at two before he is able to come down to downtown," she added.

The slamming of doors echoed heavily through the house.

"Has he been dangerously sick?"

"Not until today."

"But I understood you to say that he was convalescent."

"And I think I may say that he is so. He wasn't well enough to be dangerously ill this morning. But before noon he had discharged the trained nurse, quarreled with the cook, smashed a rocking chair over the head which he had first split and thrown the canary bird out of the window. Those are always hopeful symptoms with him, and I feel fairly justified in saying that he is convalescent."—Washington Star.

His Manner of Bath.

At a little cosmopolitan gathering in a home on the North Side the company were discussing the inkind thrust at Chicago for flatting the Chicago R. when the girl from Boston remarked as she peered serenely over her glasses:

"We always give it the continental accent. For instance, we say bawth."

"Pshaw!" said the New York girl, disparaging her handsome features. "That isn't continental. That's New England. Now, woalways pronounce it barth."

"You're away off," retorted Miss Chicago, going into the subject neck and shoes. "We are the most correct people in the world, with all the up to date knowledge there is, and we give it the full value—baarth."

"There's a Londoner among us," suggested one of the party, turning to him to prononnce the word and notice what he does with the 'a.'"

So they tackled the bewildered Englishman, without letting him know their motive, but asking him solemn questions about his opinions of the bath. After regarding them with a sphinxlike stare through his monocled eye the gentleman from London answered:

"Quite so. Quite so. I always tub in the morning."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Brutalities at Sea.

In The Fall Mall Magazine W. Clark Russell quotes the instructions given by the Earl of Lindsay in 1835 to his captains:

"The keynote is struck with the devotional spirit of the age. The chief in command is to take care that all the officers and companies of the ships frequently God twice a day. Swearing, drunkenness, robbery, sleeping on watch and the like were to be punished according to the order and custom of the sea. Punishments were brutally severe in those times. They marooned—that is, they set a man ashore alone on a desolate coast or island and left him to starve, to be destroyed by savages or wild beasts.

"They keel hauled—that is, they dragged a man under by yard arm whips under the bottom of a ship, and drew him up raw and bloody with the barbs wounding of barnacles and spikelike adhgerences, only to be submerged afresh ere the unhappy miscreant could fetch a full breath. They nailed a man to the mainmast by driving a knife through his hand. For murder (that was often manslaughter) they tied the living to the dead, back to back, and threw them overboard."

Here's a Trick.

First Lady—What birthday present are you going to give to your husband?

Second Lady—A hundred cigars.

First Lady—And what did you pay for them?

Second Lady—Oh, nothing! For the last few months I have taken one or two ont of Jack's box every day. His hasn't noticed it, and will be so pleased with my little present and the fine quality of the cigars.—London Fun.

What Shall Be Done

FOR THE DELICATE GIRL

You have tried iron and other tonics. But she keeps pale and thin. Her sallow complexion worries you. Perhaps she has a little hacking cough also. Her head aches; and she cannot study. Give her

Scott's Emulsion

The oil will feed her wasting body; the glycerine will soothe her cough, and the hypophosphites will give power and vigor to her nerves and brain.

Never say you cannot take cod-liver oil until you have tried Scott's Emulsion. You will be obliged to change your opinion at once. Children especially become very fond of it; and infants do not know when it is added to their food.

Be sure and get the genuine.

The ATLANTIC MONTHLY

NO American agency of public information and intellectual guidance has done higher service in this most momentous period of national transition and opening of a new world epoch than THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY. In its point of view and treatmeht of events of the first national importance, it has stepped into the vacant place of a political review of clear insight, high purpose, wide knowledge, and bold conviction. It is doing for the citizens some part of the work the serious political reviews always have done for British, and which it is the often baffled aim of the "Deux Mondes" to do for France. The time has now come for some public attention to the illuminating discussion of which it is the medium.—From the New York Commercial Advertiser, Nov. 19, 1896.

The announcements for 1897 are of a variety, interest, and value greater than ever before. Upon receipt of this notice a sample copy of THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY will be sent, together with an illustrated prospectus for the coming year.

LORD SALISBURY says that the policy of her majesty's government is opposed to the dismemberment of China.

THE wisdom of the administration was shown in leaving General Otis in the Philippines untrammelled by instructions.

DEWEY is such a big man that only special legislation will fit his case. The U. S. Senate has created the office of admiral for his benefit.

LINCOLN was a statesman second to no American, he had rare literary ability, he was possessed of rare historical powers, but he was above all a man with a big heart.

THE edition of last Thursday of the Little Falls Transcript was a red-hot number. Much space was given to a "whole grist of fires" that occurred there Wednesday night.

OPTIONS on grain, stocks, bonds, provisions, etc., cannot be bought or sold if a bill introduced by Representative Marin, a populist of the Red River valley, be passed.

WHEN a jury in any civil action fails to agree after three hours deliberation, then, under a bill before the legislature, a verdict may be returned by ten of the twelve jurors.

ONE year ago yesterday the battleship Maine, was blown up in the harbor of Havana by a sub-marine mine. Within the year the United States has developed into a large power.

SENATOR HANSBROUGH, of North Dakota, thinks that the general government may make a preliminary survey of the Red River of the North with a view of devising some plans of minimizing floods. Such a survey is certainly greatly needed.

THE McEnery resolution practically means that the United States will not decide at present just what will be done with the Philippines. Final action will be deferred till the situation over there is more thoroughly understood.

THE Minnesota legislature may create a board of appeals to which matters in connection with the grading of wheat may be referred. North Dakota wants representation on this board as most of their grain is graded and sold in Minnesota.

IF the present lively tussle among the members of the medical fraternity over the provisions of the proposed medical bill becomes much more animated there may be n chance for the osteopaths to give a practical illustration of what they can do.

THE chamber of deputies at Paris by passing the revision bill have practically decided to pack the highest court rather than have this court pass an unpopular verdict. This is a virtual victory for the anti-Dreyfusites and that really means the army.

AFTER a most bitter contest between Anoka and Hastings as to which place should get the new insane asylum, a compromise or rather combination has been formed and a bill is now before the legislature providing for the erection of an asylum at both places.

THE season of Lent began yesterday. This is a period of fasting among several of the churches. Self-denial is beneficial at any time, and if not kept up throughout the year it is surely helpful to practice it if only for a short period, and the Lenten season is not an inconvenient time.

ANY move which insures more scientific and skilful work in as important a matter as surveying is to be commended. The legislature is considering the question of creating a board of examiners for surveyors. A necessary qualification for membership on this board will be ten years experience in surveying.

A BILL is before the legislature empowering married women to make contracts the same as if they were unmarried. All the barriers to marriage seem to be gradually giving away. What a world this will be pretty soon! We do not commit ourselves as to the direction in which the world is moving but we have decided views nevertheless.

THE Spanish Cortes meets next Monday to consider the peace treaty. It will of course be ratified for Spain really has no alternative. Diplomatic relations between the two countries will be resumed and one of the most memorable and epoch making contests in history will have come to an end. The power of freedom has been demonstrated.

PRESIDENT MCKINLEY sent a special message to congress last Friday strongly urging that body to take immediate action toward the building of a Pacific cable to the Phillipine Islands that will touch at Guam and the Hawaiian Islands. This is a wise message. Cable communication with the Philippines now is through foreign lands and via steamer is the quickest way of reaching Honolulu...

"HEREAFTER no person shall be disqualified for any service in any capacity in any branch or department of the government on account of participation in the Civil War of 1861-1865." The above is part of a proposed amendment to a federal law. If it passes all confederate disabilities will be removed and we certainly think that the present time is most opportune for such legislation.

WE are pleased to note that Supt. Hoverstad has not neglected to experiment with reference to ways and means of beautifying the country home. Too often the environment of the country residence is anything but in keeping with the grandeur and loveliness of nature. Life is made up of many threads, any one of which being broken the harmony of the whole is marred, and not the least of the unsightly influences is a home situated in the midst of a profusion of flowers and a luxuriant growth of foliage.

A COURT of inquiry has been created by President McKinley to investigate the allegations of Major General Miles in respect to the unfitness for use of certain articles of food furnished the army. The court is also instructed to make recommendations as to what further proceedings may be warranted by the facts in the case. Now business and the country may know whether or not General Miles has been speaking the truth. The president is determined that the light of day shall be thrown upon all official acts.

THE JOURNAL thinks that as the state has decided to build a new capitol and has the structure started that the work ought to be completed as soon as possible. The legislature is at present considering the question of issuing certificates of indebtedness under which the annual levy is to be anticipated. This or some other scheme by which this new state building may be put in readiness for occupancy at the earliest possible moment ought to prevail. This is only what any business man would do if he could. .

AT the opening of the British parliament in London last week one of the distinct features was the expression of friendship for the United States. One prominent member said that he "was pleased to note that the bonds of mutual interest and kinship between this country and America have by recent eyents been drawn closer. An alliance between the two great English-speaking people need not necessarily be one of offense or defence, but might be admirably fitted to lead the nations of the world in the direction of freedom, civilization and progress."

THE rotation of crops—grasses being grown on the land from which grain has been reaped and animal industry being carried on in connection with these two—is a matter deserving the serious attention of farmers. The soil like everything else in the universe must have its periods of rest and the question of importance is how can the land be rested and at the same time not be unproductive to the farmer. The experiments of the farm have demonstrated the fact that mixed farming is in the end the most profitable. "A little farm well tilled" is an old phrase but not yet have all those who earth their bread by following the plow learned that too much land is a detriment.

THE war investigation commission has finished its labors and its report is in the hands of President McKinley. While the intentions of this board may have been the best and the conclusions that they have drawn from the evidence before them may be correct the American public will hardly accept their report as final. They did not have authority to compell witnesses to testify. If the witnesses did not wish to testify. This of course prevented them from getting at the ultimate facts in the matter. It is found by them that embalmed beef was not furnished the army, and General Miles comes in for a scoring because he did not report so important a matter if he knew it to be true. Alger is cleared of all charges against him, in all right, but it is added incidentally that the war department did not have a complete "grasp of the situation." This, however, is what Alger should have had above everything else. The divided authority and responsibility in the war department for many years has produced friction and this ought to be remedied. General Schofield is quoted to the effect that the senior officers of the army at Washington should be simply the chief of staff to the president. The gross mistakes of the medical department are referred to as errors of omission rather than commission, in fact the commission finds that in nearly every case the fault was due to an unexpected war after a third of a century of tranquility.

In the February number of the Monthly Review of Reviews the editor seeks to apply the lessons of our national failures in the South during the reconstruction period following the Civil War to the present problems of a similar nature in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines. His deductions are interesting and instructive. He says: "The true way to restore the South to the Union after the war was to restore the South to its own people." The same principle applies today to the new territories just coming under our control. The editor warns us against a new type of "carpet-bagger" who is threatening to invade Cuba, namely the franchise-grabber. A large proportion of space in this number of the Review is given up to editorial and contributed articles on the management of foreign dependencies. Sylvester Baxter contributes an interesting study of the Dutch rule in Java, and Dr. Daniel Dorchester makes a statistical exhibit of the recent drift toward colonial and protectorate governments.

THE DRAINAGE BILL.

Drainage Commission With Governor Chairman—$500,000 For This Year and Next.

A bill came from the committee on drainage which provides for a drainage commission to consist of the governor, state auditor and the secretary of state, the governor to be chairman of the commission. The first duty of the commission will be to ascertain the whole amount of ditching needed in the state and it then may decide where to expend the $50,000 appropriated for 1899 and the $50,000 for 1900. It may hire such assistants and labor as it needs; can condemn rights of way for the ditches; must appoint and advertise a place and day for hearing complaints; can continuously determine the value of condemned lands unless an appeal is taken to the district court within ten days and the appeal is sustained. During the hearing of any complaint and immediately after condemning lands the digging of ditches may be prosecuted. The commission must pay from the funds appropriated the amount at which the land for ditches is condemned.

TIMBER THIEVES CAUGHT.

Government Agent Griffin Does Some Clever Work Out in the Red Lake County Reservation.

Special Agent Griffin of the Interior department returned Saturday evening from a week spent in the Red Lake reservation. He was in search of men whom he suspected of purloining Uncle Sam's timber, and he came back with eight scalps, so to speak. That is he caught eight men in the very act of helping themselves to the timber that belongs to the government. He says there are a number out there that make it their special and sole business to cut and sell pine and cedar not their own.

At Lambert he came across four farmers who had just come in from the woods with loads of cedar posts. They said they had bought the posts from those who were cutting them. When told that they would better unload them on the spot three of the men reluctantly agreed but the fourth said he wanted them and would pay for them a second time rather than not get them, so an agreement was made and they went on their way rejoicing that they still had the timber but doing something because they unluckily had fallen in with the government agent. .

Crayon Drawings By a Local Artist.

Crookston possesses artists in many kinds of work but it was not known to the JOURNAL till last Monday that there was within the city walls one who was specially skilful with the crayon.

In the back office of Judge Watts' rooms in the Fournet block are two life like crayon drawings of two men, now gone, who in years past presided over judicial proceedings in the 14th district, Judge Stearns and Judge Reynolds. The drawings were made by John Watts, brother of the present judge, from photographs. It is understood that these drawings will be framed and that they will help to decorate the walls of Judge Watts' chambers.

The Desired Result.

"I felt tired all the time and had constant headache, my appetite was poor and I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. The result was that after taking one bottle I began to grow stronger and my headaches less severe. I kept on with Hood's until I was perfectly cured." Lida Pope, Potosa!, Wis.

Hood's Pills are the favorite family cathartic. Easy to take. easy to operate. 25c.

THE FARMER: Very few farmers ever think of raising cows for the city market, but it pays. They must be in good condition and give a good mess of milk of average richness.

Red Lake Falls Courier: We learn from a reliable source that the Great Northern will extend its line south from this city, and connect with the Fosston line next summer.

Alexandria Post-News: The Polk County Journal gives an illustrated article on the state ditches in the Red River Valley. It gives the best idea of the work done of anything we have seen.

Glenwood Herald: We are pleased to note that Ole Teigen has been chosen secretary of the newly organized ball insurance company at Crookston, Minn., which bears the inviting title of Scandia Mutual Hail Insurance Co. .

Detroit Record: The office of United States Marshal is a plum for which every pretty fight is now being waged. Those who know Colonel Tim Sheehan and who does not—are ready to back him as being the best qualified man in the list of aspirants.

Fertile Journal: The Crookston Journal continued a fine write-up of the drainage work done in the Red River Valley, with appropriate cuts, in its last issue. Drainage has performed wonders in the valley and the good work should be kept up.

Red Lake Falls Courier: Sortedahl & Stormoen have appealed from the act of the county commissioners in appointing Swanson & Grady official abstractors of the county. The case will be heard by Judge Watts in next week's term of court.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: Rumor has it that the Great Northern has serious intentions of building a line from Cass Lake to Roseau. This would pass through a piece of country remarkably well adapted for farming and stock raising, as well as a district of heavily timbered country. There is also another rumor that the Northern Pacific will extend their line through to St. Hilaire, Thief Lake and Rosseau to the Lake of the Woods.

Red Wing Republican: An observing farmer of this county who visited, a short time ago, his old home in New England says that he was most forcibly impressed on the occasion of that visit—made after an absence of almost thirty years—with the thought that if anything like the amount of labor was expended upon our fertile easily worked soil that there is upon an acre of that hilly, stony section, yields would be produced here which would delight the producer and astonish the world. Far better would it be for many a farmer owning a large farm, but unpaid for, to exchange it for a smaller one out of debt and one that can be well worked.

Farm, Stock and Home: Fodder corn is not nearly so well appreciated in the Red River valley as it should be. Farmers will grow into an appreciation of it as hay becomes more scarce and they learn what varieties to use and how to raise and feed it. Wheat yields better after a crop of fodder corn than after weeds than after summer fallow. One of the most intelligent farmers in the Red River valley lets his neighbors have land for corn on shares and every year sows them a small sum for thus using the land, providing of course, that clean cultivation is practiced. The owner of the land reasons that he saves the cost of summer fallowing, and besides has the land in a better form than if fallowplowed once and cultivated twice.

Skipped Without Paying his Bills.

W. McDonough, a sleek-looking, honey-tongued dusky-characterized individual, after successfully soliciting advertising for a large blotter from the business men of the city suddenly absented himself leaving two hotel bills and it is said one butcher without funds which property belonged to them. Other towns will do well to take this timely warning and be on the look out for this beast and jumper. The local newspapers lose advertising and the hotels lose about $100 while the abscounder fills his pockets with the cash of our business men.

A Wonderful Opportunity.

The finest farm in Polk county is to be sold at once in lots of quarters or more. The prices are right, the terms are liberal, value guaranteed. Having arranged for a larger business in Superior, I shall close out this choice property selected by me eighteen years ago. When you want the best in location, quality and value, call on J. W. WHEELER, or A. N. HIXON. tf

Court at Red Lake Falls.

District Court opened at Red Lake Falls last Monday. The most important case taken up was that of the State vs. Van R. Brown. The defendant was indicted at the last term of court for attempting to bribe a witness. The indictment has again been demurred to, the demurrer sustained and the court has ordered that the matter be referred to the next grand jury. Court will adjourn either today or tomorrow.

The northwest will receive an immense immigration this spring, and the railroads have already begun to make preparations for the handling of the new settlers.

Congressman Eddy will soon be chief mogul on the committee on Indian affairs. Chairman Sherman, of the committee, is about to resign which places Eddy second only to Curtis, of Kansas.

Fergus Falls is likely to receive $75,000 for the erection of a government building at that place. This is the good work of Congressman Eddy. Fergus is said to be the smallest town in the country to have a government building.

If Senator Smith's bill passes the legislature the Moorhead Normal school will have continuous sessions during the school year 1899-1900. No teacher, however, save the president will be on duty for more than nine months of the year.

Most destructive and disastrous fires have been the rule all over the land during the present cold spell. Frozen water mains in some instances compelled the people to look on while their property was burned and nothing done to check the fire.

One of the editors of the Red Lake Falls Courier found attached to the door knob of his door the other morning a rather suspicious looking parcel. It turned out, however, to be not a bomb—as in Attorney Brown's case(?)—but a piece of pork, sausage with a wire stuck through it.

The Northern Pacific train was derailed last Friday a Grafton, N. D., owing to a broken rail. Fortunately the train was running very slowly at the time and the cars, while they left the rail, were not ditched. A wrecking crew was needed before the train got under way again.

The plan of the immigration committee of the Commercial club of St. Paul, for bringing settlers to the unoccupied lands of Minnesota is to send through the east an exhibit car containing a display of the natural products of the state and samples of manufactured products, to publish a pamphlet with a description of the resources of the state, and to advertise in the newspapers.

TWO DAYS TO THAW OUT.

Men Forced By Cold To Leave Lumber Camps Out East.

Probably for the first time in the history of Minnesota the tree crop has been hampered by frost. The lumbermen are usually ruined by thaws and lack of snow or some such circumstance, but this year they have been actually harrassed by the cold. For egregiousness nothing can be compared to it but the destruction of the Florida orange crop by the big freeze up.

W. F. Street of Bemidji, county attorney of Beltrami, says that many of the lumber jacks have come into town and not a few have taken their time checks and quit the camps because it is too cold to work in the woods. "Forty-five below sees them up," he says. "I understand some of the camps have broken up entirely and the bosses will pull out until it lets up.

"We had one man there, who was picked up in the woods half frozen, and people thought he was crazy, he was so dumb. They were going to send him to the asylum when after a couple of days he came to himself and left. He says he said that it took him two days to get his think tank thawed out."

—The water mains of the city were in working order last Sunday, so the incipient fire at the Commercial Hotel was soon quenched. Score one for the Waterworks company.

BAND CONCERT

Held To-Morrow Night—Chorus of Fifty Ladies.

No entertainments given in Crookston this season are more deserving of the patronage of the public than the monthly concerts under the skillful leadership of Prof. Riggs. Several hours are spent in the midst of harmony and nothing is so conducive to enjoyment and well being. The third in the series comes tomorrow night at the Opera House and delightful as the others have been, this one will undoubtedly surpass them, for practice in anything makes perfect.

In addition to the band and the orchestra which have always been favorites, the Mandolin and Guitar club will give two selections. This club played at the last concert but the members had done little practicing, either individually or together. Despite this fact the club was well received. So che can imagine how much more entertaining it will be this time. And a chorus of fifty ladies will sing. This chorus has been drilled by Mrs. Riggs and this, taken together with the fact that Crookston talent is the line of singing is first-class, is evidence that this feature of the program will be particularly pleasing. No one can afford to miss it. Reserved seats 35c., on sale at Tom Morris' jewelry store.

Knights of Pythias.

The Knights of Pythias are quite active these days. A meeting was held last Sunday at which steps were taken to secure the old charter which the members of this order in Crookston once held but which they surrendered. A special meeting will be held the evening of Washington's birthday, Feb. 22, at which it is expected the order will again be established here, and many new Knights created.

On Monday, Feb. 13, in this city, Arthur, the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Erick Johnson. The funeral took place yesterday.

The Foresters.

The Foresters of the city during the past week through the efforts of Deputy Supreme Chief Ranger J. L. Coleman, assisted by some of the charter members have largely increased the membership of the order. Last night a meeting was held in the rooms of the Odd Fellows and many were initiated into the mysteries of Foresstry. This order will now meet regularly Tuesday night and promises to be one of the most enthusiastic of the numerous societies of the city. A ladies auxiliary will be formed and thus the social functions will not be neglected.

—The semi-annual meeting of the pastors of the United Norwegian Lutheran churches of the Red River valley is being held in this city.

—J. Helm and Frank Hant were in Crookston Saturday on their way home to Red Lake Falls from St. Paul where they were attending the meeting of the Retail Hardware dealers.

—A novel test of skill is to be made. Ada and St. Hilaire have each a winner at sawing wood and these champions with the teeth machine are soon to be matched to see which is the better.

—The Workmen of Crookston will send L. W. Clark to St. Paul as their representative to the Grand lodge which is to meet next month. If Mr. Clark can't go Frank Cremmer will take his place.

—Charley Sletten, Chabot's head bookkeeper, went down to Ada last Friday night and attended a dance given by the young ladies' reading club of that town. He reports that the Ada people are very hospitable and entertaining.

—Albert Boddy, charged with selling intoxicating liquors without a license at Faith, was arrested last week and brought in to Twin Valley before Justice O. L. Aasgaard. He gave $200 bonds to appear before the next grand jury.

—T. A. Hoverstad came up to Crookston Monday morning to look over things at the experimental farm. He says that the reports of the work done at the experimental farms in the state will be published very soon. This will include the experiments at the stations at Crookston, Park Rapids and Coteau.

—The case of State vs. O. P. Hines was up again Saturday before Judge Holt and was dismissed as no case was made out against the defendant. The charge was that he tried to draw on a bank when he had no funds there. He, however, simply endorsed a check of Sjostrom. The latter has straightened the matter out.

—The O'Brien Brothers of Crookston were both honored at St. Paul last week. J. E. O'Brien was elected president of the Minnesota Retail Hardware association, and Attorney Martin O'Brien was chosen by the state convention of Modern Woodmen as a delegate to the National convention of the order. In both cases wise selections were made. Thus doth the renown of Crookston's sons spread abroad.

Multum In Parvo.

"John," said the old man to his son, "I will give you £100 to go away with. Maybe, as you don't like my business, you will find a better one."

Three weeks later the young man landed in New York. A month later, finding but £3 in his possession, he determined to return home again. It was best to let his father know beforehand, but how? A letter would be too slow, so off went John to the telegraph office.

"A quarter (one shilling) a word to London, sir," answered the polite clerk to his inquiry.

"I want to tell my father I've spent all my money, and I'm sorry, and I'm coming home and want him to forgive me and a lot of other things, and I can only pay for six words to tell him everything," said John.

"Cut it short," replied the clerk.

John sat down and thought. Soon after, to his immense astonishment, the old man received the following cablegram:

Squills, London:
Fatted calf for one.

A Critic's Evasion.

It is risky to give one's honest opinion about a man's horse or dog, a house designed by himself or a picture which he values highly. He who gives the opinion stands on a slippery place, and should the judgment be unfavorable he will slide far from the man's esteem.

Fuseli, the eccentric artist and professor of the Royal academy, was invited by a nobleman to see a painting of which he was the proud owner. Fuseli went, taking a pupil with him. The painting was shown by the nobleman himself. The artist examined it and exclaimed, "Extraordinary!" The nobleman, greatly pleased at the ejaculation, lauded the picture to the skies, pointed out its beauties, and Fuseli cried: "Extraordinary! Extraordinary!"

On their way home the pupil said: "Mr. Fuseli, I don't think much of that picture. What did you mean by 'extraordinary?'"

"Extraordinarily bad," was the reply of the artist, who had not cared to offend a lord who might become a patron.—Youth's Companion.

ISRAEL AND THE UNITED STATES.

History and Lives of Great Men Compared by Mr. Fisher—Lincoln Service In Evening.

Last Sunday morning at the Congregational church, Mr. Fisher spoke on "Material and Territorial Expansion." With the aid of a map he followed the growth of the Kingdom of Israel during its golden age—the time of Jeroboam the Second,—and with a large map of the United States, and another map of the World, he gave the history of the growth of our country and her possessions including the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, the Florida-Spanish session in 1819, the Oregon accession in 1842, the Texan annexation in 1845, the First Mexican cession in 1848, the Texas cession in 1850, the Gadsden Purchase, or Second Mexican cession in 1853, the Alaska purchase in 1867, the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands in 1898 and the Protectorate of the Philippines in 1899. The speaker then drew a parallel between Israel and the United States. First: These nations were unique in their beginnings, both being specially favored of Providence, Israel being the "Promised Land" and her inhabitants being "The Chosen People." Our country was founded by men whose written constitution began,—"In the name of God, Amen," and whose principles were,—"Laws, freedom, truth and faith in God." Second: Both countries were unequalled in their geographical situation, both being, in their respective periods of history, at the very centre of the world's activity. Israel had her period of imperial expansion, increase of population, growth in trade and amassing of wealth; but no corresponding enlargement of liberty, or of justice, or of purity. Her subsequent history of captivity illustrates the couplet of Goldsmith:

"Ill fares the land, to growing ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay."

Mr. Fisher then spoke of the quality of men called for in our own country and our own time, men who have a reverence for the past, and a firm faith in the future; men of positive motive and of high conviction; men who can

"Act, act in the living present, Heart within and God o'erhead," remembering that "To individual faithfulness God often entrusts much of the real good and progress of the world."

In the evening a Lincoln Anniversary service was conducted by the young men. Extracts from the two inaugurals, the Gettysburg speech the Emancipation Proclamation, and the martyred president's favorite poem:—"Oh why should the spirit of mortal be proud," were ably rendered by the young men. The pastor gave a brief review of Lincoln's life, and conducted a responsive reading prepared for the occasion. The service was interspersed with patriotic hymns, among them being: "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean," "The Star-Spangled Banner," and "My Country 'Tis of Thee."

The offering of the evening was devoted to the work of the American Missionary association which is freeing the negro from the shackles of ignorance as Lincoln freed him from the shackles of slavery.

FIRE IN COMMERCIAL HOTEL

At Eleven O'clock Sunday Morning—Quickly Put Out—Not Much Damage.

Fire was discovered about eleven o'clock Sunday morning in the northwest corner of the eastern wing of the Commercial hotel. An attempt was made to put it out with pails of water but this proving unsuccessful an alarm was turned in. The firemen turned out and the smoke and flames were soon at an end.

The fire started in the second story in a room occupied by some of the hotel employees where there was a small stove. Smoke soon filled the hallways. Goods were carried out of this room and out of the room immediately below, which had been recently fitted up for the hotel cook, but unfortunately they were thrown down in the yard and when the hose got to work the goods were completely saturated with water. The gable end and roof had to be cut open before the fire was finally extinguished. Some rather rapid and not specially painstaking packing was done by some of the guests in the hotel.

It was a good while after the first alarm—there were two—was telephoned in before the company got under way. This was no fault of the firemen but due to the fact that the fire bell cannot now be heard at any but a very short distance from the city hall. Firemen close at hand never heard the alarm at all. The council ought to remedy this defect at once. One inventive genius suggested to the JOURNAL that the council be instructed to hang the bell on the earth floor of the basement of the city hall and that when an alarm was sounded all windows be instantly closed.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

Firemen's Furnishings Ordered—Bills Allowed—Broadway Bridge Considered.

Poor and Weak

Catarrh and Bronchial Trouble—Had no Appetite—Now Better in Every Way—A Delicate Child.

"Some time since I took a sudden cold and could not get rid of it. Being subject to catarrh and bronchial trouble I coughed terribly. I lost my appetite and grew poor and weak and I did not feel like work. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. In a short time the cough disappeared, I slept well, had a good appetite and I was better in every way. Last spring I was not feeling well, I had no appetite and no strength. I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon felt more like work. My little nephew was a delicate child and had a humor which troubled him so he could not rest at night. He has taken a few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and now he has a good appetite and is able to sleep." MISS ABBIE J. FREEMAN, South Duxbury, Mass.

According to the testimony the 9-year-old boy was the actual thief though the others admit complicity.

Circulars have been sent over the state announcing the programme for distributing binding twine to farmers by the Stillwater managers. Orders will be received from consumers only until May 1. After that dealers are invited to buy. If the farmers take the entire capacity of the plant the dealers will get none. If the farmers ask for more than the capacity, they will be served in the order of applications.

Halvor Johnson, a log scaler from the Williams camp on Pine river, Aitkin county, was brought into Minneapolis in a serious condition, as a result of an encounter with wolves near the camp. He was rescued just in time to save his life, having defended himself with a scaling rule to the limit of his ability. His legs are covered with bites and tears and there are some severe gashes in the upper parts of his body, which indicate that he must have been pulled pressed when encor came. He says that there were from 30 to 40 wolves in the pack.

The capitol commission, board of corrections and charities and state reformatory board held regular meetings at St. Paul during the week. Work on the new capitol building will be commenced in April. The stone is now busy getting the blocks of marble ready for use. The reformatory board granted 19 parols and 7 final releases. The board of corrections and charities discussed the county system of caring for the insane. Governor Lind was present and presided—a somewhat unusual thing, for former governors have permitted this board to run itself and have rarely honored its sessions by attendance.

According to The American Soldier, dated Dec. 25, Walter S. Elvidge and Harry Bogert of St. Paul, members of Company C, Thirteenth regiment, have found gold in a small stream near Malabon. Elvidge and Bogart, he says, says, started out to see what there was to be seen, and they were allowed to proceed through the insurgent ranks. While crossing a small stream Bogart slipped and fell. His hand went into the sand and when he drew it out he discovered a small gold nugget about the size of a match head. Further investigation showed that there were many small nuggets in the sand, as well as much gold dust.

WADE NOT APPREHENSIVE.

Does Not Believe Leech Lake Indians Will Fight Again.

St. Paul, Feb. 15.—General Wade, who has succeeded General Bacon in command of the Department of Dakota, says he does not feel apprehensive over the reported disposition of the refractory Chippewas to take the warpath again. There are only two companies at the fort and one at Walker, but more could be quickly gathered.

Alarmists need not continue to come in to the effect that the Indians are in a disposition to show fight at the slightest provocation. Deputy United States Marshal Sheehan said that he had received positive assurance that half-breeds were buying ammunition for the reds.

The Streets of New York.

It was lunchtime and the "frankfurter and roll" men of Frankfort street were doing their best to appease the appetites of the 200 or 300 newsboys who throng Park row. One of the dealers in giving change to a layer accidentally dropped a dime, and before he had time to pick it up his brother dealer quickly stooped down and grabbed it. Then ensued an argument in a way which only "frankfurter men" can argue, each claiming that he had dropped the dime. It is very likely they would be arguing yet had not a young fellow of the Bowery type who had chanced to witness the trouble interfered. Walking up to the one who had really dropped the money he said:

"Dat's yer dime dat bloke has ain't it?"

"Yes."

"Well, say, how much will yer gimme if I gets it back for yer?"

"A nickel," was the answer.

Then, addressing the other contestant, the Bowery boy said:

"Say, yer got dat feller's dime, 'cause I saw yer take it. But, say, if I don't take it away from yer how much will yer gimme?"

"Six cents," was the quick reply.

"All right; hand over." The bargain was concluded just as a policeman came rushing up and grabbed the one who had dropped the dime and took him to the station house for disorderly conduct. —New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Punctual Man.

A certain Mr. Scott of Exeter whose business required him to travel constantly was one of the most famous characters for punctuality in the kingdom. By his methodical habits, combined with unwearied industry, he accumulated a large fortune. For a great many years the landlord of an inn in Cornwall or Devon that he visited knew the exact day and hour he would arrive. A short time before he died, at the advanced age of 80, a gentleman who was making a journey through Cornwall put up at a small inn at Port Isaac for his dinner. He looked over the bill of fare and found nothing to his liking. He had, however, seen a fine duck roasting on the fire. "I'll have that," said he.

"You cannot, sir," replied the landlord. "It is for Mr. Scott of Exeter."

"I know Mr. Scott very well," replied the traveler. "He is not in your house."

"Very sorry," said the landlord, "but six months ago, when he was last here, he ordered the duck to be ready for him this day exactly at 3 o'clock."

And to the amazement of the traveler, who chanced to look from the window, the old gentleman was at that moment entering the inn yard about five minutes before the appointed time. —Harper's Round Table.

An Acceptable Clock.

A well known professor sometimes became so much interested in his lectures that when the noon bell rung he kept the class five or ten minutes over the hour. Certain restless spirits among the students thought they would give him a gentle hint, so they bought an alarm clock, set it to go off punctually at noon and placed it on the professor's desk when they came in to the next lectures. They knew that he was a little absent-minded and expected that he would not notice it.

As the noon hour struck the alarm went off with a crash, and those of the class not in the secret started and took in the joke at once. There was a round of applause. The professor waited until the alarm and the applause were over and then said: "Young gentlemen, I thank you for this little gift. I had forgotten it was my birthday. An alarm clock is something my wife has needed for our servant for some time. It is a very kind remembrance on your part." The professor then went on to finish a demonstration interrupted by the alarm.—London Tit-Bits.

A Bad Dream.

It is not likely that any English speaking people understand as keen and unselfish a devotion to the niceties of language as that which characterizes the French grammarians. We may help ourselves to understand it perhaps by reading a story told of M. Lamany.

One night lately he awoke and sprang out of bed with a wild cry. His wife came running. He was in alarm and distress.

"Why, what is the matter?" she gasped.

"I dreamed," said the professor. "Oh, I had a horrible, a heartrending dream."

"What was it?"

"I dreamed I was talking, and I discovered that I made after a sentence which had a grammatical error in it."—Youth's Companion.

Two Lockouts.

Editor's Wife (from second story window)—You don't get in this house at any such hour of the morning as this.

Editor (appallingly)—Ent, my dear, I was unavoidably detained at the office.

You see, we had late news of a tremendous fire in Jackson, and—

Wife—All right; you've got news of another now (slamming down the window).—London Answers.

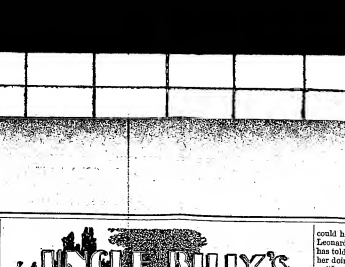
Flags That No Longer Wave.

Of 53 flags shown in a "flags of all nations" supplement to a London weekly in 1898 11 have disappeared, among them those of the East India company, of the Ionian islands, of Tuscany, Naples, the States of the Church, of the Russian-American company and of Sardinia.

Sickly Creatures.

Jennie—Herbie, it says here another octogenarian's dead. What's an octogenarian?

Herbie—Well, I don't just know what they are, but they must be awfully sickly creatures. You never hear of 'em but they're dying.—Brooklyn Life.



(Copyright, 1899, by the Author.)

When it was whispered around Ballport that my uncle, William Harris, was dying, every one said that our family was doomed to endless dissension. "Uncle Billy," as the whole town called him, was the only rich Harris ever known in that region, and the disposition of his property was a matter of vital importance in our family.

Not one of us knew where it was going, for Uncle Billy never gave a hint about it. Of one thing, however, we all felt sure—the property would not be divided with any approach to equality. Int would go almost as a whole to one fortunate individual.

There were those in the village who said that Uncle Billy had planned to stir up as much strife as possible; that he had figured it all out in advance with malign satisfaction. The only basis for this opinion was Uncle Billy's habit of figuring everything out. He had a faculty for combinations akin to that possessed by great chess players. I have known him to set down on paper the results of a town meeting weeks in advance of its date with surprising accuracy of detail.

As to the prospects of a quabble over his will no one could deny that they were excellent. We were far from harmonious even while he lived. Uncle Henry and I had quarreled over our business partnership and were on the verge of a dissolution harmful to both.

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, LET ME PREPARE YOU FOR SURPRISES."

I think I could have forgiven Uncle Henry for his attitude in this matter had he not disapproved of his treatment of his son Leonard. The young man was in love with our very distant cousin, Daisy Vale, who at one time had been supposed to have a first rate chance to inherit Uncle Billy's money. Her prospects changed, however, and Uncle Henry came to believe that the fortune would really go to Mildred Lancaster, an orphan whom Uncle Billy had taken under his protection because of friendship for her father.

Believing that she was to be the heiress, Uncle Henry forced his son to pay court to her. Leonard was a good fellow, but overburdened by the virtue of obedience. He tried to follow his father's behest as well as a sore heart would let him, and this so angered Daisy that she threw him over altogether, even before there was any real cause for it.

Strangely enough, she laid the blame for the trouble upon Aunt Harriet, Henry's maiden sister, who kept house for him. The two would scarcely speak, and as they lived under the same roof the situation was very painful.

Harriet believed that Mildred was at the bottom of the whole difficulty.

"That girl thinks Leonard is going to get the money," said Aunt Harriet, "and she has set her cap for him."

I could not believe it, for Mildred was the sweetest creature ever sent upon the earth to bless it by her presence. I had been—indeed then was—very much in love with her, but she had become cold to me, though once, I think, she had really cared for me. It was the money that had spoiled all. Mildred knew of my quarrel with Uncle Henry and believed that my mercenary nature was to blame for it. I did a fancy that her acceptance of Leonard's attentions was intended as a rebuke to me.

Thus we were all estranged, though we preserved an empty farce of external cordiality. I was wroth with Uncle Henry, he had quarreled with his son for being so cold a suitor to Mildred: Leonard was angry with Daisy for her jealousy; Daisy would not speak to Aunt Harriet; that estimable lady regarded Mildred as a serpent in disguise, and Mildred looked upon me as one whom the love of money had made unworthy of a woman's priceless affection.

With him. I confessed myself in the wrong in my business difference and yielded all points in the new agreement that was then and there drawn up. When that was over, we were the best of friends.

We could not quite forbear taking advantage of our renewed friendship to speak to him about Leonard.

"Well, Frank, as to that," said he, "I've had a change of sentiment. Since Uncle Billy"—he always called his brother that—"has been sick I've had a softening of the heart. I have told Leonard to follow his own inclination. I guess he and Daisy will patch up a peace and be married by and by. He can marry whom he pleases, for between you and me, Frank, all the money goes to him."

I knew that this was not true, but I was glad Uncle Henry believed it, since it had led to the happiness of Leonard and Daisy, and could help speedily lasting upon the result to Mildred. Could I win her again? This thought was in my mind all day, while with my pride, for I was still suffering from the sting of her treatment of me.

We were all at Uncle Billy's house in the evening. He lay up stairs very near his end, and only the doctors and nurses were admitted to him. There was a gloom over the old mansion, and we spoke in whispers. In the parlor, where the great lamp on the center table was shaded as if that room, too, were a sick chamber.

The atmosphere of grief was oppressive beyond my endurance, and I went out upon the veranda for a glimpse of the moonlight and a breath of the evening air. To my surprise, I found Daisy and Aunt Harriet there. I could have sworn they were in opposite corners of the house, but instead they were sitting side by side on a rustic seat in amicable conversation.

Hearing the chill of coming night, Aunt Harriet presently went into the house, and I was able to have a few words with the fair Daisy.

"I had wronged Aunt Harriet deeply," said she to me, "and I have told her so. I have always supposed that she interfered between Leonard and me because of that hateful money and to the belief that Mildred would have it. But it seems that Aunt Harriet is to get every penny, and, of course, she has known it all the time. Therefore she could have had no notion in separating Leonard and me, and I believe what she has told me tonight—that it was not her doing."

"I am glad you are reconciled," said I, and then I was about to tell her why she thought that Aunt Harriet was to have the money. Of course I know it was not true, for my information had come direct from Lawyer Warren. But she spoke again before I could frame a question.

"Aunt Harriet is reconciled to Mildred," said she. "It seems that some one told Aunt Harriet that Mildred was to have the money and that she had known it a long time. Of course if that was so Mildred could not have wanted Leonard because he was to be the heir, which was what Aunt Harriet had believed. So Aunt Harriet, being a perfectly just woman, went to Mildred, and they made it all up. How fortunate that she was misinformed!"

"Very," said I, a good deal perplexed by the amount of misinformation that seemed to be in circulation. "Do you know who told her?"

Before Daisy could answer we were interrupted by the coming of Mildred. How lovely the girl looked in the pale glory of the moonlight! My heart leaped up at the sight of her.

"Frank," said she, "I have done you a great injustice, and I wish to humbly beg your pardon. I thought that you were after this dreadful money, but it seems that you knew all along that you were to be the heir. And today, when Uncle Billy is so ill and the money so near your grasp, you have gone to Uncle Henry and settled all your differences, yielding everything to him, when you might have won every point with the wealth that will be yours. It is very noble of you, and I hope you will forgive me for every thought of mine that has wronged you."

"Dearest Mildred," said I, taking both her hands, "there is some strange misunderstanding, but I thank heaven that it is not the heir. I am not nearly so good a fellow as you think me, but I love you with all my heart, and I believe that in the light of your eyes I could grow to something almost worthy of you."

Daisy had quietly slipped away, but I don't think we should have paid any attention to her if she had remained. We had really loved each other a long while, and our hearts rushed together with a force that could not be staid.

Poor Uncle Billy died that night, leaving a united family behind him, as he had been here disclosed while he lay left and to whom we learned on the day after the funeral, when old Sam Warren assembled us in his office to hear the final decree.

Ladies and gentlemen," he began, "let me prepare you for surprises."

He paused and let us prepare ourselves. When we seemed to have done so, he continued:

"William Harris died intestate. The only will he ever made was destroyed some years ago. Everything in relation to his property, however, will be made clear to you when I read the letter, addressed to me by him on the day when he was taken down with what proved to be—and what he felt then to be—his last illness."

Upon this adjusting his spectacles carefully, he read as follows:

DEAR SAM—It will be no news to you, though it will be to everybody else, when I remark here that I haven't a dollar in the world. My visible property in Ballport will be swept away in its own mortgages, and everything else has vanished in speculation and foolish investments. The only legacy I have to leave in a direct way of discussion is my good will, but if possible I must straighten these difficulties all out before I die and thus atone for pretending to be rich.

If you will follow my instructions implicitly, I believe that all will be well. Everybody knows that you have been very generous with me affairs, and a hint from you will be accepted implicitly by everybody. Therefore I put you to do these things:

Tell Frank that his Uncle Henry gets the money.

Tell Henry that Leonard gets the money.

Don't tell Leonard anything.

Tell all three pieces of misinformation privately and quietly, and this is about what they will bequeath:

Frank will go to his Uncle Henry.

Henry will go to Leonard.

Leonard will go to Daisy.

Daisy will go to Harriet.

Harriet will go to Mildred.

Mildred will go to Frank, and they'll all be reconciled.

I have been tinkering with this a long while. It is harder to figure out than a town meeting, but it will work. I leave to them my blessing, equally to them all, and with sincere affection. It is all I have. Everything else is mortgaged.

Yours sincerely,
WILLIAM HARRIS.

And when we got our breath we all rose up and called Uncle Billy blessed.

Without Doubt.

A bright girl in one of the New York public schools applied to her teacher for leave to be absent half a day on the plea that her mother had received a telegram which stated that company was on the way.

"It's my father's half sister and her two boys," said the pupil emotionally, "and mother doesn't see how she can do without me, those boys always act so."

The teacher referred her to the printed list of reasons which justify absence, and asked if her case came under any of them.

"I think it might come under this head, Miss Potter," said the girl, pointing as she spoke to the words, "domestic affliction."—Exchange.

The First Steam Railway.

"The first railroad run by steam," explained an old railroad man to a Star reporter, "was not in this country, as many suppose, but in England, between London and Manchester. This was in 1830. The Baltimore and Ohio railroad was running the same year, but steam was not put in as a motor until 1831, the cars being drawn by horses. The road then only ran from Baltimore to Ellicott Mills. There was a locomotive, however, built long before it was introduced in England, being the invention of Cuynot, in 1769, in France."—Washington Star.

HAVE TAKEN ILOILO

SECOND CITY OF THE PHILIPPINES HAS FALLEN.

Insurgents Refused to Surrender and Our Warships Bombarded the Town. Place Fired Before Being Evacuated. Flames Were Extinguished, However, Before Great Injury Was Done—Enemy's Loss Very Heavy, but the Americans Reported No Casualties.

MANILA, Feb. 15.—Particulars of the capture of Iloilo by the United States forces under Brigadier General Miller, on Saturday last, have been received here.

On the morning of Friday, Feb. 10, General Miller sent an ultimatum to the commander of the rebels on shore, notifying him that it was his intention to take Iloilo, by force, if necessary. Noncombatants and foreigners were warned to leave the town within 24 hours. The rebels were also warned that they must make no further belligerent preparations. The gunboat Petrel was then moved to a position close in shore and near the rebel fort, while the cruiser Boston took up her station at the other end of the town.

Friday passed quietly. During the day many refugees left the town of Iloilo. The majority of them were taken on board foreign ships lying in the harbor.

Searchlights from the United States warships were kept all night long illuminating the town and its defenses. The rebels, so far as the lookout on the ships could discover, remained quiescent throughout the night.

Fired Warning Shots.

At 9 o'clock, on the morning of Saturday, Feb. 11, the gunboat signalled to the cruiser Boston that the rebels were working in their trenches. In return the Petrel was ordered to fire warning shots upon the town from her 8-pounders. This was done and the rebels replied with a harmless fusillade. The Boston and the Petrel then bombarded the rebel trenches, completely clearing them of their occupants in a very short space of time.

Soon after the bombardment began, flames broke out simultaneously in various parts of the town. Thereupon the marines acting as infantry and artillery, were landed from the cruiser Boston, and a company was sent ashore from the gunboat Petrel. These detachments marched straight into the town of Iloilo, and hoisting the Stars and Stripes over the fort, took possession of the place in the name of the United States.

Proceeded to Save the Consulate.

The general staff then and its defenses having been accomplished, the marines and soldiers who had been sent ashore proceeded to the task of saving the American, English and German consulates from destruction by the fire which was raging among the frail and inflammable buildings of the town. The British consul's residence, which was in the same row as the consulates named, was burned. The entire Chinese and native sections of the town were destroyed, but foreign mercantile property escaped with slight damage.

There was some desultory firing by the enemy in the outskirts of Iloilo, but not a single American was injured.

General Miller's force had complete control of the situation when the gunboat Petrel sailed from Iloilo for Manila.

AGONCILLO RESPONSIBLE.

Otis Hears That He Advised Aguinaldo to Open Hostilities.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—A dispatch from General Otis, received at the war department during the morning, says he has been informed that the attack made on the American forces by the rebels was in pursuance of advices received by Agoncillo from Hong Kong. The cablegram is as follows:

"Reported that insurgent representative at Washington telegraphed Aguinaldo to drive out Americans before arrival of reinforcements. Dispatch received Hong Kong and mailed Malolos. Insurgent government decided on attack about 7th inst. Eagerness of insurgent troops to begin engagement precipitated battle.

"Fire opened on lines from Caloocan on north to Pansan on south. Yesterday reconnoitering party twelve miles south fired on party, wounding two men; two insurgents, with arms, captured. Affair of 10th, McArthur's division very successful. Enemy's loss considerable; have collected 70 dead bodies; more not yet discovered. Insurgents reported to be gathering force 12 miles north on railway, but evidently perplexed."

NOT READY TO QUIT.

Filipinos Now Carrying on a Guerrilla Campaign.

MANILA, Feb. 12.—Contrary to general expectations all is quiet along the entire line.

In Manila the inhabitants have generally recovered from the alarm occasioned by the fear of a native uprising and are resuming their ordinary business. The shipping interests are naturally suffering, since there have been no clearances for Philippine ports for a week, but on the other hand foreign shipping has increased, especially from Hong Kong, several steamer bound thither being crowded with timid refugees.

Despite the quietude, however, many are asking whether the problem is not still further from solution. A week ago those who took an optimistic view predicted that the terrible lesson just administered to the rebels would settle the question of Filipino independence in short order. But this prediction has not been fulfilled. As a matter of fact the rebels are now scattered throughout the country, bushwhacking, except at Malolos, where they are gathered in force. Even their methods savor more of the guerrilla than of civilized warfare, every bush, clump of grass and tree furnishing a cover for their sharpshooters.

LOSS VERY HEAVY.

Now Known Fully Twenty-five Hundred Filipinos Are Dead.

MANILA, Feb. 18.—It is now known that the Filipino loss is fully 2,500 killed, with wounded vastly in excess of that number and thousands are held prisoners. All this has been achieved at the cost of 65 Americans killed and 276 wounded. There are 25 Americans missing and unaccounted for. No fewer than 10 of the native villages have surrendered or been captured. Several have been destroyed because their houses harbored men, frequently disguised in female attire, who shot from windows and roof tops at the Americans. Many guns and a ton of ammunition have been seized. As might have been expected there has been looting in the outskirts, but it has not been general and has been done in direct violation of orders.

Among the distinguished prisoners captured in Manila since the outbreak of hostilities are Captain A. G. Escamillo, Aginaldo's private secretary; Captain E. P. Veraguth, Colonel Martin de Los Reyes and Senor Tomas del Rosario, a member of the so-called Filipino congress in session at Malolos. Other Filipino officers are also in custody.

WARM FOR FILIPINOS.

The Monadnock and Charleston Assist the American Troops.

MANILA, Feb. 13.—2:30 p. m.—Early in the day the monitor Monadnock and the cruiser Charleston began dropping shells into the rebel camp between Caloocan and Malabon.

The enemy's sharpshooters, in the jungle on the American left, had been particularly annoying since daylight, so the Third artillery drove the rebels out of the jungle at noon. In the meantime a few men of our men were wounded.

The boat knocked out many more of our men than did the Filipinos' bullets, especially in the marsh lands north of Malabon, where the Kansas regiment was stationed. Fully a score of them were taken to the hospital.

Among the incidents of the day it is cited that Privates Hartley and Fitch of the Thirteenth Minnesota regiment, were both severely wounded in the by the same bullet, and Private Mitchell of Company B, of the Kansas regiment, while assisting a couple of men to the rear, was shot in the left arm.

The list of killed includes Private John A. Gibbons, Hospital corps; Private Alonzo Ricketts, Company I, Twentieth Kansas; Private Fred Hall, Company I, First Montana.

Sergeant William H. Lock, Company G, North Dakota, was among the wounded.

FOUGHT IN A JUNGLE.

North Dakota Troops Participate in Another Battle.

MANILA, Feb. 14.—A reconnoitering party of the Fourteenth infantry came upon a large body of the enemy in the jungle near Camp Dewey. The rebels were attacked and fell back upon the main line of the insurgents.

The Fourteenth infantry, the North Dakota volunteers and the Fourth cavalry then engaged the enemy and drove them toward the beach, where one of the gunboats received them with a fusillade from the automatic Colt guns. The enemy's loss is severe, and they scattered along the beach, seeking cover from the fire of the Americans.

Privates Ransom, Hensel and Saunders of Company F of the Fourteenth infantry and two troopers of the Fourth cavalry were wounded.

The railroad is now open to Caloocan, and supplies for the troops are being forwarded by rail.

AN ASYLUM HORROR.

Cottage at Yankton Burns and Seventeen Insane Perish.

YANKTON, S. D., Feb. 14.—One of the most horrifying fires in the history of Yankton occurred at 2 a. m. at the state insane asylum, where one of the cottages took fire in the basement, completely cutting the building off and causing the death of 17 inmates confined there. The names of those missing and the counties from which they came are:

AUGUSTA BOERSE, Lake.
JULIA ERICKSON, Meade.
ELLA LOKKEN, Codington.
MARGARET LYNCH, Union.
JOSIAH OLSON, Hamlin.
MARTENYA TENNYSON, Pennington.
ELIZABETH STOLPE, Davison.
MRS. KAMPHUIS, brown.
MAGGIE FLYNN, Hamlin.
LUCINA GOSSAGE, Hamlin.
ADELINA HURLEY, Potter.
CHRISTINA JOHNSON, Coddington.
JENNIE KNUDSON, Pennington.
LUSIA KIES, Coddington.
CAROLINE LINDBERG, Brown.
KATE PLATTER, Brule.
GAINI SWANSON, Kingsbury.

Laundry in the Basement.

The cottage was erected of stone and granite walls with wooden interior and was intended for laundry purposes, but owing to the crowded condition of the main building 40 of the female patients were placed here with the laundry in the basement. The exact cause of the fire is not known, except that it originated in the dryroom of the laundry.

An inquest is now in progress at the asylum, which may develop the exact cause. It is not thought blame will attach to any of the attendants.

Coal Scarce at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Feb. 14.—Chicago is beginning to experience a coal famine as a result of the excessive cold weather, now well out of the way. The shortage is especially marked in the case of anthracite coal, which has advanced 50 cents a ton.

Great Northern Flyer Wrecked.

SEATTLE, Wash., Feb. 16.—The Great Northern fast mail was wrecked during the morning by running into a slide near Edmunds. The engine was thrown into the bay. The passengers escaped injury.

SOMEWHAT CRITICAL

WAR INVESTIGATING COMMISSION MILDLY FINDS FAULT.

With Some Things in Connection With the Late Unpleasantness—Algers's Department, They Say, Lacked Complete Grasp of the Situation—Friction Between Commanding General and His Superiors Deplored—The Beef Was All Right—Charges of General Miles Regarding Chemicals Not Sanctioned.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The report submitted to the cabinet last Wednesday by the commission appointed by him to investigate the conduct of the war department in the war with Spain has been made public. The report is a unanimous one, all the members of the commission having signed it except Colonel Sexton, whose death occurred Feb. 4. The report is a voluminous document containing about 60,000 words. An official abstract, prepared by the secretary of the commission, was furnished to the press for its convenience.

The commission has limited its call of who had any evidence to give, the report says, and has done everything possible to get at the real facts in the case. In the beginning of the report the statement is made that the commission has discovered no dishonesty whatever.

Before proceeding to a specific description of the conduct and management of the war, the report gives comments and suggestions touching certain matters which came under consideration as a logical consequence of the inquiry pursued by the commission. One of these recommendations is that the president should be empowered to call upon retired army officers for service in time of war. Another criticism is that there is altogether too much routine in the war department, the methods pursued making it almost impossible to transact the vast amount of business necessary.

Too Much Friction.

Perhaps the most significant utterance in the whole document, as far as concerns the discipline and efficiency of the army, comes next:

"For many years the divided authority and responsibility in the war department has produced friction for which, in the interest of the service, a remedy, if possible, should be applied. The commanding general is assigned to duty as such by the president and his duties are defined by the military laws of the United States.

"The president must have the same power of selection of his generalin-chief as he has of his secretary of war. Without this there can be no guarantee that he will give, or that the secretary of war will place in the general-in-chief that confidence which is necessary for the control of the army. Under the present system the secretary of war should have in command of the army a person who is not working in harmony with them.

Alger Mildly Criticised.

The report now takes up the war department and its chiefs and subdivisions, beginning with the secretary of war:

"The records of the war which have been laid before us show that the secretary of war extended to all chiefs of bureaus cordial and full support and promptly responded to every request for men and made upon him by commanding officers.

"No testimony has been presented showing intentional neglect of duty nor any attempt to serve personal interests. The charges made that the secretary of war was primarily interested in purchases and contracts and other matters of the war department, have been thoroughly examined and found baseless.

"In the judgment of the commission there was lacking in the general administration of the war department during the continuance of the war with Spain that complete grasp of the situation, which was essential to the highest efficiency and discipline of the army.

The Commissary Department.

"The commission has carefully investigated the subject of the condition, quality and quantity of food supplies to the army. Almost without exception it has been shown by the testimony taken that wherever the troops were ordered, whether to the various camps in the United States or in Porto Rico, Cuba and Manila, the rations prescribed by law were on the transports and at the camps with the soldiers.

"So far as we have been able to ascertain there was but one occasion, that of a day in front of Santiago, when the troops were seriously short of rations, those had been supplied but thrown aside when the men went into action. At times the vegetable ration, for want of good quality, the potatoes and onions being shelled.

"The commission was organized the 24th day of September last. Up to the 31st day of December 1,500 witnesses had taken testimony in 17 different towns and cities and nine camps. It also had received many hundred letters, communications and newspaper clippings from persons living in all parts of the country. Examination of numerous officers and enlisted men had been made as to the quality and condition of the meat furnished to the troops. The testimony, with some exceptions, showed that the refrigerated beef issued was pure, sound and wholesome."

The testimony of General Miles and Major Daly is then quotedand commented on and the report continues:

"In view of the facts above set forth the commission is of the opinion that no refrigerated beef furnished by contractors and issued to the troops during the war with Spain was shipped to or treated with any chemicals by the contractors for those in their employ."

VERY COLD SOUTH.

The Weather Record Broken in Almost Every State.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Feb. 14.—Associated Press dispatches from all over the South indicates that without exception the cold weather record was broken in every state. Death and destruction of early fruits and vegetables accompanied the cold blast. The deaths of 10 persons have also been reported. From Texas come reports of considerable losses of cattle together with the utter destruction of the oat and wheat crops, in some sections. Railroads in Virginia are blockaded owing to the heavy snowdrifts. From almost every section come reports of fuel famines and great distress among the poor. The temperatures ranged from at London, in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky, to 15 above in the orange belt in Florida. In the latter state winter maturing vegetables were killed, but what damage was done to orange trees is yet in doubt. In the extreme South the telegraph systems were demoralized the entire day, the severe weather causing a snapping of the wires.

The temperature ranged from 22 degs. above zero to 10 below in Alabama and West Virginia. In Florida and Louisiana this means a possible loss of millions of dollars for the orange groves.

AN OFFICIAL OPINION.

Storm in the East the Worst in the History of That Section.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—An official weather bulletin says: The great Atlantic coast storm has passed on to the Nova Scotia coast with rapid velocity and almost unprecedented development.

Owing to its extent and extreme destructiveness, this storm will always be remembered as the greatest storm in the history of the Atlantic coast states, and was most remarkable for the perfect combination of conditions necessary to produce such results as abnormally high barometric area, accompanied by a severe cold wave, was moving southeastward in the Gulf states, and a low developing on its southeast edge. Its growth was inevitable, and as rapidly as possible, widespread warnings were distributed on Saturday in the West Gulf states of impending severe freezing weather on the coasts.

Nearly all temperature records were broken in the Gulf and Southern states.

PACIFIC CABLE NEEDED.

Message to Congress Recommending That One Be Laid.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The president sent a message to congress during the day calling attention to the urgent necessity for the construction of a cable across the Pacific ocean. It does not make any specific recommendation as to the way by which the cable shall be secured, the main point being that it is imperatively necessary a cable should be laid.

The president points out that at least two years must elapse after giving the order before the cable can be laid. Under these circumstances it becomes a paramount necessity that measures should be taken before the close of the present congress to provide such means as may seem suitable for the establishment of a cable system.

Black Paved Them.

Sir Wemyss Reid, in a personal sketch of his friend the late Mr. Black in The Speaker, tells how the novelist outwitted The Saturday Review. Of "A Daughter of Heth" appeared, it took the town by storm. It appeared anonymously Sir Wemyss heard for the first time from an acquaintance in the Reform club.

It was with a certain sense of injury that he asked, "Why, if Black wrote the book, did he not put his name to it?" "Oh, don't you know?" was the indignant answer. "That is the best part of the joke. The Saturday Review has been 'down' upon everything he has written, so he purposely published this book anonymously in order to take in The Saturday Reviewers, and they were the first to welcome it with the praises of 'A Daughter of Heth.' If his name had been on the title page, they would have damned it."

Unlike many bits of gossip about successful authors, this—as Sir Wemyss learned later from Mr. Black's own lips—was strictly true.

Dickens Was "Lead."

In the memoir of the late J. H. Friswell there is a glimpse of Dickens which will seem familiar to those Americans who remember the somewhat flamboyant dress of the novelist. "On one occasion," wrote the author of "the Gentle Life," "we were walking from Waterloo station and just passing the office of Household Words when a hansom cab stopped and out stepped a gayly dressed gentleman. His bright green waistcoat and vivid scarlet tie no one would have noticed, but the size of the enormous flower in his buttonhole riveted my attention. My father introduced me and I, who had only seen engravings of the Maclise portrait and photographs, was astonished to find myself face to face with Charles Dickens.

HAVE TAKEN ILOILO

SECOND CITY OF THE PHILIPPINES HAS FALLEN.

Insurgents Refused to Surrender and Our Warships Bombarded the Town. Three Fired Before Being Evacuated. Flames Were Extinguished, However, Before Great Injury Was Done—Enemy's Loss Very Heavy, but the American Reported No Casualties.

MANILA, Feb. 15.—Particulars of the capture of Iloilo by the United States forces under Brigadier General Miller, on Saturday last, have been received here.

On the morning of Friday, Feb. 10, General Miller sent an ultimatum to the commander of the rebels on shore, notifying him that it was his intention to take Iloilo, by force, if necessary. Non-combatants and foreigners were warned to leave the town within 24 hours. The rebels were also warned that they must make no further belligerent preparations. The gunboat Petrel was then moved to a position close in shore and near the rebel fort, while the cruiser Boston took up her station at the other end of the town.

Friday passed quietly. During the day many refugees left the town of Iloilo. The majority of them were taken on board foreign ships lying in the harbor.

Searchlights from the United States warships were kept all night long illuminating the town and its defenses. The rebels, so far as the lookout on the ships could discover, remained quiescent throughout the night.

Fired Warning Shots.

At 8 o'clock, on the morning of Saturday, Feb. 11, the gunboat signalled to the cruiser Boston that the rebels were working in their trenches. In return the Petrel was ordered to fire warning shots upon the town from her 8-pounders. This was done and the rebels replied with a harmless fusillade. The Boston and the Petrel then bombarded the rebel trenches, completely clearing them of their occupants in a very short space of time.

Soon after the bombardment began, flames broke out simultaneously at various parts of the town. Thereupon 48 marines, acting as infantry and artillery, were landed from the cruiser Boston, and a company was sent ashore from the gunboat Petrel. These detachments marched straight into the town of Iloilo, and hoisting the Stars and Stripes over the fort, took possession of the place in the name of the United States.

Prevented to Save the Consulates.

The capture of the town and its defenses having been accomplished, the marines and sailors who had been sent ashore proceeded to the task of saving the American, English and German consulates from destruction by the fire which was raging among the frail and inflammable buildings of the town. The Swiss consul's residence, which was in the same row as the consulate alone, was burned. The entire Chinese and native sections of the town were destroyed, but foreign mercantile property escaped with slight damage.

There was some desultory firing by the enemy in the outskirts of Iloilo, but not a single American was injured.

General Miller's force had complete control of the situation when the gunboat Petrel sailed from Iloilo for Manila.

AGONCILLO RESPONSIBLE.

Otis Hears That He Advised Aguinaldo to Open Hostilities.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—A dispatch from General Otis, received at the war department during the morning, says he has been informed that the attack made on the American forces by the rebels was in pursuance of advices received by Agoncillo from Hong Kong. The cablegram is as follows:

"Reported that insurgent representative at Washington telegraphed Aguinaldo to drive out Americans before arrival of reinforcements. Dispatch received Hong Kong and mailed Malolos. Insurgent government decided on attack about 7th inst. Eagerness of insurgent troops to begin engagement precipitated battle.

"Very quiet on lines from Caloocan on north to Pansan on south. Yesterday reconnoitering party twelve miles south fired on party, wounding two men; two insurgents, with arms, captured. Affair of 10th, McArthur's division very successful. Enemy's loss considerable; have collected 70 dead bodies; more not yet discovered. Insurgents reported to be gathering force 12 miles north on railway, but evidently perplexed."

NOT READY TO QUIT.

Filipinos Now Carrying on a Guerrilla Campaign.

MANILA, Feb. 12.—Contrary to general expectations all is quiet along the entire line.

In Manila the inhabitants have generally recovered from the alarm occasioned by the fear of a native uprising and are resuming their ordinary business. The shipping interests are naturally suffering, since there have been no clearances for Philippine ports for a week, but on the other hand foreign shipping has increased, especially from Hong Kong, every steamer bound thither being crowded with timid refugees.

Despite this quietude, however, many are asking whether the problem is not still farther from solution. A week ago those who took an optimistic view predicted that the terrible lesson just administered to the rebels would settle the question of Filipino independence in short order. But this prediction has not been fulfilled. As a matter of fact the rebels are now scattered throughout the country, bushwhacking, except at Malolos, where they are gathered in force. Even their methods savor more of the guerrilla than of civilized warfare, every bush, clump of trees and stone furnishing a cover for their sharpshooters.

LOSS VERY HEAVY.

Now Known Fully Twenty-five Hundred Filipinos Are Dead.

MANILA, Feb. 13.—It is now known that the Filipino loss is fully 2,500 killed, with wounded vastly in excess of that number and thousands are held prisoners. All this has been achieved at the cost of 63 Americans killed and 276 wounded. There are 25 Americans missing and unaccounted for. No fewer than 10 of the native villages have surrendered or been captured. Several have been destroyed because their houses harbored men, frequently disguised in female attire, who shot from windows and roof tops at the Americans. Many guns and a ton of ammunition have been seized. As might have been expected there has been looting in the outskirts, but it has not been general and has been done in direct violation of orders.

Among the distinguished prisoners captured in Manila since the outbreak of hostilities are Captain A. G. Escamillo, Aguinaldo's private secretary; Captain E. P. Verzquith, Colonel Martin de Los Reyes and Senor Tomas del Rosario, a member of the so-called Filipino congress in session at Malolos. Other Filipino officers are also in custody.

WARM FOR FILIPINOS.

The Monadnock and Charleston Assist the American Troops.

MANILA, Feb. 13.—2:30 p. m.—Early in the day the monitor Monadnock and the cruiser Charleston began dropping shells into the rebel camp between Caloocan and Malabon.

The enemy's sharpshooters, in the jungle on the American left, had been particularly annoying since daylight, so the United artillery drove the rebels out of the jungle at noon. In the meantime a few more of our men were wounded.

The heat knocked out many more of our men than did the Filipinos' bullets, especially in the marsh lands north of Caloocan, where the Kansas regiment was stationed. Fully a score of them were taken to the hospital.

Among the incidents of the day it is cited that Privates Hartley and Fitch of the Thirteenth Minnesota regiment, were both wounded in the legs by the same bullet, and Private Mitchell of Company B, of the Kansas regiment, while assisting a couple of men to the rear, was shot in the left arm.

The list of killed includes Private John A. Gibbons, Hospital corps; Private Alonzo Ricketts, Company I, Twentieth Kansas; Private Fred Hall, Company I, First Montana.

Sergeant William H. Lock, Company G, North Dakota, was among the wounded.

FOUGHT IN A JUNGLE.

North Dakota Troops Participate in Another Battle.

MANILA, Feb. 13.—A reconnoitering party of the Fourteenth infantry came upon a large body of the enemy in the jungle near Camp Dewey. The rebels were attacked and fell back upon the main line of the insurgents.

The Fourteenth infantry, the North Dakota regiment and the Fourth cavalry then engaged the enemy and drove them toward the beach, where one of the gunboats assisted them with a fusillade from the automatic Colt guns. The enemy's loss is severe, and they scattered along the beach, seeking cover from the fire of the Americans.

Privates Ransom, Heuset and Saunders of Company F of the Fourteenth infantry and two troopers of the Fourth cavalry were wounded.

The railroad is now open to Caloocan, and supplies for the troops are being forwarded by rail.

AN ASYLUM HORROR.

Cottage at Yankton Burns and Seventeen Inmates Perish.

YANKTON, S. D., Feb. 13.—One of the most horrifying fires in the history of Yankton occurred at 2 a. m. at the state insane asylum, where one of the cottages took fire in the basement, completely gutting the building and resulting the death of 17 inmates confined there. The names of those missing and the counties from which they came are:

AUGUSTA BOESSE, Lake.
JULIA ERICSSON, Meade.
ELLA LOKEN, Codington.
MARGARET LYNCH, Union.
JOSIAH OLSON, Hamlin.
MARTENYA TENNYSON, Pennington.
ELIZABETH STOLPE, Davison.
HELEN KARLSON, Brown.
MAGGIE FLYNN, Hamlin.
LUCIDA GOSSAGE, Hamlin.
ADELINA HURLEY, Potter.

JENNIE KRESSO, Pennington.
LUSIA KIEN, Coddington.
CAROLINE LINDBERG, Brown.
KATIE PLANTE, Ben Homme.
GAHN SWANSON, Kingsbury.

Laundry in the Basement.

The cottage was built of stone and granite walls with wooden interior and was intended for laundry purposes, but owing to the crowded condition of the main building 40 of the female patients were placed here with the laundry in the basement. The exact cause of the fire is not known, except that it originated in the flyroom of the laundry.

An inquest is now in progress at the asylum, which may develop the exact cause. It is thought blame will attach to any of the attendants.

Coal Scarce at Chicago.

EDITORIAL MEETING.

Excellent Literary Program aid Brilliant Society Functions.

HUNTINGTON MADE PRESIDENT.

The Molders of Public Thought Exchange Ideas—are Royally Entertained at St. Paul.

The thirty-third annual meeting of the State Editorial Association was held last Thursday and Friday at the Commercial club rooms in St. Paul. It was one of the most pleasant and profitable meetings in the history of the association. The attendance was larger than ever before, the literary program was better than usual and the social features were particulary pleasing. Thursday evening a banquet was given at the Windsor hotel to the editors and their wives and Friday evening they were entertained at the opera house and also at the Commercial club rooms.

The danger to the educational interests of the state from the reduction of royalties on iron ore was brought to the attention of the convention by E. C. Gridley, and the editors were urged to use their influence towithstand such a movement. He said the state was involved in the matter to the extent of about $15,000,000 and he thought that the editors should take concerted action to defeat the attempt.

Charles A. Mitchell, of Alexandria, spoke on the advantage to be derived from the publication of extended accounts of the annual excursion of editors.

Among several papers was one by E. A. Nelson, of Hallock, on 'An Editorial Political Poll," showing how the editors were generally engaged in the disinterested work of hunting up suitable candidates for offices and fitting them out with desirable qualifications, resulting in their election. He also discussed the selfish pull of getting something for themselves as a reward for their services, and referred to the number of successful editors of the latter class. He believed that a poll was an inevitable development if an editor conducted his columns truthfully, forcefully, consistently and persistently, and this kind would be a desirable one, which, rightly used and not abused, was a proper thing to have.

E. C. Huntington, of the Windom Reporter, was elected president of the association for the coming year: W. J. Munroe, Morris Sun, first vice-president; J. H. Johnson, Winona Herald, second vice-president; John Heck, Waseca Journal, third vice-president; C. P. Stice, secretary, and David Ramaley, treasurer, were re-elected in a burst of enthusiasm which permitted of none of the usual forms, calls for their nominations coming from all over the house and standing votes being taken. On motion of President-elect Huntington, the three elective members of the executive committee, C. S. Mitchell, C. C. Whitney and H. P. Hall, were re-elected, but Mr. Mitchell, asking to be excused, Frank Lloyd, of the Kellogg Newspaper company of Minneapolis, was elected in his stead.

Crookston College.

A pleasant feature of the Crookston College and Normal School is the Friday evening musical or lecture in charge of the Crescent Literary Society. Most of the the pupils of the school usually attend together with their friends. The meetings are free, and a cordial invitation has been extended to the citizens generally by Professors Mahle and Sarber, who are at the head of the school. Last Friday evening Mr. J. W. Wheeler, cashier of the first National bank, gave an interesting and practical address for young men. He put industry, integrity, and honesty as being among the salient business qualities of successful men today. The Locken girls gave two piano duets which were much appreciated, and Miss Nora Fuller ably recited a prose selection representing a scene of Herculaneum.

The next meeting occurs next Friday evening when Herman P. Fisher, M. A. will give an address on "A Hero of the Northwest."

PROBABLY CASE OF PERJURY.

Evidence Goes to Show That Two Indian Women try to Screen a Saloonkeeper.

Ed. Reagan, of Solway, was up before Mayor Mix last Tuesday on the charge of having sold liquor last summer to Indians. As the complaining witness, Sophia Wilbrau swore on that day that she had never seen the defendant until she saw him in court the case had to be dismissed. The evidence however would seem to show that it is a case of perjury on the part of this Sophia Wilbrau and also of Grace Warren who was a witness for the prosecution.

Last summer Reagan was keeping a Klondike Saloon out near Bagley. Sophia Wilbrau and Grace Warren were then living at the home of the mother of the latter, Mrs. Howe, about a mile distant. United States Marshall Tallman says that the two Indian women spoken of appeared before him and signed an affidavit to the effect that Reagan had sold Sophia Wilbrau a bottle of liquor.

This complaint was made because they said Reagan was refusing a young Indian lad by furnishing him liquor. Reagan was before Major Mix a couple of weeks ago but the case was postponed till the witnesses could be secured. Meanwhile it is very evident that he has won the complaining witness, Grace Warren over to his side for the former said Tuesday, under oath, that she had never seen Reagan before she saw him in the court, and the evidence of the other was almost the same. Grace Warren, however, changed her testimony a little at the suggestion of her mother, who openly in court told the witness she would better not testify to so and so, for which act Mrs. Howe was sharply reproved by the Judge. The facts are that right here in Crookston Reagan met the witnesses on the day they came to the bus with them to the hotel, and held several conversations with them in the hotel parlors.

These two witnesses will be prosecuted for perjury and it is to be hoped that they will receive the full penalty of the law.

Ladies' Banquet.

It is reported that in the near future a very brilliant society function will occur in Crookston. The Burns club and the McKinley club have each held a banquet which men only attended. The ladies will have their revenge and at their banquet no gentlemen will be allowed. The affair is being arranged by one of the ladies' lodges of the city. The number present is to be away above the hundred. The JOURNAL wishes the ladies great success in their project.

The Dairy Cow.

The dairy cow is coming to be one of the paying institutions on a farm. Those who are taking pains with the breeding and the feeding of their cows are being well repaid for their trouble. J. B. Roome who lives about ten miles southwest of town was a caller at the JOURNAL office last Saturday, and in speaking of what he was doing in the way of dairying he said that the milk of six cows for six days netted him 40 pounds of butter, a very good showing.

A Doll's House.

While Miss Clara Thropp the best and brightest of American comediennes was appearing in London at the Duke of York's theatre as Nora in "A Doll's House," Clement Scott, the great English dramatic critic visited Miss Thropp on the stage between the acts and the next day he wrote the following lines in his paper regarding the comedienne; "As merry as a lark and as twitterling as a swallow, was Miss Nora from the home of its birth to gladden our hearts with its soft music."

Miss Thropp will shortly appear in this city as Nora. "A Doll's House" as presented by her is regarded as the most remarkable play of the century and has created bramidoles of newspaper discussion both in America and Europe. She is supported by an admirable company. Will be here at the Grand opera house Tuesday, Feb. 28th. Prices will not be raised for this engagement.

BUSINESS CHANGES.

Several New Concerns Open Up—and Others Getting Ready to Move.

Much activity is being manifested in business circles these days. Many changes are being made, new firms established and in general the business men are getting ready for the spring trade. The new hardware firm of Thompson & Busterud, located in the Adams block on Robert street is opened up for business. A display of fine looking bicycles was noticed in the window. Munson & Eck, the proprietors of the new meat market on Main street opposite the opera house block, have for the past week been weighing out meat to their already numerous customers. Will Hoch expects next Monday to move his confectionery store and billiard tables into the store in the opera house block on Main street recently occupied by the Bjoin Hardware company. A. E. Vanstrum joins Mr. Hoch in the new enterprise and a first class restaurant will be fixed up in the front part of the store and in the rear will be the billiard hall. The building on Robert street owned by J. C. Ormsrud and for the past two years occupied by Busterud's hardware stock, is being newly papered and floored and painted preparatory to P. C. Renne moving his restaurant in there the first of March. The Star Steam Dye works situated on 3d st. street, a few doors north of the Merchants National bank, and formerly owned and managed by T. A. Crittenden was sold last Friday to F. Leidl Smith & C. The concern will be hereafter known as the Northwestern Steam Dye works. Improvements will be made in several departments of the business. L. E. Larsen, the new hardware man on Broadway opposite the Commercial hotel, is fast getting his store in such shape that he will soon be ready to supply customers with everything in his line.

G. A. R. DANCE.

The Veterans Give the Citizens of Crookston a Chance to Enjoy Themselves.

Some time ago the old soldiers decided that as George Washington was a great soldier it would be fitting for them to celebrate the anniversary of his birthday. They attacked the subject with their well known vigor and the result was that victory crowned their efforts. The public responded liberally, and enough was cleared to go a long way toward paying off the debt on the G. A. R. Hall. Nearly 200 tickets were sold.

Early in the evening strains of music came from the store just vacated by the Bjoin Hardware company, for it was in this room that the gay dancers merrily tripped the light fantastic toe. Riggs orchestra furnished the music in time with which a large number of Crookston's society people whirled and whiled away the hours. Midnight lunch was served in the restaurants.

At the G. A. R. hall itself other entertainment than dancing was furnished so that the veterans of the sixties really kept open house in two different parts of the city.

The dance hall was very prettily decorated with the red, white and blue. Everything went off in fine style, everyone enjoyed himself and the old soldiers themselves were very happy smiles.

Buried Beneath Millwood.

It is reported that a farmer, who lives south of Crookston, was driving past the sawmill in South Crookston recently he thought he heard a cry for help. Upon approaching a pile of mill wood he discovered the foot of a man sticking out. When this man was extricated he could merely say, pointing to the pile, "He's there." Help was secured at the mill and beneath the wood another man was found, this one in an unconscious state. He, however, soon regained consciousness. It was a narrow escape for both of the men. The mill wood had in some way fallen on them when it was impossible for them to get out of the way.

Broadway Bridge.

The new bridge on Broadway leading over to South Crookston is completed and was inspected last Saturday by J. O. Bohland of St. Paul, who was here as the representative of the chief bridge engineer of the Great Northern, who had agreed to inspect the bridge. The bridge was built by the county and city together the former paying $4,500 and the latter $1,515. The main span is 200 feet long and there are two girder spans of 30 feet each, making the bridge 270 feet long.

REUNION OE ODD FELLOWS

ODD FELLOWS.

An Enthusiastic Meeting held at Grand Forks—100 Visiting Brothers.

A special meeting of the Odd Fellows' lodge, of Grand Forks, was held last Monday night to which the Odd Fellows from Crookston, Larimore, Emerado and Gilby were invited. These towns accepted the invitations and large delegations went from each place, Crookston's quota numbering twenty-five. The work in the initiatory degree was performed by the Crookston team and they were the recipients of many compliments on their perfect team work. A banquet followed the ceremonies. Our contingent speak in terms of the highest praise of the hospitality and entertainment furnished by the Grand Forks lodge. The Crookston boys took along with them a doctor, a judge, a sheriff, and deputy and an undertaker and notwithstanding this they all arrived home safely.

The following were those from Crookston who attended: J. Lusian, J. J. Creamer, M. C. Moore, Wm. Powers, Dr. Just, Dan McKinnon, Judge Holt, Wm. Bloom, J. W. Sanden, Geo. McLean Jr., F. A. Hedford, J. F. Hawkins, A. C. Schmidt, A. Lefever, R. B. Gates, M. Losey, Thos. Lawrence, A Bush, John Gudgeon, George Young, C. S. Chesterman, Ed. Martin, Carl Riedsel, John Crawford and G. W. Sebastian.

Use of the Canteen Forbiden.

The following order was published last week:

After mature deliberation the department has decided that, for the best interest of the service the sale or issue to enlisted men of malt or other alcoholic liquors on board ships of the navy or within the limits of navigation be prohibited.

Therefore, after the receipt of this order commanding officers and commandants are forbidden to allow any malt or other alcoholic liquors to be sold to, or issued to, enlisted men, either on board ship, or within the limits of navy yards, naval stations or marine barracks, except in the medical department.

Philippines a Trust.

President McKinley in a great speech at Boston last Thursday on the Philippine question said: "The Philippines, like Cuba and Porto Rico, were intrusted to our hands by the war, and to that great trust, under the providence of God and in the name of human progress and civilization, we are committed. It is a trust we have not sought; it is a trust from which we will not flinch.

The American people will hold up the hands of their servants to whom they commit its execution, while Dewey and Otis and the brave men whom they command will have the support of the country in upholding our flag, where it now floats, the symbol and assurance of liberty and justice.

Unalloyed Bliss.

During the month of February marriage licenses were issued to Hans C. Larson and Osta Amelia Rodford, King; Joel J. Sauve and Laura Gendron, Gentilly; A. E. Vanstrum and Olga Sampson, Crookston; Hubert Hoff and Sarah Fusch, East Grand Forks; Ole J. Lunde, Marshall Co., and Mrs. Clara Peterson, Polk county; Edward Iverson and Otilia Berger, Badger; Delbert L. Hallette, Crookston, and Lena Otto, St. Cloud; Iver J. Bergum and Betsy Maria Olson, Garden; Christ Solvik and Martha Hanson, Angus; Herb K. Lee and Lavina Larson, McIntosh.

Lutheran Conference.

The semi annual conference of the pastors of the United Lutheran churches of the Red River valley closed last Thursday evening after an interesting and profitable session. Several papers relating to church work and on theological subjects were read and discussed. Among those present were Reverends H. Skyberg, A. Johansen, J. M. O'Ness, M. Finstad, A. M. Lunde, H. Simonsen, E. B. Wollen, J. T. Bursell, N. E. Wikre, L. M. Skunes, S. O. Braaten, T. Larsed, L. S. Mæhlck, A. H. Gjore, A. Amdahrud and G. T. Krogstad.

BAND CONCERT.

Large Appreceative Audience—Varied Program Well Rendered.

"Not a seat left on the lower floor." This was the way Tom Morris greeted everyone last night when they inquired for seats for the band concert that was to come off that night. This fact in itself shows that the town highly appreciates the efforts that Prof. Riggs and his co-workers are making to furnish the city with some high grade music.

Practice! Practice! This is what the band, the orchestra, the mandolin and guitar club, and the ladies' chorus were doing for the month preceding the concert and this laudable guide work was evidenced in the music of Friday night. Varied indeed were the thoughts expressed and the moods voiced by the harmonious sounds and there were none in the large crowd of listeners that were "fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils." The band played five selections and were it not for the fact that the audience recognized that the boys could not play continuously, an encore would have been hashed on each time. The personnel of the mandolin club was somewhat changed, two mandolins and bass added, played by Mrs. Dr. Robertson and Mr. Chute. Under Dr. Robertson's skillful leadership the club is improving rapidly.

The chorus singing was a new feature but a very pleasing one. So well did the forty ladies render "Night of Joy" that the audience insisted on an encore.

This plan of developing local musical talent and letting the public have a chance to listen to the music is meeting with rare success. Two more concerts will be given in the opera house and then will come the open air concerts.

In musical matters a discordant note is unpleasant but the JOURNAL cannot help referring to the fact that those in the audience who wished to listen to the last number on the program were prevented from doing so by the noise which was quite general all over the house. Anyone who has arranged a program of any kind knows that the best is usually kept for the last and from the snatches caught of the last selection one might judge that therein was rich harmony. But no sooner was the piece begun than the majority of the audience commenced to prepare to leave. There were only seven numbers on the program and one was thus marred. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Amusement.

Hoyt's "Bunch of Keys" will be at the Grand on Saturday evening next. This greatest of all farce comedies was written by Chas. Hoyt. It was his first effort and laid the foundation of the great Senator's fortune. Each year Mr. Hoyt turns out one or more of his inimitable skits. All have been more or less success-ful but without doubt the "Bunch of Keys" is so far his masterpiece. Manager Bettner always presents it with a clever company and is continually branching it up and introducing up-to-date features. Ada Dettmer will play Teddy. We all know her and love her for her cleverness. Prices will be 25, 35, 50 and 75 cents.

Washington Service.

An interesting Washington anniversary service was held at the Congregational church last evening. Several essays were given by ladies on assigned topics such as "Washington as President," "Washington as General," and "Washington designing the flag." Addresses on "Washington's Cabinet," and "The Character of Washington" were given by men. The hymns were all of a national and patriotic character.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

A Lodge will be Instituted at Crookston next Wednesday Night.

March 1 will be a red letter day in Red River Valley Pythianism. On that date a lodge will be instituted at Crookston with a very large charter membership, over fifty having already signified their intention of joining. A delegation of 150 of the Grand Forks braves will attend, also delegations from Fargo, Barnesville and Grafton. A special train will be run from the latter place, and if Crookston lodge is not properly instituted the boys will know why.

The Grand Lodge from Minneapolis will come up in force and the new lodge will be given a send off that will keep it going for the next decade.

INCENDIARISM.

BREWERY BLAZE YESTERDAY.

Cooper Shop and Barn Burned—Firemen Fight Fire in Fierce Wind.

Fire yesterday morning early destroyed a cooper shop and barn which belonged to the Kiewel Brewery company. There was no insurance. The loss will be about $700.00

The alarm was rung about 3:30 a. m. but owing to the fact that the fire bell as it is now hung cannot be heard but a few yards away from the city hall, the first cart started out with only 4 or 5 men—soon however the firemen were there to the number of more than thirty. The cooper shop was the first to start, and when the boys thought they had this fire out suddenly flames burst from the roof of the barn which was separated from the shop by ten feet. The loft of the barn was filled with hay which of course made the fire spread more rapidly. It was impossible to save either building. Three times the roof of the brewery itself caught on fire but these flames were quickly extinguished. It was a big blaze and several buildings were endangered, particularly Collins' livery barns. The walls of the buildings burned were filled in with sawdust and large "Night of Joy" that the audience insisted on an encore.

This plan of developing local musical talent and letting the public have a chance to listen to the music is meeting with rare success. Two more concerts will be given in the opera house and then will come the open air concerts.

Y. M. C. A.

The Y. M. C. A. association of the city met Tuesday night in the parlors of the Commercial hotel, elected officers for the next term, which includes three months, discussed the work that is being done and formed plans for the future. A. H. Amos was chosen president, Mr. Clysdale vice-president, Fred McGregor, secretary and Walter Stone, treasurer. Fifteen trustees were elected who will serve during three months. Meetings for bible study are held every Sunday afternoon at one of the churches in the city. Next Sunday the Baptist church will be the place. All young men are invited.

They Wanted Free Lunches.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Orr, registered at the hotels as from Seattle, attempted to leave town this morning without paying their board bills, but their contemptible scheme was frustrated. They vacated their rooms at the Commercial hotel quite early this morning and were found over in South Crookston waiting there to flag a train. They were brought back and taken before the police court and compelled to pay their debts.

They had been at the Grand Central Hotel and had not paid Landlord Morin what was due him. At this hotel they left a valise which was found to contain several slicks of wood. They have been polishing and finishing pianos and organs and evidently think they are pretty smooth people.

Good Roads and Bridges Bill.

The bill on good roads and bridges now pending before the legislature is one that is of particular interest to city and county alike. The apportionment will be so made as to favor those counties which present the best plans under which proposed roads or bridges are to be constructed and show a disposition to help themselves. The office of county surveyor is changed to that of county rural engineer, the latter to be appointed for four years by county commissioners from men who have passed examinations in civil engineering. This change would undoubtedly be for the best interests of all the counties.

CAME BY MAIL.

Letter From Colonel Ames at Manila to Governor Lind.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 21.—Governor Lind has received a letter from Colonel Ames of the Thirteenth Minnesota at Manila, written about three weeks before the insurgents began the fighting. Colonel Ames writes that at that time the relations were strained, but hoped that trouble would be avoided. He says that the natives want the United States to hold the coast cities and to establish a protectorate over the islands. Even at that time the Filipinos were so threatening that the United States army found it necessary to strengthen the outposts and reserves and to take precautions against surprise.

PORT WASHINGTON'S FIRE.

Wisconsin Chair Company Plant Was Totally Destroyed.

PORT WASHINGTON, Wis., Feb. 21.—The fire which totally destroyed the plant of the Wisconsin Chair company is covering three blocks, and leying waste three additional squares was finally brought under control shortly before 8 o'clock a m. The loss to the chair company will be about $300,000, fully covered by insurance. The loss to other property will amount to about $50,000, partially covered by insurance. The small losses were sustained by about 30 or 40 individuals.

The Wisconsin Chair company was the largest manufacturing concern in the town and gave employment to about 900 men. The fire started in the veneering department from some unknown cause, and spread with such alarming rapidity that the big 4-story building, covering an area of 50x80, was soon reduced to ashes. The lumber yards and warehouses adjoining were well stocked and furnished good food for the flames.

"Come There, Sir."

It was during evening "prep." Jones minor was always getting into mischief, and the master had his eye on him in consequence.

"Jones minor, you're talking," said he suddenly.

"Yes, sir," replied Jones, meekly.

"What were you saying?" Pause. "Why don't you speak? What was it you said?"

"Come here and I'll tell you, sir," answered Jones.

We stared aghast at our companion, and wondered what would happen next. The master looked as if he had not heard right.

"What did you say?" he said, slowly.

"Come here and I'll tell you sir," ventured Jones again.

We were on the tiptoe of expectation. Such daring as this was unparalleled, even for Jones. The master rose from his chair. His anger was terrible to see.

"Leave the room!" he thundered, striding toward the trembling culprit.

"Why, sir?" faltered Jones.

"Why, sir?" muttered the irate pedagogue. "When I ask you what you were talking about you ask me to come to you and I'll tell you! Why, indeed!"

"Yes, sir. But that's really what I did say," the boy replied. "Mobbs asked me what the exercise was, and I said, 'Come here and I'll tell you.'"

Then the band played.—Buffalo News.

A Siamese Swell.

One of my neighbors was an interesting creature, and evidently well pleased with himself. He wore long finger nails, and seeing me look at him upward cut his left hand, evidently for my admiration. On the fourth finger he wore a large Chinese ring, and all the nails were long, particularly those of the fourth and fifth fingers, which had grown to a length of at least an inch. They looked like huge claws, especially when he tried to pick up anything from the seat. The owners of such nails regard them with extreme satisfaction and cultivate them so carefully that they sometimes attain a prodigious length.

They are largely affected by Siamese and Chinese clerks who fancy themselves exquisites. They are supposed to illustrate the fact that their owners do no manual work. Curiously enough, in order of a place as Mexico, the same idea exists, but there it is generally confined to the little finger. I do not know what else he had to be proud about unless it was his right leg, which was elaborately tattooed above the knee. He was dressed in only a panung, and to a cord around his waist was attached a wallet for his tobacco, betel nut, etc. He also carried some dust wrapped in a piece of green plantain leaf.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Climate and Consumption.

I am in favor of treating tuberculous patients near their homes and in the same or nearly the same climate as that in which they will have to live and work after their restoration to health. My reasons for advocating such principles are founded on the experiences of all modern phthisio-therapentists, who have demonstrated that the hygienic and dietetic treatment in special sanitariums is feasible and successful in nearly all climates.

I know from personal observation that cures of pulmonary tuberculosis effected in con-ordinary home climates, which are on the average not considered as especially favorable to this class of sufferers, have been more lasting and more assured than cures obtained in more genial climes.

And, with all due deference to the opinions of others, I do not believe there exists any climate which has a special curative quality for any form of pulmonary tuberculosis. Climate can only be considered as a more or less favorable adjuvant in the treatment of consumption, but not a specific.—S. A. Knopf, M. D., in North American Review.

Didn't Lose Any Sleep.

Jenner, the famous English physician, was essentially a strong and self reliant man. He attended the princess consort through his fatal illness, he was the Prince of Wales' doctor when he held to the British throno had co narrow an escape in 1872, and he also went to Darmstadt and remained in attendance upon the Princess Alice till she died. The practice medicine in "the fierce light that beats upon a throne" is not calculated to lessen the physician's anxieties, and one who knew Jenner well once questioned him on the subject and hinted that his responsibilities must sometimes be sufficient to render sleep or rest impossible.

"Sleep," replied Jenner in his characteristic way, "I don't think that anxiety about a patient ever kept me awake five minutes in my life. I go to a bedside. I do my best. What more can I do? Why should I not sleep?"

Paper Bath Robes.

The latest use for paper, according to a German technical paper, is for the prodnction of bath robes. The material used for this purpose is somewhat thick and resembles coarse blotting paper. The bath robes made of this material cling to the body immediately after being put on, and, as the paper takes up the moisture very eagerly, the drying of the body takes place rapidly. Furthermore, the paper is a bad conductor of heat, and as much it acte as a protection against quick changes of the temperature, preventing the wearer from catching cold. Slippers and hoods are also made of the same meterial.—Paper Mill.

STATE LEGISLATURE

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 15.

The house considered the pig iron bounty bill in committee of the whole. There was apparently no opposition, though a few amendments were offered.

The senate held only one session but managed to dispose of a number of bills. Senator Somerville's Sleepy Eye bill was passed. It allows villages of 1,000 inhabitants or over to annex adjoining territory with the consent of the owners. Senator Nixon's county seat bill also passed, as did Senator Schaller's bill fixing the compensation of triers in the district court at not less than $3 nor more than $10 per day, to be paid as jurors' fees. Mr. Ahlstrom's bill defining the teachers' certificates for graduates in the course of pedagogy at the state university from the time they leave the institution instead of the date of their diploma, was passed.

THURSDAY, JAN. 16.

The pig iron bounty bill was formally recommended for passage by the house by a vote of 64 to 49. It provides for a 50 cent bounty on each ton of pig iron manufactured in the state for a period of five years and 26 cents a ton for five years more, the bounty to be 75 cents on manufactured products.

The Snyder bill, which passed the senate, authorizing county commissioners to levy taxes in certain cases, was passed under suspension of the rules.

The Greer bill for a tax commission occupied the entire time of the senate in committee of the whole. Senator McKusick had two amendments adopted, one increasing the appropriation to $3,000 and the other instructing the members to report a complete real estate tax law to the next legislature. Senator Schellhaas secured the adoption of an amendment to include personal property. The bill was recommended to pass.

FRIDAY, FEB. 10.

After a fight lasting nearly four hours the house killed the Laybourn pig iron bounty bill by a vote of 62 to 51.

Pending the discussion a veto of the sugar bounty bill was received and read.

The house in committee of the whole recommended for indefinite postponement H. F. 128, by Mr. Dunn, providing for the taxation of mortgages as real estate.

The senate spent a good part of its session discussing the Grindeland bill for the regulation of the practice of law.

Bills recommended for passage were the Wilson bill, fixing the penalties for offenses against women; the Wilson bill, to protect bicycle paths; the Schiller and McNamee bills, to put the town of Hermann and Modern Woodmen on the same basis with other fraternal companies; the Beaver bills, relating to the rules of the state reformatories; the Winsten "civil rights" bill and Brower's bill, compelling the use of Minnesota stone in buildings constructed for the state.

SATURDAY, FEB. 18.

The house by a vote of 84 to 22, 85 being two-thirds of the whole number, passed H. F. No. 160, appropriating $10,975 to pay claims for sugar bounty that have arisen under the act of 1895, over the gubernatorial veto.

In the afternoon session Mr. Roberts of Minneapolis introduced a bill to limit the operation of the bounty law both in time and amount. Mr. Roberts' bill provides that the aggregate bounty in any one year shall not exceed $70,000. In case claims in excess of this amount and there is more than one factory in operation, the bounty is to be pro-rated among the factories in proportion to their amount.

The senate held one session, most of which was spent in committee of the whole. The principal fight occurred on the bill amending the probate code so as to prevent judges of probate from practicing in their own courts. It was finally recommended to pass—32 to 20.

MONDAY, FEB. 20.

The house held a long session and disposed of 12 bills on general orders, the most important at being the one regulating the sale of binding twine manufactured at the state prison. This measure, which was reported back from the committee as a substitute for half a dozen bills on the subject, provides that the price of binding twine manufactured at the state prison at Stillwater shall be fixed by the warden and board of managers each year as soon as practicable, and not later than March 1, and it shall be sold only to farmers or actual consumers thereof, in quantities necessary for their own use, up to and including the last day of May of each year, and shall be sold only for cash or on such security as the warden may approve.

The senate held a brief afternoon session and transacted little business. Senator Miller of Rock gave notice of a discussion of the anti-reinsurance bill of Senator Potter, which led the calendar, so the calendar was passed for the day.

TUESDAY, FEB. 21.

Much of the time of the morning session of the house was spent in debating H. F. 128, by Mr. Dunn, chairman of the judiciary committee, a bill which proposes the extinction of the dower right on an executed sale. Pending which the bill was defeated, but Mr. Dunn succeeded in having the vote reconsidered and the bill again assigned a place on the calendar. When it came up for discussion Mr. Foss attacked it in an extremely bitter manner, declaring that it robbed the widows and orphans of the state, and that its object was retroactive in defiance of all constitutional provisions.

Interest in the sugar bounty veto was so intense that no attention was paid to the usual business, and when the time came for the presentation of bills no one bill came up. The bill was passed over the veto by a vote of 46 to 16.

CHAPTER X.

As has been said before, the time that some women—indeed some of the women of both sexes—select to tell a fellow the news that is bound to hurt and sting and worry him most is when he is utterly nearly knocked out and therefore easiest got from under. In the excitement of the moment, in her righteous indignation and in the sexual consciousness of the justice of her sacred cause Miss Maynard had quite forgotten, or at least ignored, the doctor's parting admonition, and the fatal words were said. She knew now that she must prove her words or lose her cause. It was no longer a question of how much Archibald might be fretting or how great might be his excitement. He had heard just so much that nothing would satisfy him but the truth and the whole truth as known to her. She must face the music and give her authority for the statement or her last hold on her brother's trust was gone.

There he stood, grasping the back of the chair, swaying a little from weakness and shock, staring at her with his fine, bright eyes, now so full of misery and inscrutability and challenge. His face was almost ashen. He choked as at last he spoke:

"He may have been an admirer—any man might, but you—you say her lover. That, too, he may have been before his breakdown. That is no disgrace to her. She is helping him for what he was, not for what he is." And still he gazed imploringly. So many years he had hung upon that sister's words and never doubted her. "You cannot mean—there is anything between them—that—that!"

"I mean that she would follow him tomorrow if it were not to jail, and that she loves him yet."

For a moment all was silence except that he was breathing hard. "You have your proofs, of course," he said. "Go on."

"Not tonight, Ronald," she pleaded. "The doctor said—"

"Never mind what the doctor said—that I was not to be agitated, I suppose, so though I was among hysterical women. Go on, I say. You can't agitate me any more than you have, and I want to get to the bottom of this at once. Who is your authority? Don't quote Mrs. Farrow. That will be too ridiculous."

But fortune came to her aid. There was a sudden ring at the gong bell on the hall door below. The servant had retired. Mrs. Stannard was still at the Barrys', next door. Miss Maynard had to go down and answer the summons. It was the orderly from headquarters.

"Dispatches still coming in, miss," he said, "and here's one for Mrs. Stannard."

"She's next door— Oh, but wait," said Miss Maynard, a sudden thought occurring to her. "It may disturb Miss Baird if you go there and ring. Have you anything for Mrs. Barry? I can take both."

"Yes, ma'am," was the answer as the young soldier searched through the packet of brown envelopes in his hand.

"I'll be back in a moment, Ronald," she called up the stairs. Then leaving him alone, anguished, humiliated and miserable, Miss Maynard took the dispatches, and tapping lightly at the door of the neighboring quarters opened and let herself in. Mrs. Stannard met her on the parlor.

"I took these from the orderly," whispered Miss Maynard. "It seemed better that I should come in with them than that he should ring."

But with brief apology Mrs. Stannard had already torn open the envelope and was reading her dispatch. It was from the major, of course, penciled after the long morning of excitement and sent in to the railway by a courier, galloping back with dispatches. It contained merely a few reassuring words: "All well, burning a few casualties already reported. We will be strongly re-enforced tomorrow."

Then the major's wife glanced up at her guest. "Mrs. Barry has just dropped off into a doze," she whispered. "I feel sure her message is to the same purport as mine, and that I ought not to rouse her. She can read it by and by. How is Mr. Maynard tonight?"

"He is very much excited," was her reply. "All these rumors from the front make him eager to join his command, and I cannot keep him quiet or content. And—your other patient?" she continued, with an upward glance.

"Poor child! She is badly shaken. Mrs. Freeman is sitting with her and striving to soothe her, but she was wide awake awhile ago and very nervous and wretched. I fear she will have little or no sleep this night. Now do not sit up for me, Miss Maynard. Leave the door on the latch, and I'll come in quietly by and by. I shall stay here until after midnight. Mrs. Freeman must go home presently. She cannot stay away from her children all night, you know."

"Oh, I should be most glad if I could be of service—either with Mrs. Barry or with—with Miss Baird," faltered Miss Maynard presently. "Ronald really doesn't need me at all."

"It is very kind of you," was the courteous answer, "but everybody realizes your first duty is to your brother. Is there anything he fancies tonight? You know when to find everything we have, so I can depend on you not to wait to ask. Just help yourself."

And then Mrs. Stannard stood as though she wished to bring the conversation to an end and return to her sleeping patient, but Miss Maynard still faltered. She was fencing for time. She did not wish to go home yet. She would have to face Ronald and answer his questions.

And in the midst of the awkward pause a light footfell was heard on the stairs. It was Mrs. Freeman.

"I've sent dispatches home—some," she murmured as she joined them. "What is the news?"

Silently Mrs. Stannard handed her the open paper, which Mrs. Freeman eagerly read.

"Well, then, there must be one for me," she whispered. "Would you mind going up and sitting with Nathalie a moment?" she asked of Mrs. Stannard. "I will just hurry home and get what may have come and a peep at the children and return in five minutes."

And then from the inner room Mrs. Barry's voice, low and gentle, was heard demanding news, and Mrs. Stannard hastened to her side.

"I'll go to Miss Baird, Mrs. Freeman," whispered Grace Maynard. "Go home by all means, and do not come back if you do not feel like it. I should be glad to sit up with the poor girl I'm thoroughly accustomed to nursing."

Mrs. Freeman looked troubled and perplexed a moment, listened for sounds from above, and then said: "You're very kind. I—I think I'll be doctor's medicines are taking effect and—she is doing well off. I shan't be any time at all." So saying the little matron let herself out at the front door and hastened down the row. Grace after listening a moment slowly and softly ascended the stairs and noiselessly entered the sick-room.

There in her little white bed lay the patient, her wan face turned away from the dim night light, nervously tapping the coverlets with her slender hand. She did not turn, she did not speak as the newcomer entered. Only by the restless movement of the hand and an occasional impatient toss and sigh did she show that she was awake and tormented by her thoughts.

It had been Miss Maynard's intention to speak and explain the situation. The words were on her lips as she entered the room; but, seeing that no apparent notice was taken of her coming, she hesitated, then decided not to explain or to speak at all until somebody or something should show that Nathalie had discovered it was not Mrs. Freeman. It might be unwinding to say the least. The strange girl had never liked her, had always avoided and even shrunk from her. It might only add to her agitation and distress to find a stranger seated by her bedside.

Indeed Miss Maynard could think of a dozen reasons for silence, and so, quietly seating herself in the chair left vacant by Mrs. Freeman, she glanced over the little array of vials, glasses, etc., left by the doctor, noted that the shade of the kerosene lamp was carefully adjusted so as to protect the invalid's eyes from the light and then began a quiet study of the little room and its simple furnishings.

It was very like the one she herself occupied at the Stannards', next door. The two major were quartered in one big frame house with a cozy wall, the hallways being on the outer side and the house itself divided midway into those in which the captains and lieutenants were quartered in that it had a little extra room at each end under the main roof outside the hall and that the bedroom on the ground floor was made large and commodious, extending from the end of the lean to crosswise to the dining room. Both Barrys and Stannards preferred their ground floor bedroom because the stairs were steep and narrow, and Mrs. Barry would have chosen it anyway, she being too much of an invalid to climb. When the Barrys moved from Fort Fred Winthrop to Russell and into their quarters adjoining the Stannards, Nathalie had gratefully accepted the second floor front as her bower and had fitted it up very prettily and lived there for awhile, as we know, very happily. Then came the episode of the pebble throwing and the bulky, burly stranger who joined them on the prairie walk, and then Nathalie had shown an unlocked for timidity. She asked Mrs. Barry if she might move into the war room, whose dormer windows looked out over the prairie, and Mrs. Barry promptly acquiesced, though it seemed to her odd that if she had been annoyed or alarmed by anything taking place in front it was even easier for some one to approach in the rear than the front window. But Nathalie said that wasn't the reason. It might only be a whim. At all events she could not there, in the back room, hear the band when it played waltz music on Sunday, suggested Mrs. Barry, with a smile. Nathalie thanked her in her heart of hearts for asking no questions and had told her no lies.

For nearly a week now she had been occupying this rear room looking out over the unlovely landscape of back yard, broken fence, barren prairie and hospital grounds. Yet so wakeful had she become, so troubled her sleep, that she had almost instantly heard the Milesian mouthings of the Empire's bonnes that fateful morning and, hearing him wrapper and slippers and almost any loose garments, and hastened down to still his clamor and protect her protegee from the possibility of a scene.

When Maynard was brought back to the post from his room at the hotel, Major Stannard had promptly placed the front room of his quarters at his disposal, as being the one best suited to an invalid, and had hospitably bidden the sister to occupy the one in the rear. She thanked her entertainers very promptly, indeed very gratefully, and told them then that just as soon as Ronald was well enough for her to leave him she must hasten back to resume the care of her father. Ronald had now been well enough for her to leave for several days, but Miss Maynard had not begun to pack her trunks, nor was there anything in Mrs. Stannard's manner, even after the intimacy with Mrs. Turner began to glow at white heat, to intimate that she was preparing for her guest. Mrs. Turner, of course, fluttered in and out as though conferring blessings on the roofless. It could never by any human possibility occur to her that she would be unwelcome anywhere, and it was she who planned the faint scruples which Miss Maynard confessed to and bade her rest assured that the Stannards were only too glad to have her stay and take care of Mr. Maynard, as otherwise they would have to do it themselves.

It was very late—nearly half past 11 —when Miss Maynard took her seat by Nathalie's bedside and began her survey of the dimly lighted room. A bureau with mirror and toilet stand was against the wall next the entrance door. A little couch extended across the north end of the room under some bookshelves. The dormer window, daintily draped, was almost at the foot of the couch. The washstand and a little mirror stood near the foot of the bed. Nathalie's trunk, covered with a Navajo blanket, was against the wall beyond the washstand, and quite a tall, wardrobelike arrangement for skirts and gowns was built against the partition between the front and rear rooms.

Everything looked dim and indistinct in the faint light near the bedside, and before seeking herself Miss Maynard had moved the chair so that instead of facing the silent patient she had the little table between her and the bed, and here, her hands crossed idly in her lap, she sat some time, glancing about the room, listening with the keenest sense, heart her exciting and troublous interview with Ronald, listening for any sound from the inside of the bedside that her service were needed, thinking of the strange array of circumstances that had brought her to the bedside of this dangerous girl, this unknown maiden who had stolen her brother's heart and lured him from what the elder sister could consider the path of love, honor and duty and all the rings vaguely wondering whether it might not be providential —if it might indeed not have been planned that she should thus be thrown into intimate relations with the invader and destroyer of all her most cherished plans—if in truth it might not have been one of the mysterious dispensations of God's providence that she should now be here given full opportunity to strike a blow for right and justice, for Ronald's welfare, for patient and uncomplaining, yet suffering at home; for Ralph, her hero lover, silent in the grave—yes, even for the beloved mother's sake, bewitched and blinded as he might be now, would he not later bless and thank her for whatever she now might do to break his chains!

And pondering with ever-quickening heart over all these things Grace Maynard noted that full half an hour had gone by and Mrs. Freeman had not returned. It was fate.

Away over at the guardhouse the sentry was calling the midnight hour. There was a stir on the lower floor, and Mrs. Stannard's footsteps were heard as she swept through the parlor under the hall; then low and cautious her voice was heard:

"Miss Maynard?"

The young woman quickly arose and hastened to the landing at the head of the stairs.

"Yes, Mrs. Stannard. What is it?"

"I fear something has occurred to Mrs. Freeman. It is time for Nathalie to take the medicine the doctor left for her—one teaspoonful in a little water from the vial that stands in the saucer. Is she awake?"

"I think so. I will give it to her."

"Thank you ever so much. We are so fortunate in having you here. I will go back to Mrs. Barry then. Don't call us up after she goes to sleep."

"Oh, I do not expect it," in the least, Mrs. Stannard! You know I've been somebody's nurse for years."

With that she returned to the bedside, and now, in her white nightdress, wide eyed, startled, questioning, Nathalie was leaning on her elbow waiting for her.

"Mrs. Freeman had to run home a few minutes ago and left me to give you your medicine, Miss Baird," said Grace presently as in soothing tone, her deft fingers the while pouring out and mixing the draft. "I hope you are feeling better."

She approached and would have passed an arm about the girl's shoulders to support her, but Nathalie seemed to draw away.

"I thank you very much," was the curious, faltering reply, "but indeed, indeed I need no one—no one, and surely you—oh, you must not let me keep you from your brother, Miss Maynard! He needs you far more than I do." She turned the liquid handed her and sank back upon the pillow, but her eyes again sought the face of her nurse. "You ought not to be away from him. I heard —they told me—he was not so well."

"If that—he is not doing as we could wish. He seems— The trouble is he's fretting and unhappy."

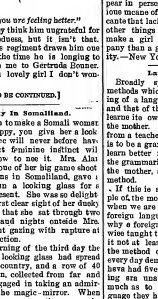
"Mrs. Stannard told me," interposed the girl, her eyes taking on a sudden light, her cheeks faintly coloring, her voice hardening oddly. "He is longing to go with his regiment, I know, and it chafes him to be held here."

Miss Maynard turned and looked at the wan, wistful little face, so haggard through care and suffering, a sight to move a woman's heart to pity but for those fatal signs—the sudden color in the soft cheeks, the almost eager light in the kindling eyes, the nervous, slender fingers clinching at the front of her snow white gown, hardly whiter than the delicately rounded throat it encircled. Miss Maynard seated herself deliberately at the foot of the bed. "Yes," she said, fixing her eyes on the dim night light, "and there are other things, poor boy."

The other white hand stole to the girl's throat and covered her eyes, but she remained silent. Presently Miss Maynard continued, speaking in the professional phraseology she had learned in young lady days, "You see, it is very hard for a young man like him to know that the object of his affections is lying ill at home and all through anxiety on his account."

The white hand at the throat had ceased its restless toying, but the heart beneath that snowy bosom was beating tumultuously.

"Indeed I suppose," said Miss Maynard diffidently, "I ought not to speak of it to a comparative stranger, but everybody here has been so kind to him



"I hope you are feeling better."

—perhaps they think him ungrateful for all Uncle Sam has done for him. Duty with his regiment drawn him one way, but all the time he is longing to be with you. I'm sorry Colonel Belle's such a lovely girl I don't wonder."

Vanity in Somaliland.

If you want to make a Somali woman absolutely happy, you give her a looking glass. She will never before have seen one, as the Somali is indifferent to reach her bow to see it. Mrs. Alan Gardner, on one of her big game shooting expeditions in Somaliland gave a native woman a looking glass for a wedding present. She was so delighted at with the first clear sight of her dusky countenance that she sat through two entire days and nights outside Mrs. Gardner's tent gazing with rapture at her own reflection.

On the morning of the third day the fame of the looking glass had spread through the country, and a rover of 40 Somali women, collected from far and near, was engaged in taking an admiring gaze. When magic carrion Mrs. Gardner came on the scene, she was greeted by 40 feminine Somali voices, each proclaiming each beholding for a looking glass "all to herself." But, alas, for the limitations of a sporting outfit, the dusky belles were obliged to content themselves with the one communal mirror. And the woman with the looking glass remained over many weeks the most important person in Somaliland.—London Illustrated News.

Why He Liked Him.

The barber was perhaps a trifle more than usually talkative, but his customer was scarcely in a good humor. The portly gentleman had come straight from a heated political fight, and the result of this little fact the knight of the razor opened fire. He discussed the weather, horseflesh, politics, his rival in her opposite, and was just explaining his views on the education question when the barber interrupted him with:

"Where's that assistant of yours, the man with the red hair?"

"He's left ma sir. We parted last week—on friendly terms, you know, and all that, but—"

"Pity!" growled the portly gentleman. "I liked that young fellow. There was something about his conversation I thoroughly enjoyed. He was one of the most sensible talkers I ever met, and—"

"I'll excuse me, sir, but there must be some mistake," gasped the astonished barber. "If you remember, poor Jim was deaf and dumb."

"Just so. Just so," was the curt reply. "That's why I liked him."

And the barber went on shaving.—Pearson's Weekly.

A fatiful German son advertises in the Leipsic Tagoblatt: "Marriage—I seek for my father, a strictly respectable man with a quiet business, an elderly, solitary widow or maiden with some property in cash. Address, with a statement of conditions, ——."

He Was Mistaken.

An English literary man who visited this country to lecture frankly declared that he came not expecting to find accurate scholarship among Americans, especially on purely literary subjects, adding affably:

"You have been too busy and useful a nation in practical matters to give much time to the arts and graces of learning."

During the dinner at which he made the remark he criticised Shakespeare, sharply declaring that his metaphors often were absurd. "As, for example," he said, "'Sleep that knits up the ravelled sleeve of care.' How ridiculous to figure sleep as knitting up a torn sleeve of a coat!"

A young American sitting near him said modestly: "I think the word is not sleeve, but sleave, the thin fluff of a damaged web. It is a technical expression among weavers."

"In the States probably!" retorted the critic tartly. "Shakespeare never could have erred here. He meant sleeve."

"I believe," persisted the American gently, "the word is spelled sleave in all the old editions. It is not an American week, but has been used for centuries by weavers in Scotland and the north of England."

The author frowned and then with English frankness said, laughing: "Thank you; I was mistaken. Perhaps I am mistaken about other things and will be corrected before I leave your shores."—Youth's Companion.

The Test of Perseverance.

Many girls are employed at the Western Union Telegraph company's main office in filing dispatches and other work requiring no great skill. Now, although they get only the current wages of workers in such employments, there are always many applicants for every vacancy. In view of this fact the company has adopted an interesting method of dealing with applications. Every girl applying is questioned as to her age, education and residence. Furthermore, her height is taken. The facts as to the applicant are then filed for future reference, and she is informed in case she is really anxious for a place to return at the end of four months should she not hear from the company before that time. The reason for this advice is that the list of applications is destroyed every four months.

Many applicants never come a second time. Some, however, come a second, a third or even a fourth time, and, although the officers of the company hold out no special hope to any applicant, they do say that here, as elsewhere, perseverance often succeeds. One requirement that the applicant shall appear in person each time is an ingenious means of weeding out those applicants that lack the perseverance, which, other things being equal, is likely to become a girl more useful to the company than a girl with less of that quality.—New York Sun.

Language Study.

Broadly speaking, there are two methods which are used for the teaching of a language—that of the mother and that of the grammarian. The child learns his own or mother tongue from the mother. It learns a foreign tongue from a teacher, whose highest ambition is to be a grammarian. Does the child learn more from the mother or from the grammarian? Without doubt, from the mother, according to the mother method.

If this is so, must we use the example of the mother or of the grammarian when we are to begin the teaching of a foreign language? Is there any reason why a foreign tongue should be otherwise learned than the mother tongue? Is it not at least worth the trouble to try the method of the mother, when of all every day demonstrated that pupils who have had five, six, seven years of teaching have been unable, on leaving school, so much as to understand when the language they have been studying is used in conversation?—Charlotte Taylor in Popular Science Monthly.

Curiosities of Our Calendar.

There are some curious facts about our calendar. No century can begin on Wednesday, Friday or Sunday. The same calendar can be used every 20 years. The century begins on the same day of the week as January, April as July, September as December. February, March and November begin on the same days. May, June and August always begin on different days from each other and every other month in the year. The first and last days of the year are always the same. Those rules do not apply to leap year, when comparison is made between days before and after Feb. 29.

The Wheel.

An eminent German physician declares that as long as a bicyclist after a long tour has a good appetite, does not feel a desire to go to sleep at once and is not annoyed by heavy dreams on the night following he may consider, that he has not made too great a demand on his physical resources.

The Arabic Alphabet.

The Arabic alphabet has 29 letters, but when written in combination with others, according as it stands alone or, in combination with other letters, at the beginning, middle or end of a word. To learn the alphabet, therefore, means to memorize 4x29=116 different signs.

The ATLANTIC MONTHLY

NO American agency of public information and intellectual guidance has done higher service in this most momentous period of national transition and opening of a new world epoch than THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY. In its point of view and treatment of events of the first national importance, it has stepped into the vacant place of a political review of clear insight, high purpose, wide knowledge, and bold conviction. It is doing for America some part of the work the serious political reviews always have done for Britain, and which it is the often baffled aim of the "Deux Mondes" to do for France. The time has now come for wide public attention to the illuminating discussion of which it is the medium.—From the New York Commercial Advertiser, Nov. 29, 1888.

The announcements for 1889 are of a variety, interest, and value greater than ever before. Upon receipt of ten cents a sample copy of THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY will be sent, together with an prospectus for the c

Official Paper of the City of Crookston.

THE testimony so far given before the Emhalmed Beef investigating commission does anything but endorse the cocchineous of the war investigating committee.

AMERICA is gradually raising the stars and stripes over the various islands of the Phillippines. Dewey and Otis are proving themselves powers in that land.

THE North American Review one of the oldest and most reliable magazines in the country, has been sold by Lloyd S. Bryce and David A. Monroe to George B. M. Harvey.

A BILL has been reported favorably to the senate providing that nothing but state stone shall be hereafter used in constructing the exteriors of public buildings. This is good republican doctrine to protect home industry.

SENATOR GRINNELLAND'S commission bill has not anything like clear sailing. The commission men are up in arms against it and consider that it is an insult to them. Their business they say will be ruined if the bill passes.

THE Nicaragua canal bill failed to pass the national house of representatives. This does not necessarily mean that congress is opposed to the building of an inter-oceanic canal. The government simply cannot bear the expense at the present time.

TWENTY-ONE of the democratic editors of the state have formed a Reform Press association. They declare themselves as in sympathy with the principles championed by Mr. Bryan during the last campaign. They are, however, leaning on a broken reed.

SENOR RIOS, who was chairman of the late Spanish commission at Paris, has been forced to resign the presidency of the Spanish senate because he defended the peace treaty. This is a case of where faithful work is not appreciated. No wonder Spain is retrograding.

A REPRESENTATIVE has introduced a bill into the legislature in Wisconsin the object of which is to prevent light lasting. Of course it was referred to the committee on health which has great stay-ing powers. We understand that the favorite hook of the above mentioned law maker is Cooper's, "The Dear Slayer."

"DRIVEN back to Eden" is the heading in the Grand Forks Herald of a notice to the effect that the Northern Pacific train dispatchers have returned to East Grand Forks from Winnipeg. This is the first time we have heard that enterprising town up the line spoken of as being like unto the first abode of Adam and Eve.

WE extend a very cordial invitation to C. F. Lanman, editor of the McIntosh Times, to come to Crookston and make the JOURNAL a call. We are very anxious to meet Brother Lanman. Several times have we been mistaken for him and we therefore concluded that we must be a handsome fellow and a pretty good man all around.

AS far as the editorial excursions are concerned it will do no good to have a stand-in with the editor. The editors at St. Paul last week amended the constitution of the association so that hereafter only actual editors or members of their family can go on these excursions. Any editor who violates this amendment forfeits for five years the privilege of attending the editors' outings.

THE question of remodeling the national assembly room of the house of representatives at Washington is being considered. It is proposed to take out the desks of the members and simply have the seats there, so that when the house is in session those present will not be able to go on with private business but will have to pay attention to the public business.

THE Atlantic Monthly is a magazine devoted to literature, science, art and politics. We publish elsewhere in the JOURNAL the price of subscription, etc. This magazine ranks among the first of the monthly publications. It rendered great service to the country during the past aventful year, and the announcements for the coming year show that it will, in the future be even more interesting and educative than in the past.

THE last issue of the Thirteen Towns contains an interesting and full account of the beginning, growth and present condition of Swanston's public school system. The little country school in a few years has developed into a fine department graded school and next year the sixth teacher will have to be added. Great improvements in the school has been made since the present principal, Mr. Hitchcock, took hold of the work.

THE charges made by the fusionists last fall of maladministration at state affairs by the republicans are one by one belog disproved and that too by the demo-pops themselves. The last man to be cleared is state examiner Kenyon. Gen. Pope whom Mr. Lind appointed in Keoyon's place has informed the legislature that unless there is a liberal increase in the appropriation for his department the work cannot be done satisfactorily. Yet how Lind went for Mr. Kenyon during the late campaign!

H. H. SHAUGHNESSY, of Stillwater, has been appointed by the governor as insurance commissioner and the senate has confirmed the nomination. The friends of Alex McKinnon of Crookston had hoped that this position would have been tendered him but Mr. Lind evidently thinks that in appointing P. M. Ringdal a member of the railroad commission he has given Crookston its share. It would seem, however, as if Mr. McKinnon deserved something at the hands of his party for he has twice, for the sake of that party, accepted the candidacy for state treasurer.

PRESIDENT FAURE of France, died a week ago last night after an illness of but a few hours. In the crisis through which France has been passing President Faure has exerted a powerful influence on the side of order even though he rather favored the anti-Dreyfus faction. It was feared that his death might be a signal for a revolution.but though Paris has been very much excited still the republic seems safe. The two houses meeting as a national assembly elected as president of France Emile Loubet, who was at the time president of the senate. President Loubet is a man of the people and his election is a distinct victory of those who sympathize with Dreyfus.

GOVERNOR LIND vetoed the sugar bounty bill claiming that even if it is wise to grant a bounty at all there should be a limit fixed as to the amount to be paid and as to the time during which it will be paid. The provisions, he says, are too indefinite. The bonus became very indignant over the veto and after vigorous denunciations of the governor's act the bill was passed over the veto. The legislators intended introducing a bill covering some of the points Mr. Lind referred to, but the bill vetoed merely provides for the payment of a debt incurred under the law of 1895. Knowing that the legislature expected to change the bounty law the governor apparently thought that he would make the people think that he initiated the measure. As the senate has passed the bill by a two-thirds vote it has become law.

COL. BRYAN has been in St. Paul and Minneapolis and spoken to several gatherings of democrats. His reception was nothing like as enthusiastic as it was a little over two years ago. Prominent democrats, among them the mayors of Milwaukee, Chicago and Minneapolis, though expected to speak at St. Paul, did not appear. Apparently they did not wish to endorse Mr. Bryan. As usual Mr. Bryan took several flings at England but this appeal to prejudice and passion which he used so successfully during the last presidential campaign does not take very much now. Referring to the Philippine question he suggests that in place of the statue of Liberty we put a statue of William, the conqueror, of England. This passage may show that Mr. Bryan is an excellent rhetorician but it does not give evidence that he is a sound reasoner.

WE were pleased last week to publish part of an editorial from the Hutchinson Times in which that paper urges the state legislature to encourage, by an appropriation for drainage, the farmers in the Red River valley, many of whom have for years been working under great difficulties. Such advice coming from a paper published in the southern part of the state is evidence that not all citizens in that section are so narrow minded as some of their representatives. But a distinctly different spirit from that of this paper is manifested in the state legislature quite frequently. Take for instance the discussion over the distribution of the fund for roads and bridges which fund was voted at the last election. Some of the counties feared that they would have to pay more than they received, while senators from the southern part of the state announced that they did not care to pay for the north. This spirit is clearly antagonistic to the best interests of the state. Each member, it is true, should look after the welfare of his own district and section, but he has not the less a duty to the whole state. This arraying of the north against the south is what was done in national affairs in the past and all know its disastrous effects. Good roads in the county help the business of the city and is farsightedness for the latter to be opposed to aiding in the improvement of the former. As at Washington we want national men not state men, at St. Paul we want state men not local men.

Notes From Exchanges.

Climax Chronicle: A representative of the firm of Larsen & Carpenter of Crookston, was in town today making arrangements for the opening of a machinery depot at this point.

Roseau Times: From all indications there will be quite a people into Roseau county this spring. The attraction will be free homestead lands, the Lake of the Woods country and speculators after cheap land. The year 1899 is likely to prove the boom year for Roseau county.

Grand Forks Herald: The Great Northern and Northern Pacific have offered the hockey club a special rate of one and one-third fare for the round trip to Crookston on the 22th inst. tickets good returning the next day. Definite arrangments have not been made for a match with the Crookston club, but if the weather stiffens up so the boys can practice, they will probably go over.

Red Lake Courier: The Great Northern auditors dropped in on local agent Fred Rippon, who succeeded Agent Freemen several weeks ago, at St. Hilaire, by a surprisingly early visit and upon checking up his accounts for 1 that he was short over $200, as had been several of his predecessors. Rippon is now out of a job. C. A. Drummond has taken permanent charge of the company's interests at that place.

Glencoe Register: McLeod county is willing to have the law changed so as to give the county auditor a four year term, and it is safe to say that 76 per cent of the people of this county would favor such a measure. In fact, it would not be a bad idea to make all the county officers' terms four years. It would do away with this bickering that we have to put up with every two years, and the officials would not be obliged to spent one-third of their salaries every two years in making a campaign. Make the whole shooting match four years long and be done with it.

Thirteen Towns: Erick Dahlen went to Crookston Tuesday afternoon with the carcasses of three wolves to collect a bounty with Auditor Gleason for the usual bounty. They were shot by him on the ice near his home, and they filled a "granary sack" nicely. Mr. Dahlen believes that until the law allows the hunter to take the wolves killed before the town boards of supervisors in place of going fifty miles or more to the county seat, the wolves will continue to be plentiful in this country. The new law as it is likely to pass this session, allowing the party killing the wolves to take the heads only, will be an improvement, but is not sufficient to bring about the destruction of these destructive animals in these large counties.

The March Atlantic.

The March Atlantic opens with a brief and well-considered editorial article setting forth clearly and dispassionately the present international situation, and the rights and duties of the hour. In this, as in the articles in preceding numbers, the Atlantic voices the best and highest ideas and patriotic purposes of the community in the great task of constructing patriotism which now confronts the Nation.

Dr. John Fiske in "Some Cranks and their Crotchets" details at length and most entertainingly some remarkable phases of what he denominates as insane, or more mildly as eccentric Literature, the manifestations of which are as startling in their variety and number as they are entertaining in Dr. Fiske's descriptions.

The Gary creamery has been doing exceedingly well since it started and its business has increased every year.

He Told the Lawyer.

Lawyer S. is well known for his uncomely habits. He has his hair about four times a year and the rest of the time looks decidedly rugged about the ears. He was making a witness describe a barn which figured in his last case.

"How long had the barn been built?"

"Oh. I don't know. About a year mebby. About nine months p'r'aps."

"But just how long? Tell the jury how long it had been built."

"Well, I don't know exactly. Quite a while."

"Now, Mr. B., you pass for an intelligent farmer, and yet you can't tell me how old this barn is, and you have lived on the next farm for ten years. Can you tell me how old your own barn is? Come now, tell us how old your own house is, if you think you know."

Silence as lightning the old farmer replied:

"You want to know how old my house is, do ye? Well, it's just about as old as you be and needs the roof seeing to as much as you."

In the rear that followed the witness stepped down, and Lawyer S. didn't call him back.—London Globe.

"Ark, the 'Erald Angels Sing."

Two farm hands brought me from the crowded highway along which oak and ramblins were speeding toward London's center of attraction to the quiet street in which fire and food awaited me. As I made the second term I saw, through the murk of a mid-December evening, three figures pressed close against the area railings—surely my own area railings—and from them the murk came in a treble lawl the sound of which was pierced till yet more.

The area door opened with a clang.

"Now, then, be off with yer! I'd send for the police if I could get near yer. Makin that noise! Now, then!"

"Germ! Wont yer airy window broke?" said the biggest of the trio, pulling himself up by the railings and resting his chin between the spikes.

As I entered at the gate the scurried away in fear and trembling, and cook, distracted, slammed the area door. A minute later a vacant of discord came down the street:

"Ark, the 'erald angels sing."

Where Coleridge Was Wanting.

Coleridge hee a lamentable want of voluntary power. If he is excited by a remark in company he will pour forth in an evening, without apparent effort, what would furnish matter for a hundred essays. But the moment that he is required to write not from present impulse but from sustained deliberation his powers fail him, and he believes that there are times when he could not pen the commonest notes. He is one of those minds who, except in inspired moods, can do nothing, and his inspirations are fitful and uncertain. And yet even when he is inspired he surpasses, in my opinion, all that could be thought or imagined of a human being.—Charles Lamb and the Lloyds," by E. V. Lucas.

The Bridge of Lions.

The largest bridge in existence is not, as one would imagine, the work of some famous English or French engineer. This bridge, comparatively little known, was constructed long ago, in China, in the reign of the Emperor Keing Long.

It is situated near to Sungang and the Yellow Sea, and measures not less than eight miles and a half.

The Bridge of Lions, as it is called, is supported by 300 immense arches and its foundation is 31 meters under water. On each pile of this wonderful bridge is a marble statue of a lion, three times larger than life size. The coup d'oeil of these 300 enormous lions, each one supporting an arch, is stupendous in its magnificence.

People Who Live Long.

Among the many curious things noted by the actuaries the following are a few of the most interesting. Women have a much better prospect of long life than men, and the chances of married people are distinctly higher than those of bachelors and old maids.

From the data provided by the records of various churches it has been deduced that the peaceful Quakers have most frequently received the blessings of long life promised in the fifth commandment, while the death rate is remarkably high among Methodist clergymen. Annuitants as a class live from three to five years longer than other people, and this is not due to human perversity, as some humorists have suggested. It is undoubtedly due to the lack of worry regarding the changes of fortune when a regular income is a certainty.

Although no statistics have been collected on the death rate in the civil service, where the yearly income is almost partakes of the character of an annuity, it would perhaps be found that there is some scientific basis for President Grant's cynical observation regarding this class, "Few die and none resign."—Almdee's Magazine.

A Man of Resource.

A big, uncouth looking stranger, with shoulders like a Hercules, walked into a department store late one afternoon, and, after gazing about a minute, stepped up to a salesman and made known his wish to buy a shirt. A couple of samples were shown him, and he informed the salesman that either one would do.

It was an article that sold for $1.50 and in making payment the stranger pulled from his hip pocket a huge roll of bills. He apparently counted them over in search of a small bill, but he could not find one of less denomination than $500. One of these was handed the surprised salesmen, but he arose to the occasion and sent it away with the cashboy. When the change came, it was nearly all in small bills. The stranger interrupted the salesman in his work of counting the bills by reaching for the pile and wadding it into his big pocket.

"Oh, I guess it's all right, and you give that shirt to a porter if you can find one big enough to wear it. All I wanted was the change. You see, it was after banking hours, and I am a man of resources. Good day."—Philadelphia Record.

Pathetic and Practical.

Here is a "personal" that appeared not long ago in a London newspaper:

Rewarded For His Honesty.

An English farm laborer recently went to a small store kept by an old woman and asked for "a pahnd o' hon con."

She produced the bacon and cent a piece off, but could not find the pound weight.

"Oh, never mind t' pahnd weight," said he. "Mi fist just weighs a pahnd. So put ther bacon t' t' scales."

The women confidently placed the bacon into one side of the scales while the man put his fist into the other side, and, of course, took good care to have good weight.

While the woman was wrapping the bacon up the pound weight was found, and, on seeing it, the man said:

"Nah, yon see if my fist don't just weigh a pahnd."

The pound weight was accordingly put into one scale and the man's fist into the other, this time only just to balance.

The old woman, on seeing this said:

"Why, I never seed aught so near afore! Here's a red herrin for thee, my lad!"—New York Tribune.

Had to Get Up.

Some years ago Dr. Oscar Blumenthal, the director of the Lessing theater in Berlin, had an unpleasant experience of the vigilance with which the authorities carry out their duties.

In his comedy, the "Orient Reise," one of the characters was afflicted with a mother-in-law of the most objectionable kind. This lady died and, according to the belief of her relatives, went to heaven. The prospect of a fresh acquaintance with his dreaded mother-in-law so terrified her son-in-law that he announced that, if this should be his fate, "when the resurrection comes I shan't get up."

This was sufficient for the authorities. Twenty-four hours after the production of the piece an ominous blue envelope arrived at the Lessing theater containing a peremptory order from the president of police that the lines in question should be immediately suppressed. "as being calculated to wound the religious feelings of the liege."—Paris Herald.

Some Fifteens.

In The Contact of March 16, 1754, we printed the following queer story, which our readers will pardon us for repeating. Some of them may have forgotten it:

HUNDON, Feb. 15, 1754.—This day departed this life Mrs. Lydia Pecora, the wife of Colonel John Petery and second daughter of Joseph Piercy, Esq. She was married at the age of 15 and lived with her consort three times 15 years and had 15 living children, 15 men alive and the youngest 15 years old. She hath had three times 15 grandchildren. She was sick 15 weeks, and died on the 15th day of the month, aged four times 15 years.—Hartford Courant.

A New Commodity.

"John has 6 oranges, James gave him 11, and he gives Peter 7; how many has he left?"

Before this problem the class recelled.

"Please, sir," said a young lad, "we always does our sums in apples."—London Tit-Bits.

A Woman's Answer.

Sha (confidingly)—I feel like a perfect wreck.

Her Dearest Friend (sympathizingly) —You look it.—New York Sun.

Spain has greater mineral resources than any other country in Europe, including iron, copper, zinc, silver, antimony, quicksilver, lead and gypsum.

Some naturalists are of the opinion that the whale was once a land animal and that it was forced to take to water as a means of protection.

The Power of Lyddite.

It is a very difficult problem to ascertain the numerical superiority of lyddite over other explosives. It is certainly at times more powerful than nitroglycerin, which in turn is at least eight times more powerful than the same weight of gunpowder. Further, all experience shows that its effects are spread over a much greater area than in the case of nitroglycerin or dynamite, which are intensely local in their action. It has been frequently and accurately stated that lyddite or melinite may be used as a substitute for cordite or gunpowder in propelling a projectile. Such could not be the case, however, as the explosion takes place so rapidly that the chamber of the gun would be inevitably shattered.

Probably one of the greatest advantages of lyddite is its absolute safety to handle, which we can realize when we recall its use in the arts for over a century without its powers being ever assayed. In this respect, combined with its superlative destructive capacities, lyddite approaches an ideal explosive for shells, and it is safe to predict that it will play an extremely important part in the great military operations of the future.—Chambers' Journal.

Mother Love Unquenched.

A pathetic incident which happened recently in this city shows that a strong will can sometimes do more in combating dread diseases than all the skill of the medical fraternity. An entire family, consisting of both parents and four children of tender age, was stricken with malignant pneumonia. The wife was apparently the worse sufferer, and her case was given up by the doctors and beyond hope. Meanwhile her husband became delirious and died. Everything that medical science could do had been done for the wife without avail, and after consultation the physicians decided to take a desperate risk and call her out of her husband's death, reasoning that the shock might kill her, but also might arouse her ebbing strength and assist in checking the coma which was already pressing dis solution.

The experiment was tried, and when the devoted mother learned that her death would leave her children without a protector, her mother love aroused her last energies and she not only survived the great shock of her life partner's death, but she actually recovered.—Philadelphia Record.

The Evolution of the Steamship.

When it seemed that the limit had been reached with regard to weight in the main reliance of the designer, mild steel had been so perfected as to enable progress to be maintained. The large boilers necessary to withstand the high pressures and furnish the power for high speed would have been impossible but for mild steel, and the same thing is true of the moving parts of the engine. It may be noted also that workmanship had improved, and the use of interchangeable parts for bearings, combined with this improved workmanship, enabled the high rotations] speed to be carried out with safety and reliability.

The machinery of Wampanoag, designed in 1865, was of so heavy that only 8.84 h. p. per ton of machinery was obtained. The San Francisco, one of the latest of the modern cruisers of the United States navy in which advantage was taken of all the factors for reduction of weight, obtained 16.63 h. p. per ton of machinery.—Correspondence of the Melville, U. S. N., in Engineering Magazine.

Six Months In a Bath.

Life in a bath must be somewhat monotonous, but it is quite common in the east of Europe for Mohammedan bagnios. A friend of mine was tried only in a few absolutely hopeless cases, but the results were so satisfactory that various friends of his were also now systematically treated by continuous immersion in the water.

Some time ago, for instance, a young girl was dying from a complication of various diseases. She was a mere shadow, and nothing but death was believed her under ordinary treatment. But an enterprising doctor placed her on a sheet and sank her into a warm bath, on which her head remained above water. The bath was kept constantly warm, and in it she ate, drank and slept for time she stepped out fat and strong.

In skin diseases the continuous bath is invaluable, for it can be medicated, and many hopeless cases of burning have been successfully treated in this extraordinary way.—Exchange.

Coronets.

The coronet of a duke consists of alternate crosses and leaves, the leaves being a representation of the leaves of the parsley plant. The prince of wales' blood royal also wear a similar crown. The shade headgear of a marquis consists of a diadem surrounded by four pearls placed alternately. An earl, however, has neither flowers nor leaves surmounting his circlet, but only points rising each with a pearl on the top. A viscount has neither flowers nor points, but only the plain circlet adorned with pearls, which, regardless of number, are placed on 16 crown itself. A baron has only six pearls on the golden border, not raised, to distinguish him from an earl, and the number of pearls on their tie diadem distinct from that of a viscount.

Change of Climate In Asia.

Professor Maschkeoff records the fact that observations at eight glaciers in the Caucasus extending over a period of eight to ten years show that they are steadily receding. The termini of the glaciers are retreating from 9 to 88 meters every year.—American Geographical Society's Bulletin.

She Recalled an Instance.

"Mrs. Peddicord," said that lady's husband, "did you ever say anything that you afterward regretted saying?"

"Certainly. I said 'Yes' once and have been sorry for it ever since."—Detroit Free Press.

Jim's Transportation.

Jim was "broke." However, he managed to reach Vancouver, and, walking into the headquarters office of the Canadian Pacific said to the manager in charge: "I am Jim Wardner, and I am an old friend of Tom Shaughnessy. Will you please write him and tell him that I am here broke, and want transportation to Montreal?"

Back came the reply: "Don't let Jim walk."

Jim got the transportation, and, arriving at Montreal, called at once on Tom Shaughnessy.

"Hello, Jim; so glad to see you and thank you."

"Well, well, Jim, is this really you?" Then, with the real Shaughnessy twinkle of the eye: "How under the heavens did you get here so soon, if you were broke?"

"Why, Tom, thanks to your telegram, I don't let Jim walk," of course I was at once furnished transportation, and here I am."

"Confound those operators!" with apparent severity. "It is strange they cannot get my messages through correctly!"

"Didn't you telegraph, 'Don't let Jim walk?'" interrupted Wardner.

"Certainly not. My answer was: 'Don't let Jim walk!'"—Montreal Star.

A Statue In Prison.

A certain noted artist long ago, having made a faithful bust of a sitter, found his work declined on account of its ugliness, the subject refusing to believe it was a good likeness.

"Very well," said the artist. "You deny the likeness and refuse to take the bust, and I accept the excuse."

He accordingly set up the bust in his studio, surrounded by a small, cord prison, gloomily pointed over, on which was inscribed, "For Debt." The portrait was so unmistakable that everybody in town recognized it and flocked to the artist's studio to enjoy his ingenious revenge. Soon the subject came passionately complaining of the ridicule to which he had been subjected.

"Yes, sir!" said the sculptor. "Who knows why they put he poney? There is no name upon it, and you have not openly denied its resemblance. It is my work, and I have a right to do as I will with it."

"Oh, but I will pay you the price and take it away!"

"But it has become so valuable to me by attracting the public that I cannot part with it for less than twice my original charge."

"Well, I will take it at that price."

And so the sculptor's debtor got himself out of prison.—New York Times.

The Best Way to Sample Whisky.

One of the best judges of whisky in Chicago is a man who never drinks it. He is Captain Joseph E. G. Ryan, formerly of the Seventh.

Captain Ryan is a whisky expert. He can tell almost to a day the age of any whisky submitted to him. He has him a few drops of whisky, and he can tell you the brand, the distiller, where it was made, when, and anything additional in if there is any. Blend two or three kinds of whisky, and he can tell the blend.

And he never tastes it, being strictly opposed to it all his habits.

It is all told by the smell. Captain Ryan's nose is a very sensitive organ and he has trained it with the utmost care.

"Smelling is by far the most satisfactory method of testing," he says. "If a man has a great deal to sample and tastes each kind, he soon gets so that he cannot distinguish one from the other. The sense of taste becomes blunted, and he loses all the fine distinctions.

"On the other hand, the sense of smell becomes more acute the more it is used. It becomes, and he is able to detect the slightest difference between samples."—Chicago Journal.

Hamlet's Bowl of Gruel.

George Melville, an old English actor, was fond of telling a humorous story of his own expense. He was acting Hamlet in Bristol. It was the actor's rule to take a bowl of gruel in the course of the evening, and his landlady sent over the usual refreshment from the lodgings in Queen square. She happened to bring a "new" servant girl, who was explicitly directed to go to the private door by the entrance from Bank street and then carry the gruel into the greenroom. She arrived at a moment when Mrs. Melville was "on." Being unused to the ways of the theater, she asked a man at the wings where Mr. Melville was.

"There," said the super, pointing to the stage.

The actor was in the middle of the soliloquy, "To be or not to be," when the girl advanced toward him, offered the bowl, and said, "If you please, Mr. Melville, sir, here is your gruel."

A Fortune in Cement.

An interesting story is told about a Kansas cement mill. For years near Mulvena there used to be a large tract of "smoking ground." It was a peculiar ing ground, but during and after rain it smoked, and no one knew the cause until a stranger quietly bought the tract one day and announced that he had a fortune. The cement lies on the surface and in great quantities, and is worth $10 a barrel.—New York Tribune.

A Shipwreck.

Muggins, gazing intently at a dead dog, in a resigned tone at last said:

"Here is another shipwreck."

"Shipwreck! Where?" blurted out Juggins.

"Where, my dear friend?" quoted M. "There is a bark lost forever."

Juggins growled and passed on.—London Fun.

Rat Prognosticators.

The old superstition, which has grown into an adage, that rats desert a ship in any harbor on longer seaworthy, is still held fast faith with the fresh water sailors of the great lakes. A well authenticated instances seem to justify this belief. Here is one. The Vernon was a three master which did a tramp business. Built in Buffalo in 1860, she was for many years remodeled as one of the best craft on the lakes.

Late in the fall, about 15 years ago, she rendezvoused at the harbor of Buffalo, and reloaded with packags freight for Chicago. She was about to sail one morning, when lo! just before the lines were let off one of the seamen saw a rat run over the hawsers to the wharf. In a moment another was seen. The seamen called others of the crew to see the unusual sight. Between 60 and 70 rats poured out of the ship and took refuge along the wharf. The crew refused to go in the vessel. The captain was obstinate, shipped a fresh crew and sailed forthwith. The ship was lost with all hands.—Household Words.

"Some time since I took a sudden cold and could not get rid of it. Being subject to catarrh and bronchial trouble I coughed terribly. I lost my appetite and grew poor and weak and I did not feel like work. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. In a short time the cough disappeared, I slept well, had a good appetite and I was better in every way. Last spring I was not feeling well, I had no appetite and no strength. I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon felt more like work. My little nephew was a delicate child and had a humor which troubled him so he could not rest at night. The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Bloody Baptism of Fire on the March to Santiago.

CAVALRYMEN TELL THE STORY.

Wheeler's Squadrons Led by War Veterans—The Single Highway Jammed With Troops and Orders, Orders All Along the Line—Coolness Under Fire.

[Copyright, 1898, by the Author.]

VII.

ONE of the stories dealing around division headquarters is that told on July 1, when the battle was at its height. Joe Wheeler, the Confederate cavalry leader, was in command of the Sixth cavalry, but there was something of a hitch at El Caney, General Shafter's aide went to Lawton with a verbal order to abandon the attack there and go forward to Santiago. Caney rose heights as originally intended. Some such order was sent. The story goes on to say that Lawton told the aid he must fetch it in writing; that he went to army headquarters, got it in writing and returned with it to Lawton. After that hour Chaffee's men were charging forward, and Lawton pointed to them, saying to the aid, "It's too late." The aid insisted, saying, "But I must deliver it." "All right," said Lawton. "You will have to deliver it on the firing line." And it was impossible, the charge went through.

General Chaffee, when pressed for his views about Lawton in the El Caney business, simply said, "Lawton is a lion."

Lawton started from El Caney for the position on the El Caney road heights about dark on the evening of July 1. At that hour the divisions of Wheeler and Kent were busily digging trenches on the opposite crest of the San Juan ridge. The story of Lawton's further adventures in getting into the position assigned him will be taken up after a description of the battle of Wheeler and Kent on the American left. The whole illustrates the adage, universally applicable in war, about the best laid plans going "aft agley." In point of fact, El Caney fell about a day behind time, and that threw the battle of the San Juan ridge a day ahead of time of planned.

As the cavalry division was the next in order after Lawton, from right to left, when the army faced Santiago, and was the first to come to success on the San Juan heights, its story should next be told.

In the march down from El Poso to the crossing of the San Juan, the brigade of General Sumner, then commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Henry Carroll of the Sixth cavalry, had the lead. At that time Sumner was in temporary command of the division. The strength of Carroll's brigade that day in the fighting line was about 2,000. The Ninth cavalry, colored, under Lieutenant Colonel J. M. Hamilton, on the right of the brigade, had but one squadron in the fight. It was commanded by Major A. D. Dimmick. The Third cavalry was led by Major H. W. Wessels, son of Major General Wessels, distinguished in the civil war. The First squadron was commanded by Major Henry Jackson and the Second by Charles Morton. The Tenth cavalry, Sumner's own regiment, was led by Major T. C. Lebo.

With the exception of Wessels, all squadron commanders were fighting like the division and brigade leaders, were war tried veterans. Hamilton had served in the Thirty-third New York; Dimmick in the Fifth New York cavalry, Jackson in the regular cavalry and Morton in the Seventy-fifth Missouri as a boy, afterward polishing off at West Point. Lebo served through the war in the First Pennsylvania cavalry. All these officers are born soldiers, not carpet knights.

The brigade lost many men while lying along the road before the advance began, Grimes' battery having opened on the Spanish works about 7:30 in the morning, drawing fire of shell and shrapnel, some of which fell short of the target on El Poso hill and dropped among the troops lining the road to the front. At the very beginning there was a delay at the crossings of the creeks and river. The cavalry was on the right of the road, and the men say that they crossed the Agnadores several times, and that, including the San Juan, they waded streams six times before they were lined up in the charge. In some places the San Juan was up to the waist, and at other points the water was so deep that the current so strong that some of the men had to be assisted to save drowning.

The Third cavalry, which was on the right of Kent's infantry, lost heavily in what is sometimes called "The Bloody Angle," between the Guasas and the San Juan, north of the junction of these streams. This place will also go down in the memory of Santiago survivors as "Hell's Crossing." The first man I met at Camp Montauk in the Third cavalry, Captain G. A. Dodd of Troop F, rode famous by the Concack drill, carries a long scar down his forehead, which was given him at the angle by a piece of shrapnel. A Spanish shot fired at Grimes' battery knocked over three men of Troop I of this regiment. When the brigade came to crossing the stream, it was halted, and the regiments took position according to the lay of the ground. Than men snapped their packs and left them on the back of the river. The bank in front of-fered a cover from the Spanish fire, and beyond that was a dense undergrowth.

The first order heard in this brigade came from Major Wessels to his own regiment. It was, "The Third is ordered to go through this brush!" Immediately Major Jackson's squadron deployed as skirmishers and attempted to advance. Morton's squadron deployed 200 yards in the rear as support. Major Wessels himself, "I don't see how we can do it, but we will if we can." Plunging into the brush, the men found that it was only a hedge on the border of an open field. When the skirmishers got through, they called out that there was cavalry moving across the front. That made it necessary to draw the line back.

Through the openings in the trees, Captain Morton and others saw the left of the San Juan intrenchments and Spaniards with guns at hand 600 or 700 yards away, looking at the American line. At this time the dynamite and the Hotchkiss guns in rear of the brigade opened fire on the Spaniards. The dynamite gun was choked with the first cartridge, and the cavalrymen say that the Hotchkiss gun was silenced by the Spaniards, who then turned their rifles and shrapnel upon the cavalrymen. In this plight the cavalry remained on hand and a hail, subjected to constant volley firing and to shrapnel. The officers of the brigade estimated that the cavalry division suffered from 75 to 90 per cent of its casualties around that crossing. Dead and wounded were brought there through ranks of men, only a few of whom had been under fire before. Says Captain Morton, a veteran of 26 battles, "It was enough to rattle the bravest, but not an officer or soldier left the position, except to help the wounded."

To some old soldiers it may seem strange that Santiago fighting men left the ranks to help the wounded. But that is according to the new order of things. Every man has a first aid package in his kit, and it is part of his duty to apply it when a comrade is stricken down. If it is not seen to, the wound and mortality at Santiago would have been terrible. The first aid bandage stops the flow of blood and keeps the wound clean, also giving the patient relief and hope, which conduce to recovery. In general, officers criticized the "shameful neglect of wounded" at Santiago.

The next orders this brigade was brought by aide who came to Major Wessels and told him that the brigade was to advance. They could give no definite instructions. Wessels said that he was not in command of the brigade, but that Colonel Carroll was and was somewhere on the ground. The aids discussed among themselves what was to be done, and finally agreed that the brigade had an order to advance.

The cavalry troops spoken of before as being in front of Carroll's brigade evidently belonged to Wood's brigade. In attempting to move out of the way of the Spaniards' missiles and also to find clear ground to form in the different regiments got out of line, a matter which caused some confusion to the brigade commanders. It was this state of things which led to the assertion 'that the general officers were weak at San Juan ridge. The fact is that the ground was unsuitable for forming and charging in brigade columns. Had Sumner kept well together until they started to go up the hill, when some commands deflected to the right or to the left, according as they saw favorable ground or a Spanish position to strike at.

General Sumner says that the cavalry division was ordered to take position in the road near the crossing of San Juan; that he formed line, and, being halted upon, said to a representative of General Shafter who was present: "We cannot stay here without heavy loss. We must go back or go forward." The general aided significantly, "Forward we went!"

There was no lack of fearless and capable men to carry orders to the commands through fire and blood. Colonel J. H. Dorst, the adjutant general of the cavalry division, was seen all along the line all day, and the same of Captain H. C. Hasbrouck of Sumner's staff, who was on horseback until the bill was taken.

After the aids had settled it that Carroll's brigade was to go forward Major Wessels ordered his second squadron to go forward, supported by the first, and to move at once. Captain Morton says that the majors did not take time to pass the order along to the companies, but shouted out the command "Forward!" Then the line plunged into an almost impenetrable chaparral. Again there was a cry that there were troops in front. The line halted a few minutes, and it was soon that the brush was full of troops. It appears that the Sixth cavalry, the Ninth and the Third, and the rough riders from Wood's brigade were all aiming at the same point.

Wood's brigade meantime had had experiences all its own, which must be told next in order to fill out the story of the cavalry division in its brilliant and successful dash up the entangled and rocky slopes of San Juan ridge.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Effect of an "R."

A cockney whose name was Ogton, which he, following the usage of his class, pronounced Hogtown, settled at the beginning of the present century in the city of New York, where he did business as a trader. His prefixing of the h was the occasion of a postoffice story which Dunlap, the author of the "History of the Arts of Design," tells.

Before the clerks of the postoffice knew Ogton he called day after day to inquire if there were "any letters for John Hogtown."

"None, sir," was the invariable answer.

"Very strange," said he, feeling uneasy about the goods he had ordered from England and the bills of exchange he had remitted.

One day after the usual question, "Any letters for John Hogtown?" his eye, following the clerk, noticed that he was looking among the letters beginning with H.

"Ollo," cried he, "what are you looking there for? I said John Hogtown."

"I know it, sir, and I am looking for John Hogtown, and there's nothing for you."

"Nay, nay!" shouted John. "Don't look among the hatches; look among the hoes." And among the O's were found a pile of letters addressed to John Ogton, which had been accumulating for many a week.

Secret of the Telephone Discovery.

Professor Alexander Graham Bell is reported to have explained in a lecture how he came to conceive the telephone as follows:

"My father invented a symbol by which deaf mutes could converse, and finally I invented an apparatus by which the vibrations of speech could be seen, and it turned out to be a telephone. It occurred to me to make a machine that would enable one to hear vibrations. I went to an unrist, and he advised me to take the human ear as my model. He supplied me with a dead man's ear, and with this ear I experimented, and upon applying the apparatus I found that the dead man's ear wrote down the vibrations.

"I arrived at the conclusion that if I could make iron vibrate on a dead man's ear I could make an instrument more delicate which would cause these vibrations to be heard and understood. I thought if I placed a delicate piece of steel over an electro magnet I could get a vibration, and then the telephone was completed.

"The telephone arose from my attempts to teach the deaf to speak. It arose from my knowledge not of electricity, but as a teacher of the deaf. Had I been an electrician I would not have attempted it."—Electrical World.

The Deadwhich.

Beardman was a writer of plays, ultimately fairly well known in his day. For nearly 50 years he struggled and fought his way along without meeting with any very pronounced success, each play in turn proving more or less of a failure. At last, however, he produced a play that really caught the public taste. He and the famous Slaphappy happened to be present together on the opening night. All went well. Success followed success, and applause greeted and ended each scene. At the end of the second act Beardman turned to Slaphappy and, leaning over toward Slaphappy and, leaning over toward Slaphappy—as usual, too much for his discretion, and, leaning over toward Sheridan—as usual, too much for his discretion, and, leaning over toward Sheridan—as usual, too much for his discretion, and, leaning over toward Sheridan, he's going to be a success, a complete success!"

"Ah, yes," murmured Sheridan, with a quite compassion in his voice, "too bad, too bad!"

"Too bad!" stammered his friend, completely taken aback by this grasp of it. "Why, too bad that it should prove a success!"

"Because now," retorted Sheridan, "it'll take you another 20 years to convince any one you wrote it."—Town Topics.

Vitality of Snails.

The snail is blessed with great powers of vitality. A case is recorded of an Egyptian desert snail which came to life upon being immersed in warm water after having passed four years glued to a card in the English museum. Some species, in the collection of a certain naturalist, revived after they had apparently been dead for 15 years; and snails, having been frozen for weeks in solid blocks of ice, have recovered upon being thawed out. The eggs are known to destroy as the snail itself. They seem perfectly indifferent to freezing and have been seen to prove prolific shortly after having been shriveled up in an oven to the semblance of grains of sand.

Consistent to the Last.

"If I was to commit suicide at sea," said Weary Walker as he shifted the hay band on his left foot, "I'd jump from de bow of th' boat."

"An why not from th' stern?" queried Limpy Lansigan.

"'Cause I jumped from th' stern," said Weary, "I couldn't avoid th' wash!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Reminder.

Perhaps one of the most unique ideas for causing an umbrella that has been exchanged by mistake to be returned to its owner is that of a Saugerties gentleman who has painted in bold, white letters on the inside of his earthly parachute the following reminder. "Stolen from John ——, ——— Ohio st., Bangor, Me."—Exchange.

Coconaut shells make excellent fuel. The enormous amount of oil they contain causes them to take fire at once. Many hotel keepers in England recognize the fact and any large quantities of them to mix with coal as fire lighters.

The leaf of a creeping moss found in the West Indies, known as the "life plant," is absolutely indestructible by any means except immersion in boiling water or the application of a redhot iron.

Magyar Aristocrats.

The Hungarian aristocracy has the largest estates of any nobility in Europe, and in the manner of living it leads grandseigneurs is strongly patriarchal. Their country chateaux are comfortable but unpretentious, and are hardly in nothing but the hospitality of their owners. The stranger and the native are alike made welcome within the doors of these old manor houses and invited to sit down at table like friends of the family.

If a stranger drives up to the entrance door of a Hungarian chateau, immediately and before any questions are asked concerning the visitor's business, even before the master of the house has made his appearance, a legion of servants will run forward and carry the visitor's baggage to one of the half dozen rooms always ready to receive guests. Invited or otherwise. When the Hungarians wish particularly to honor a guest, 16 or 20 courses are served at dinner, but as the latter have to be everything the utmost respect for individual liberty no guest is ever pressed to eat or drink.

"You are at home. Do as you would at home," says the master of the house as he greets you on your arrival. Living as they do, away from court and court life, these Hungarian aristocrats ask nothing and expect nothing from the sovereign, and maintain in consequence their pride, dignity and independence of character.—Argonaut.

The Magician and the King.

There is a good story told of a magician who has passed his great divide. He was a world traveled player, and his wanderings set him upon one occasion in faraway New Zealand. It was arranged that he should give an exhibition of mind reading before the king of the Maoris. After some parleying it was decided that the king himself should select the article which the magician was to discover.

The mixed reader left the room and, after a time, was brought back blindfolded, as is the custom in such performances. After some time the magician declared that the hidden article was in the king's mouth. His majesty shook his head vehemently in the negative. The magician insisted upon his point and demanded that the king's mouth be opened wide. The king refused.

The magician insisted, and the excitement became very great until at last the dusky king reluctantly opened his jaws. The article was not there. The next instant, however, the king was taken with a violent fit of coughing. He had swallowed the card article, a button, but could not, and was compelled to cough it up.

The Maoris were speechless with mirth. They did not know which to admire most—the wisdom of the magician or the heroism of the king.—London Globe.

Packages by Post.

Practically all the packages that go through the New York postoffice are examined. "Many persons seem utterly devoid of the slightest temptation to scribble a message upon the back of a photograph or the lid of a box. A written message on the latter is a matter easily seen, such as the conventional "Merry Christmas," is allowable, but, with the exception of the written word, it makes a package liable to letter postage. The whole fly leaf of a book may be filled with writing and yet, if there are no words, as, for instance, "See Page 4,' the book goes in the package to be classed as written matter.

Another common error is to put sealing wax on the kind of package mentioned in the package. Such a package is classed as "sealed against inspection" and must pay letter rates. The same rule applies to boxes that have their lids nailed or tacked on. The amount of business done by the postoffice annually is surprising. The average receipts in this department of the postoffice are $300 a day.—Leslie's Weekly.

The Market in Cuba.

We believe that there is still some market for cauls among sailors, who retain their belief in the efficacy of the membranes as a protection against shipwreck and drowning. Notices of "Cauls For Sale Within" were to be seen recently in windows in the vicinity of the docks of both London and Liverpool. At the same time also we have noticed an advertisement of a caul for sale in the daily press. It may be remembered that the sale of cauls, so far from being a very ancient custom, is a comparatively modern innovation. The witchcraft of the middle ages inclined against the caul retaining any virtue whatever if parted with by gift or sale to any but a member of the child's kindred.—London Lancet.

The Obvious.

In the meanwhile there had come among them another of the purposes of whose thought it was to eliminate the esoteric from the obvious.

"In hard times," mused this person, "the people talk of nothing but the money question!"

"Well, it is then they have no money to speak of!" retorted the unconscious humorist, thus revealing his identity.—Detroit Journal.

Onion Sprees in Bern.

An annual "zwiebel market," or onion market is held in Bern, and once a year the peasants come from far and near to purchase a stock of onions for the sweetmeats, and, in fact, it has grown to be a custom on zwiebel market day for everybody, rich and poor, to buy onions; if not for use, then for the custom of the thing.

On a Saturday night the onions arrive. Great boxes, baskets and barrels of onions line one side of the longest main street of the city, from the station directly through the bear, crowded avenue as far on the arcades extend—about a mile. All day Sunday the onions remain in the street, covered with cloths of every description, and early Monday morning the sale begins. For two days every one you meet has at least a string of onions, and one walks the entire length of the market and weeps.

A few days later come the dances. Every saloon and hall is decorated, and the young peasants, girls and lads, come to town and make merry. Every "wirtschaft" is crowded with a pushing, jostling throng of jigging and ruddy faced peasants, drinking, dancing and "shring out." There are no brawls, only perhaps parties of merry hangkins walking through the streets at 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning and yodeling, without melody, at the top of their strong voices.—Chicago Record.

Judicial a Mule's Speed.

"When I was a young man," quoth Officer Bygotte Jones, "I was a standpoint of years, I used to trade mules occasionally. One day I had a dispute with a man to whom I had sold an old mual about its speed. We were unable to agree between ourselves, so we called in an old codger who talked with a drawl and used almost as much tobacco as he raised. We stated the question to him, 'Which is the faster of the mules?' He asked to be taken to the stable and stood there watchful the mules eat. He chawed and looked, and looked and chawed. We wondered what he could tell about their speed simply by looking at them, but finally he pointed out the mual I had sold and said, 'That air the fastest of them mules.'

"'How do you know?' we asked in one breath.

"'Well,' he replied, 'that yonder ona takes two chaws to t'other's ona or of one mule chaws faster than t'other he's natural that he's a faster critter.'

"It was philosophy that I've never forgotten, and now whenever I want to know the relative speed of horses or mules I judge 'em by the way they chew."—Paducah Sun.

A Sleepy Deputy.

Under a former administration the United States marshal of western Pennsylvania sent a warrant to one of his deputies, who was at that time in a back county, for the arrest of a counterfeit. The deputy knew the man and treated him considerately. When they reached Pittsburg, the necessary papers were not at hand to commit the prisoner to jail. The deputy would not take him to a hotel, because he would have to pay the bill out of his own pocket. So he took him to the marshal's office to pass the night there. The deputy was sleepy and the counterfeiter said he was. So the deputy handcuffed his prisoner to himself and lay down on the floor beside the steam register. As soon as the deputy was asleep the counterfeiter quietly felt in his pocket, unlocked the manacle and fastened the loose end to the register. Then he took the deputy's watch and what money he had and departed.

"Where is your prisoner?" asked the marshal the next morning, awakening the deputy.

"Haven't that beat all?" he replied as he tugged at his handcuff and irritated his wrist. "Darned if I don't believe he's gi' me the slip."—Pittsburg News.

The Overture to "Tank Ready."

A man who writes letters of musical criticism for a London paper gravely declares that he knows a manager who was greatly concerned lest the music for a tank play he was putting on should be inappropriate. The director of the orchestra suggested several suitable numbers from "Lurline" and "The Lily of Killarney," but these would not do. But the manager could not be satisfied. He wanted something that should have direct relevance to the great water incident. At last his conductor, in despair, suggested in a grimly humorous moment the overture to "Tancredi."

"The very thing," said the manager. "Why didn't you think of that before? Put it down on the bills, my boy, in big letters—the overture to 'Tank Ready!'"

Editor—No, sir. I wrote "robber" very distinctly.—Catholic Standard and Times.

AS TO ARMY BEEF

MILES COURT OF INQUIRY HEARS THE TESTIMONY

Of the General and Other Witnesses Former Condemns the Quality of the Meat and Submits Complaints Made in Regard to Chemicals—Did Not Intend to Impute Dishonest Motives to Any Officer of the Army—Makes a Qualified Denial of Certain Interviews Accredited to Him.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—The Miles court of inquiry at its first day's session examined General Miles, Lieutenant Colonel Van Horne, Lieutenant Colonel Miner and Major Henry Jackson. General Miles' testimony, of course, was the feature of the day's proceedings, the other witnesses merely giving corroborative evidence regarding the quality of the beef furnished.

As indicated by a letter of the adjutant general, read by the recorder for the information of the court, the scope of the inquiry was limited to the allegations of General Miles before the war commission as to the quality of the army beef "and the matter purporting to have been furnished to the public press by the same official."

When he was asked about an alleged interview, which appeared in the New York Journal of Dec. 29, whether it represented correctly or in part what he said, General Miles read it, and said:

Always Slight Inaccuracies.

"I do not recall anything in that interview that had not been given in my testimony or transmitted in my reports. You will observe it contains a number of my destinations to some officers or my authorities and refusals to answer. It must, therefore, be incorrect in its representation."

He then commented upon the general slight inaccuracy of newspaper interviews, owing to the dependency of writers upon their memories. Hardly a day in six months had passed that an interviewer had not applied and became of the limits of the press to the army and especially the enlisted men, he had endeavored to give them such information as he thought wise and safe, but never, he said, with a view to prejudicing any one against any person or department. Finally General Miles said that he did not think that The Journal interviewer represented correctly what was said, because its contents should be taken in connection with all that was said; his silence upon some points and speech upon others.

This Interview Was Fictitious.

Then being asked about the interview from the New York Herald of Feb. 1, he said:

"I have a letter from the gentleman, who, I understand, wrote this, in which says he is willing to swear that I declined to be interviewed, and that, thinking something had been given out, he had proceeded to write what he knew were the facts."

He then pointed out that the interview was erroneous, in that where it represented him to have said that he had overwhelming evidence that the refrigerated beef was treated with chemicals, the fact was that his only evidence was that was contained in the reports of officers and statements of men who claimed that the beef had the odor of an embalmed body, that they had seen fluid injected into beef, and other indications of chemical treatment. He declared the interview an erroneous presentation of what he could possibly have said.

Admits He Used the Wrong Words.

Referring to his charges that the beef was chemically treated General Miles said his use of the phrase "pretense of experiment," in speaking of army beef was unfortunate. He disclaimed intending any indorse of fraud and said he should have said the refrigerated beef "came up on the theory of an experiment," and "a very costly one."

It was general talk among the officers at Ponce, General Miles continued, that the refrigerator beef must have been subjected to some chemical treatment to make it keep for 72 hours. Dr. Daly's, however, was the first official report.

General Miles then read a long summary of 100 letters received by him at army headquarters giving the various terms in which the army meat was characterized. These included "embalmed," "decomposed," "injected," "spoiled," and the like.

Ate Some of the Beef Himself.

He said that he should by Sept. 21 (the date of Dr. Daly's report) as about the earliest at which the question of chemically treated meat had been brought to his notice so as to command his full attention.

Colonel Gillespie took a hand in the inquiry when General Miles finished describing the preserving qualities of the canned and refrigerated beef.

"Did you, general, ever eat any of this beef?" Colonel Gillespie asked.

"I presume I did about the time we were at Ponce," said General Miles with some hesitation, "yes, I presume I did."

"Then," said Colonel Gillespie, "it had not such characteristic qualities as would permit you to detect it officially?"

"No, sir."

General Miles then left the witness chair.

ALL CONDEMN IT.

Officers Testify Regarding the Quality of Beef Furnished to Our Troops.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The court of inquiry engaged in investigating the beef charges preferred by General Miles continued the hearing of the testimony bearing upon the controversy. A number of army officers who participated in the Santiago campaign were heard. Practically without exception the officers confirmed the canned beef furnished as a travel ration and reviewed complaints about it which the men very generally made, declaring it unpalatable and wanting in nutriment.

FAURE'S SUDDEN SUMMONS.

Suffered a Stroke of Apoplexy and Died in a Few Hours.

PARIS, Feb. 18.—M. Felix Faure, president of the republic of France, died at 10 o'clock after an illness of three hours. It has been known for some time that his heart was weak, but the first intimation that he was sick was given at 6:30 o'clock, when a message was dispatched to the premier, M. Dupuy, announcing that the president was ill. M. Dupuy immediately repaired to the Elysee. All medical efforts proved futile and the president died on the stroke of 10.

The flag on the Elysee was immediately lowered to half mast and the news was dispatched to all the officers and members of the cabinet. General Zurlinden, military governor of Paris, the grand chancellor of the Legion of Honor, the prefect of the Seine, the prefect of the police of Paris and the presidents of the senate and chamber of deputies, promptly arrived at the Elysee. The report spread rapidly through the city and large crowds soon assembled in the vicinity of the palace.

WAS A SELF-MADE MAN.

Late President Faure the Son of a Cabinetmaker.

Francoise Felix Faure, sixth president of the third republic of France, was born Jan. 30, 1841, in Paris and was the son of a cabinetmaker.

He was educated at a private commercial school and was then sent to England for two years to learn the language and to become acquainted with English methods of business. On his return to France he went to Amboise and mastered the business of a currier. When quite young he married the daughter of M. Belloct, an attorney at Amboise. Almost immediately afterwards he settled at Havre as a commission merchant and he soon became a leading shipowner.

In August, 1881, he offered himself as a Republican candidate for parliament in the third district of Havre and was elected. He was appointed under secretary of state for the colonies in the Gambetta administration, formed in November of that year, and held the same office in the ministries of Jules Ferry (1883), M. Brisson (1885) and M. Tirard (1887). In 1891 he became minister of marine in M. Dupuy's cabinet and was appointed vice president of the chamber of deputies, a position to which he was several times elected. On the retirement of M. Casimir-Perier, who resigned the presidency Jan. 16, 1895, he was chosen president by 430 votes, as against 361 given to Henri Brisson, the election taking place Jan. 17, 1895.

M. LOUBET IS CHOSEN.

President of the French Senate Elected President of the Republic.

PARIS, Feb 20.—It is officially announced that M. Loubet has been elected president of the French republic, receiving 483 votes against 370 votes cast for M. Meline.

Says He Is Not a Dreyfusite.

PARIS, Feb. 20.—According to The Figaro President Loubet is surprised at the hostility of which he is object and has said: "No one has a right to say that I am a Dreyfusite or an anti-Dreyfusite. I am, that's a majority of the nation, for truth, supported by justice."

FIGHTING IN CHINA.

Clash at Tai Lien Wan Between the Original Troops and a Russian Force.

PEKIN, Feb. 20.—A serious conflict has taken place between the Russians and Chinese at Tai Lien Wan, 300 of the latter being killed. It is said to have originated in a question of taxes.

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 20.—Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, en route from Chicago to the east, was seen in Detroit while on passage in relation to the battle in China at Tai Lien Wan between Russians and Chinese. Lord Beresford informed the Associated Press representative that such a battle was what he had been expecting for some time and that the battle would shake the Chinese government more than anything that has occurred, and trade would be affected. Tai Lien is about 100 miles from Port Arthur, the Russian coaling station and headquarters in China. In and about the two places was a Russian army of from 14,000 to 20,000 men. The Chinese army in Manchuria, in which province both places are situated, consists of about 10,000 men, of whom, however, but 3,000 are sufficiently drilled to be of any use in actual warfare.

TO BE MUSTERED OUT.

All Volunteers Remaining in This Country to Be Discharged.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—The war department has issued the following statement:

"Orders have been given for the muster of the following volunteer regiments:

At Savannah, Ga.—Third Georgia; Batteries A, B, C, D, Maine artillery; Two Hundred and Second New York volunteers.

At Augusta, Ga., and Greenville, S.C.—Third Alabama, Third Connecticut, Fifth Massachusetts, Thirty-fifth Michigan, Fifteenth Minnesota, Fourth New Jersey, Two Hundred and First and Two Hundred and Third New York, Tenth Ohio, First Colorado, Second West Virginia.

"The orders, issued, will muster out about 18,000 volunteer troops, including all such troops now in camp in the United States and the Third Georgia at Knevitas, Two Hundred and Second New York at Guanajaya and four batteries of Maine artillery now at Havana. They will be mustered out at Savannah, Ga. This will reduce the army strength by 19,000 men, of whom 80,000 are stationed in Cuba.

MASSACRE PLANNED

BLOODTHIRSTY MANIFESTO OF FILIPINO OFFICERS AT MALOLOS.

It Fell Into the Hands of General Otis and Is Cabled to Washington—No Mercy Was Intended—Foreigners of Both Sexes Were to Be Exterminated Without Compassion—All Insurgents Ordered to Do Their Duty and Make Revenge Complete.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The following dispatch was received during the afternoon from General Otis at Manila:

Following issued by an important ——— ——— Sheet of Insurgent government at Malolos, Feb. 15, 1899, for execution during that evening and night in this city:

"First—You will so dispose that at 8 o'clock tonight the territorial militia at your order will be found united in all of the streets of San Pedro, armed with their bolos and revolvers, or guns and ammunition if convenient.

"Second — Philippine families only will be respected. They should not be molested, but all other individuals of whatever race they may be will be exterminated without compassion after the extermination of the army of occupation.

No Compassion to Americans.

"Third—The defenders of the Philippines in your command will attack the guard at Bilibid and liberate the prisoners and "insurrectos," and having accomplished this they will be armed, saying to them: 'Brothers, we must avenge ourselves on the Americans an exterminate them that we may take our revenge for the infamy and treachery which they have committed upon us; have no compassion upon them; attack with vigor. All Filipinos must do the second you. Long live Filipino independence.'

"Fifth—The order which will be followed in the attack will be as follows: The Sampaloners of Tanong and Sant. Ana will begin the attack from without and those bolos will be the signal for the natives of Trozo to commence. Quiapo to Sanquiche to go out into the street and do their duty; those of Pake, Ermita and Malate, from Cruz and Singalong, will not stare out until 12 o'clock, unless they see that their companions need assistance.

Revenge Will Be Complete.

"Sixth—The militia of Tondo will start out at 8 o'clock in the morning. I all do their duty our revenge will be complete. Soldiers, Filipino countrymates —. We know how to die and in shedding our blood in defense of the liberty of our country. War without quarter to the false American who have deceived us. Either independence or death."

The portion of General Otis' dispatch indicated by dashes the officials were unable to decipher.

There is no fourth paragraph in the insurgents' address as furnished to the press.

REBELS SHELLED.

Natives Near Manila Made the Target of the United States Warship Indiana.

MANILA, Feb. 20.—The California volunteers abandoned the Caloocan church at 9 a. m., which has since been fired and reoccupied by the Filipinos. The insurgents still hold the country in the vicinity of Guadalupe, Pasig and Pateros, despite the efforts of the gunboats to dislodge them.

In view of the fact that the enemy was concentrating on the American right flank preparations were made to give them a warm reception in the event of an attack. General Ovenshine's line, consisting of the North Dakota volunteers, Fourteenth United States infantry and the Utah battery, with two troops of the Fourth cavalry, was reinforced by two battalions of Oregon volunteers and two troops of the Fourth cavalry. The Buffalo's search light, discovering the about 10 o'clock in the evening, signaled the flagship for permission to fire upon them, and, this being granted, bombarded the enemy's trenches for about 20 minutes. The only effect of the fire was apparently to drive the rebels further inland. Beyond a few ineffectual volleys from the trenches the enemy made no demonstrations and all is quiet along the rest of the line.

Scouts claim to have seen General Pio de Pilar, who commanded the rebels at Paco, with his arm in a sling directing the troops. Colonel Hernandegro, the insurgent commander-in-chief, is reported to be personally commanding the movements in front of General King's line at San Pedro Macati.

With the exception of the port of Iloilo trade with Philippine ports is still blockaded.

FLAG RAISED ON NEGROS.

One Philippine Island Adds American Protection.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The war department has received the following from Manila:

"General Miller reports that the insurgent forces few miles out from Iloilo believed to be disintegrating and maintain his position with present force. Business in city being restored. He has sent up four representative men, officials of capital of island of Negros, where American flag raised and American protection required against small insurgent force in islands. Affairs there and in Cebu very encouraging. Shall endeavor to maintain and improve present promising conditions. Affairs here quiet. Small insurgent force east of city driven away with considerable loss to enemy."

SERIOUS DIFFERENCES.

High Joint Commission Adjourns for Several Months.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—The American-Canadian joint high commission, after a brief session, adjourned to meet in Quebec, Aug. 2, unless the chairmen of the respective commissions agree upon another date.

The commission first began its labors nearly six months ago in Canada and has, with the exception of probably a month, been earnestly at work, endeavoring to accomplish the object for which it was appointed, an agreement with a view to the formation of a treaty covering the many perplexing questions of difference affecting the business interests of the United States and Canada existing between them. There were several reasons which prompted the adjournment. From a statement made public with the sanction of the two commissions it appears there were between them regarding the important matter of the delimitation of the Alaskan boundary, the Canadians in this connection being anxious to obtain a seaport on the Lynn canal, so that its shippers would not be subjected to the petty annoyance which they asserted they experienced at the hands of United States officials. Then the time for the meeting of the Canadian parliament, at which the presence of members of the commission from that country is overdue, and the latter are anxious to return as soon as possible. It also became apparent that there was little likelihood of the possibility of the ratification by the United States senate at this session of any treaty that might be framed, which also probably figured in the decision to adjourn. A dozen important questions were referred to the commission for its consideration, and the commissioners assert that substantial progress in the

of many of the questions had been made. Probably those very items have given the most serious trouble and caused a stumbling block to an agreement on all have been the two relating to lumber and the Alaskan boundary question, on both of which the Canadians have demanded concessions which the Americans felt it would be prejudicial to the best interests of the United States to grant.

A prominent member of the commission said that the postponement was not to be considered a rupture of negotiations, though there seemed no present prospect of agreement on main points.

COVERED THREE BLOCKS.

Wisconsin Chair Factory at Washington, Wis., Destroyed by Fire.

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 20.—A Sentinel special from Port Washington, Wis., says that a fire which started in the dry kiln of the Wisconsin chair factory reduced that plant to ashes. The loss to the chair factory is $350,000, insured for $200,000 or less. The loss to the lumber property is estimated at $30,000. The plant of the chair factory company covers about three blocks and employs about 600 hands.

A Painter of Children.

A writer in The Century tells how the noted French artist, M. Boutet de Monvel, became a painter of children's portraits:

De Monvel's illustrations are full of atmosphere and an exquisite feeling for the out of door world. The fine effects of light and shade, the cast and composition of these pictures place them far beyond any others of their class. And precisely them the work of a consummate artist. Boitet de Monvel spoke to the children of France as they had never been spoken to before. Bending over the bewitching pictures they exclaimed, "Ah, he understands!" And the fathers and mothers, looking over the little ones who read and enjoyed the pages over which they bent, saw at once that here was a painter with a new and rare faculty for comprehending children. Naturally Boutet de Monvel to paint their sons and daughters, till he became, one might say, "painter in ordinary" to the children.

State Officials Paid in Pelts.

Probably few people know now that the original name of the state of Tennessee was Franklin, or that in 1788 the salaries of the officers of the commonwealth were paid in pelts. hat the following is a correct copy of the law:

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Franklin, and it is hereby enacted by authority of the same, that from and after the first day of January, 1788, the salaries of this commonwealth be as follows—to wit:

His excellency the governor, per annum, 300 raccoon skins.

His honor, the chief justice, 250 raccoons.

The secretary to the excellency the governor, 200 raccoon skins.

County clerk, 200 beaver skins.

Clerk of the house of commons, 200 raccoon skins.

Members of the assembly, per diem, 3 raccoon skins.

Justice's fee for serving a warrant, 1 muskrat.

Difference Between Them.

"After all," said the bachelor, "the difference between love and dyspepsia is largely a matter of time with them only. One is future and the other past."

"How do you mean?" asked the bewildered maid.

"The lover doesn't want to eat, and the dyspeptic wishes he hadn't," answered the bachelor, cheerfully thinking he had scored one on the sex that was continually disturbing his peace of mind.—Chicago Post.

Depends.

"Thomas, how would you correct the sentence, 'He laid down on this lounge'?"

"I wouldn't correct it at all, ma'am. It's all right."

"How do you make that out, Thomas?"

"He was carryin an armful of down, ma'am, and he laid it on the lounge."—Chicago Tribune.

FOR GOOD ROADS.

A Bill Now Pending Looking to the Improvement of the Country Roads.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION

To Have Control—County Rural Engineers to be Appointed by County Commissioners.

A state road and bridge bill has been drafted at the legislature. There are six titles. Provision is made for the levying of a state tax of five hundredths of a mill to be used in improving the state highways. A state highway commission, composed of three members, is to be appointed by the governor for three years. The commission elects a secretary whose whole time will be given up to the work. He will have to be a practical civil engineer, and upon him will devolve a great deal of the work. The appointments will be so made as to favor those counties which present the best plans under which the proposed road or bridge is to be constructed, and show a disposition to help themselves in providing money to make improved roads. This last is an excellent provision. If a county has not enough interest in its own welfare to be willing to do something for itself the state will not aid such a county very much. All applications from counties for state roads will be made to the state highway commission, the latter through its secretary furnishing to the counties any needed information. The county rural engineer shall superintend the construction of the state roads in the various counties. The county commissioners may issue bonds to defray the expenses of viewing, locating, etc., any road. Any road constructed under the provisions of this act shall be maintained by the county. The elective office of county surveyor is to be abolished, after Jan. 1, 1901, and the county commissioners at their first meeting after the expiration of the term of office of the present incumbent of the office of county surveyor shall choose a county rural engineer who shall hold office for four years, such rural engineer to be chosen from among the list of names submitted to the board of county commissioners by the state highway commission as having passed such an examination entitling them to practice land surveying, road engineering, bridge engineering, drainage engineering and irrigation engineering, as in the opinion of said state highway commission the condition of the respective counties may require. These provisions with reference to the county rural engineer are along the right line. It takes the office out of politics. None but competent engineers can be appointed, for a list is furnished each county and the men whose names will be on this list will have passed an examination in engineering. As the county engineering will have charge of all surveys for highway and bridge improvements, for drainage improvements and for irrigation improvements, it will certainly be for the best interests of the counties that only competent engineers be appointed. The lengthening of the term is also a change in the right direction.

The matter of good roads and bridges is one in which the farmers are particularly interested and what benefits the farmer, in the end benefits those in the towns and cities. In the building of these roads and bridges employment is furnished to many. The farmers, too, can market their grain to better advantage when the roads and bridges are in first class condition. It is an equitable arrangement as between the city and the country. True the roads are to be in the country but the interests of the rural districts are the interests of the cities. The latter depend upon the former for their livelihood and the farmer can't get to the cities to trade unless the roads are good.

This matter of road and bridge improvement starts right with the farmer. He determines what he wants and informs the county commissioners of the same. The county rural engineer then looks the ground over and reports to the state highway commission. In accordance with the provisions of this bill if good roads are built in certain places the entire expense of the improvement does not fall upon the shoulders of the farmers immediately concerned. The county and the state help.

This plan is now in operation in several eastern states, notably Massachusetts and Connecticut, and works well. Several western states have also so amended their constitutions that they can use state funds to build good roads and bridges in the country. The legislature of Minnesota will certainly act wisely if they pass this measure.

Both Sides of Commission Bill.

St. Vincent New Era: Senator Grindeland's bill, a clause of which provides that commission merchants shall give bonds should have the support of every fair dealing legislator. Mr. Griffith, a large farmer at St. Vincent, was in this office yesterday and stated that he was out a large amount on the last car of wheat he shipped, and that several other farmers were in the same predicament. Mr. James Ford has lost several cars during past years, and many others have been unmercifully bunced by commission men. A responsible farmer, elected by his neighbors to the office of district school treasurer, and who handles only a few hundred dollars has to give bonds, but a sharper can get out a few dollars worth of up to date letter heads printed, rent an office in a building with a high sounding name, and prey upon the producers of the state.

The Head of the Lakes: One of the nevvy provisions of the bill is that the commission men must notify the consignors to whom they sell the goods after receiving them. In other words the commission men are asked to tell the farmers and country dealers in produce who their customers are and reveal a trade that they have been years in building up. There would be nothing to prevent the consignors after getting this information from dealing direct with the commission man's customers. The provisions of the bill in regard to making the consignors preferred creditors (is amounts to that at least) would cut the commission man's credit in two. The commission men, if the proposed legislation is enacted will refuse to handle consignors goods.

HOCKEY GAME.

Grand Forks and Crookston Sevens Meet on Palace Rink Ice Tonight.

Tonight is the time that the boys have looked forward to for a long time. As far as the weather would permit practice has been going on at the palace rink for several weeks, and our players feel sure that Grand Forks is not going to have things all their own way. Hockey, of which there is going to be a match game at the palace rink tonight between the Ontario store team of Grand Forks and a Crookston team, is somewhat like the old fashioned shinney only in this game, as it is played with a rubber ball, there is not muchchance of getting hurt. Crookston and each skaters will play and n crowd ought to be there to enjoy themselves and cheer the boys on. Seven of the following boys will make up the Crookston contingent: Albert Halvorson, Herb Hunt, Ed. Walsh, Will Vine, Frank Vine, Doc. Rutledge, Walter Stone, Walter Walker, Andy Larsen and Bert Moore. Success to you boys! .

FARMERS' MEETING.

Will Be Held in Crookston March 16 To Organize Polk County Grain Growers Association.

Crookston, Minn., Feb. 27, '99.

To the Grain Growers of Polk County: The undersigned committee designated pursuant to instructions from the State Grain Growers association do hereby call a meeting of the grain growers of Polk county, Minnesota, to be held at the city of Crookston, Minnesota, on the 16th day of March, 1899, at ten o'clock a. m., for the purpose of organizing a non-partisan grain growers association for Polk county, and to elect delegates to send to Minneapolis in June, to co-operate with the delegates from the other counties in perfecting the state organization; also to transact such other business as may come before the meeting.

All grain growers are invited to be present, and each town is especially urged to appoint and send representatives.

THAT POOR LAW.

Crookston Simply Wants Justice in the Matter—No Attempt to Throw Her Poor on County.

BILL BEFORE LEGISLATURE

The expense of Caring for Non-resident Paupers to Be Borne by the County.

The Fertile Journal has seen fit for the last two or three weeks, to make mean insinuations about, nay more, to make base charges against the city of Crookston. Accusations, however, unsupported by any evidence whatever—and of such a kind are the accusations of the Fertile editor—have no weight. When the Fertile Journal states that Crookston is trying to secure the "repeal of the present poor law of the county so that she can throw all her pauper charges on to the county and thereby escape paying for the keep of her own people," it is evident that that paper is either ignorant of the facts in the case or is wilfully misrepresenting them. Editor George may take which over horn of the dilemma he wishes.

Crookston does not wish the county to take care of the city's poor, but under the present special law the city is compelled to take care of the county's poor and this is manifest injustice to the city. It is, therefore, with the view of remedying this evil—for injustice is an evil—that two of the city aldermen and the city attorney were at St. Paul last week.

Under the present law each township, village or city in the county takes care of its own paupers, or dependent ones. In many cases—we do say in all cases—where a man living in the county but outside of Crookston, gets hurt or takes sick, he is sent to Crookston, and the city has to take care of him. Case after case can be cited to prove this. So many transient and non-resident poor have been taken care of at the city's expense, that the bill has footed up to between $300 and $1,000. In fact the city has had to pay more for this purpose than the charter allows. Crookston, it is true, has two hospitals and better facilities for taking care of the sick than other places in the county. The railroad connections are such that it is easy to reach Crookston. These are, perhaps, the two chief reasons why so many transient paupers find their way here. Crookston is willing to pay her share of the expense incurred in caring for the unfortunate but she claims with all earnestness that it is unfair to make her pay it all. If the law passes which Crookston is trying to have passed, it will not be possible—even if the city wished to, which she does not—for her "to throw all her pauper charges on to the county."

THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL is published in the interests of Polk county and not in the interests of any particular place in the county. We wish to see fair play everywhere and it is for this reason that this paper is now advocating the repeal of the present poor law. Crookston is the largest city in this case as we think the citizens of the county will see when the matter is called to their attention.

The bill which Messrs. Childs, Harris and Montague have succeeded in getting before the legislature meets the approval of many sections of the state, as Crookston is not the only city that desires a change in the poor laws. It was shown the attorney general of the state and the secretary of the society of corrections and charities and was endorsed by both of them also so far as the JOURNAL can see no part of Polk county ought or is likely to find fault with it. It is identical with a law that has been on the Wisconsin Statute book since 1830. It was first enacted in Massachusetts in 1793 and hence is time honored.

It is entitled a bill for an act to provide for the aid of non-resident paupers. When any person not having a legal settlement therein shall be taken sick, lame or otherwise disabled in any town, city or village, or be any other cause shall be in need of relief as a poor person and shall not have money or property to pay his board, maintenance, attendance and medical aid, the supervisors or other proper authorities shall provide such assistance to such person as they may deem just and necessary, and if he die they shall give him a decent burial. The expense so incurred shall be a charge against the county board and shall be paid out of the county treasury. The authorities within five days after such person so becomes a public charge within their town, county or village, must notify the county auditor of such a fact and thereupon the county authorities may take charge of such person. Such is a brief in the bill. There will be today at St. Paul a public hearing upon this bill before the committee.

KNIGHTS of PYTHIAS.

A Lodge With Over 65 Charter Members Will be Instituted here Tonight.

A GRAND BANQUET

West W. Wooley, Grand Chancellor, and W. E. Wheaton to be Here —250 Visiting Knights.

The Knights of Pythias will tonight institute a lodge in this city under most favorable auspices. The charter list will contain more than sixty names. K. Ps. from the surrounding country within a radius of one hundred miles will be present and assist in the ceremonies. A banquet will be held at Hotel Crookston which the Knights say will surpass anything of its kind seen in this city for many a days.

Over fifteen years ago the Knights of Pythias had a lodge in Crookston but as it did not pay dues its charter was returned in 1884. Meantime many members of this society have come to make their homes or their headquarters here, and for some time the disadvantage of not having a lodge has been felt. Not long ago the idea was conceived of resurrecting the old organization and taking up the old charter, and this is what will be done tonight. Of the old charter members about twelve are still left, fifteen will transfer their membership from other lodges and about forty-five new names will be added.

West W. Wooley, Grand Chancellor, of Howard Lake, and Fred E. Wheaton, Grand Keeper of the records and seals, will be present and have charge of the formal instituting of the lodge. In addition to these two distinguished men, delegations from the K. P. lodges at Barnesville, Grand Forks, Grafton, Halstad and other places will be on hand and help to enliven the proceedings.

In the midst of the work the Knights will adjourn to the Hotel Crookston where an extra sumptuous banquet will be spread. They are sparing neither pains nor money to make this affair one of the swellest affairs that ever occurred in the city.

The Knights of Pythias will use as lodge rooms the old Masonic rooms on the third floor of the Fournelle block. The membership will include some of the best business, professional and traveling men in Crookston. The committee which has had the matter in charge is composed of J. E. Jerome, H. F. Murray and John Rasmusson.

UNIQUE PRESIDENT

Senator Davies in His Chicago Speech Paid a Merited Tribute to Wm. McKinley

Senator Davies, of Minnesota, in a great speech on "The Treaty of Paris" delivered before the Union League club of Chicago on the evening of Washington's birthday said:

The American people and humanity within the last twelve months have advanced an immeasurable distance, and its reeds. Nations, like individuals, do not shape their own destinies. As I said, we have passed a most eventful twelve months, and you will pardon me if I say here—not in the spirit of partisanship, but in just tribute to a conspicuous public character who has largely guided these momentous events—that I regard President McKinley from the supreme equilibrium of his character, from his attentive observation of the dictates of that majestic public opinion by which the results of all American policies are finally determined, by his firmness when a course of action has been resolved upon, by his observance of the restrictions of the constitution and the laws, as a character altogether unique among American presidents. I do not believe that in all the long and illustrious roll of the men who have filled that exalted chair there has been any man who has gone through processes and situations of more difficulty, testing alike the judgment and the conscience, with more success and greater acceptability to the people of the United States than President McKinley. It is enough for me and it is worth all that this war has cost, that by the intervention of processes which I have mentioned that hateful line between the north and South has been entirely and forever obliterated, and a condition of sentiment and feeling has been brought about by the fusion of an all-embracing patriotism where those who fought for the stars and bars now fight and have fought for the stars and stripes.

LIND'S PARTISAN SHIP

In Making Appointments in the Field of Educational Work.

If there is any one department of the public service that should be kept clear of partisanship and politics it is the educational department. So much is at stake here, pratically the life of the state, that men of ability and competency should be chosen, men of inspiration, men who have records behind them that show what they can do in this work.

The administration of educational matters pertaining to the state institutions should be such that local communities could copy therefrom, but it is sincerely to be hoped that none will follow in the footsteps of Mr. Lind. In appointing J. H. Lewis, of Hastings, as Supt. of public instruction, nothing like the best possible or the best available man was secured, but case was taken that a supporter of his own party was appointed. A still more deplorable instance of partisanship was shown in the appointment of C. A. Nye, of Moorhead, to the place on the State Normal Board long held by Hon. S. G. Comstock. Speaking of this the Fergus Falls Journal says:

Without saying a word against the new member of the normal board of Moorhead, C. A. Nye, there will be great regret everywhere among the friends of education at the school over the retirement of Hon. S. G. Comstock, who has been the father and patron of the school. He secured it for Moorhead, he gave the ground on which it stands, and he has devoted almost as much time to its upbuilding as he has to his private business, all solely for the pleasure it gave him to see it grow and do good to the young people of northern Minnesota. Mr. Comstock has retired from active business and for the past few years has devoted his time and found the most of his enjoyment in his books and the school which, is can almost be said, he founded. Its library, which is undoubtedly the best selected in the state for its size, was the result of his personal work associated with that of President Lord. His frequent meetings and talks to the students have been one of the distinct features of the school. His removal from the board is so great a loss to the Moorhead school as would be the removal of ex-Governor Pillsbury from the university board after a life's devotion to the upbuilding of the institution, and it is greatly to be regretted that Governor Lind could not have arisen above partisan lines and reappointed him. His removal at this time is especially unfortunate as President Lord severs his connection with the end of the year and there will doubtless be several changes in the teaching force. Otter Tail furnishes a greater number of students to this school than any other county, and everyone who has been a student at Moorhead will feel a personal loss in the change.

A Valuable Reference Work.

The Year Book and Almanac issued by The Globe company, of St. Paul, is the best work of the kind which has come to our notice. Complete in every particular, it combines history and facts, statistics and general information, properly classified and indexed in a manner which permits of instant reference. The statistics are most complete and admirably arranged for intelligent understanding. Sixty pages of the 500 which this wonderful book contains are devoted to Minnesota, and the political information is the most comprehensive and valuable ever published in this state. We hesitate to say this work the consideration of every intelligent person in the state, and we can say without hesitancy that it is valuable alike to merchant, farmer, mechanic, sportsman or politician.

The price of the book is 25 cents, mailed anywhere, and considering the amount of information it contains, it is worth fully three times that amount.

Local Land Office Upheld.

A decision in the land contest case of Mathias O. Lluden vs Alex Hamerstrand was received at the United States land office in Crookston on Saturday. The land commissioner upholds the local office which decided in favor of the defendant. The land is in the town of Winger. The history of the case is peculiar. The mother of the defendant first filed on the land, afterwards she married the plaintiff, Mathias Linden. Trouble arising she left him, and her son then took up the land. Linden charges that the land was abandoned, that there was fraud practiced and further that the defendant was simple minded.

Chief Gonyea's Clever Work Results in the Arrest of the Criminal.

GEORGE SCHNAGL THE MAN.

He Confesses to Setting Fires Near Brewery—Is in County Jail.

George Schnagl was arrested late last Thursday afternoon on suspicion of being the one who had set fire to the brewery Wednesday morning. Confronted with his crimes and told that it was no use to conceal anything further he finally confessed that he had started several fires. Being unable to secure the $500 bonds under which Judge Holt held him, he is now in the county jail awaiting the action of the next grand jury.

It will be remembered that during the past year there have been five fires in the same neighborhood, namely near the brewery,—the elevator, the Great Northern telegraph poles, the barn in the middle of the track which badly scorched a passenger coach, the Great Northern ice house and the brewery barn and cooper shop last week. Though it was very evident that all these fires were set it was difficult to locate the blame. Special Great Northern detectives were here for weeks and no purpose. It was while questioning Mrs. Schnagl, wife of George Schnagl's brother, that Chief Gonyea first came to suspect young Schnagl. The latter appeared nervous and fidgety and acted as if he thought the chief was about a matter that was none of the chief's business. Several times after this Schnagl refused to speak to Chief Gonyea when the two met on the streets and in consequence a sharp eye has been kept on him for some time.

After the fire Wednesday the police department decided that they would arrest Schnagl and accordingly Thursday afternoon he was brought before Chief Gonyea. The latter told the young man that it was useless for him any longer to conceal what he had done with reference to the fires. At first Schnagl stoutly denied having had anything to do with them but after he had been talked with for a while he finally owned up to the fact that he had set all the fires mentioned above, save the elevator blaze. He says that if he did set this one—and in addition a little shed on the 3d—he did—he does not remember anything about it. Afterwards under oath before a notary public he told the same story.

With reference to the coal fire the facts are these: He left the Cleveland house about 1:30 a. m. having first secured some matches. He was the worse for liquor. Passing the cooper shop he set fire to the sawdust with which the walls of the building were filled in and then staggered up the street. Having lain down for an hour he came out of the house and went and told Policeman Larivee that the brewery buildings were on fire. This last act taken in connection with his other actions led the police to conclude that they had at last found their man.

Schnagl is a young man 22 years old. He has for several years driven the brewery wagon, his brother having had an interest in the brewery before Messrs. Kiesel bought it. He enlisted in Co. L, took typhoid fever at St. Paul and hence did not go south with the boys. He was discharged some time during the summer, and returned to Crookston. It was noted by the police that no fires were set while he was away.

Whether or not Schnagl is regarded as unbalanced in mind he is a dangerous man to have his liberty. The sum of $3,000 would hardly cover the loss sustained by reason of the fires that he set. With regard to the last fire it is the general opinion that had it once got a good start, with the wind from the northwest, as it was, nothing could have saved a large portion of the business part of town. Schnagl was probably drunk when he set the fires, but of course that is no excuse for him. He admits that he enjoyed the excitement incident to a fire. He stands charged with arson in the third degree, the extreme penalty for which is seven years.

Telephone Poles Cut Down.

The telephone system lately completed between McCanna, Orr and Chester, N. D., was cut down last week by a force of Great Northern men. It is supposed that the Great Northern and the telephone company are at odds in regard to the right of way. The people in that country have had hardly enough time to get used to the system. The action to be taken by the telephone company is not yet known.

—One of the most interesting engagements of the season will occur on Monday evening, March 4th when Mr. Walker Whiteside will present his new play for the first time in this city. "The Red Cockade" is the title offering and it is safe to say that Mr. Whiteside will add to the host of admiring friends he has already made here. "The Red Cockade" is from the French of M. Pousard being the English version of the famous "Lion Amoureux" a powerful romantic comedy drama of the Napoleonic era. It is full to overflowing with soul stirring events of the French revolution that period when France was lost to royalty, and was for the time being in the hands of the republican. Mr. Whiteside has costumed his new play in a beautiful array and his supporting company is a most complacious, including Miss Lelia Wolston, Miss Elizabeth Hunt, Miss Antoinette Walker, Miss Grace Bindsell, Frederick L. Power, John M. Stungeon, John C. Hart, Laurence Griffith, Guy B. Fowler and Hall and Wallace.

March Ladies' Home Journal.

The March Ladies' Home Journal has a noteworthy feature in the pages showing "Pope Leo XIII as He Lives in the Vatican." The pictures were made by the only photographer who has been admitted to the Vatican for a number of years, consequently they offer the first close view the public has had in a long time of the Pope and his surroundings. An article that will be widely read figures out "The American Girl's Chance in Marriage," and another, "Social Life in America's French City," gives a really charming glimpse into the exclusive Creole circle of New Orleans.

The Most Wonderful Musical festival in America" recalls the great Peace Jubilee held at Boston in 1872, with its seventeen hundred instrumentalists and chorus of seventeen thousand. "Churches Decorated for Weddings," "The Prettiest Country Homes in America," "Flowers and Flower Beds," and "Fifteen Good Musicales and Fireplaces" are shown from the photographs submitted in the contest for Journal prizes. "In Nature's Garden pictures and describes our wild flowers so their identification will be easy. The article is by Neltje Blanchan and is the first of a series.

A LITTLE SUFFERER

Face, Hands and Arms Covered With Scrofulous Humors—How a Cure Was Effected.

"When five years old my little boy had scrofula on his face, hands and arms. It was worst on his chin, although the sores on his cheeks and hands were very bad. It appeared in the form of red pimples which would fester, break open and run and then scab over. After disappearing they would break out again. They caused intense itching and the little sufferer had to be watched continually to keep him from scratching the sores. We became greatly alarmed at his condition. My wife's mother had had carefuls and the only medicine which had helped her was Hood's Sarsaparilla. We decided to give it to our boy and we noted an improvement in his case very soon. After giving him four bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla the humor had all been driven out of his blood and it has never since returned."—WILLIAM BARTZ, 416 South Williams St., South Bend, Indiana.

The readers of this paper are pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Wood's Cavalry Brigade In Its Plunge Over "Hell's Crossing."

SALUTED THE SPANISH SHELLS.

The Son of a Veteran Winning His Spurs—Negroes, Led by a Boy, Tear Down Barbed Wire Fences—Strong Line of Battle—Old Soldiers at the Front.

[Copyright, 1898, by the Author.]

VIII.

WOOD'S brigade was led on the march from El Poso down to the bloody crossing on July 1 by the rough riders. When the lion was formed for the charge, the rough riders were at the front, a fact that was criticised by some of the officers of the regiments in this brigade. They held that it was done simply to give the post of honor. General Sumner said that such was not the case, but that it was the turn of the rough riders to lead at the front that day.

Some time after Sumner's brigade, under Colonel Carroll, including the Third, Sixth and Ninth (colored), followed by the rough riders, as the advance of Wood's brigade, had passed on beyond Grimes' position at El Poso, the two remaining regiments of Wood, the First United States and Tenth (colored), started forward. By the time these two regiments reached the ridge point in the road the Spanish fire had become terrific. In fact, but for the balloon the column would have escaped casualties until it reached the San Juan fords. The balloon was in front and east of the Tenth cavalry, which was first in the column. It was high enough to draw fire, and one of the officers said at Camp Wikoff, "What the balloon didn't get hit at." The firing at the balloon also caused some casualties from shrapnel and bullets in the ranks of the First cavalry.

Finally the balloon was pulled down, the observers got out, and it was tied to a tree, where it floated above tree tops and still drew fire until the Spaniards destroyed it. One of Kent's infantry regiments had a similar experience with the balloon, for it was passing down a trail to the left of a road where the cavalry was marching and just abreast of it.

At Hell's Crossing the Tenth cavalry lost half a dozen men. As the shells at that point passed overhead with their peculiarly startling shriek, the negroes straightened up attention and sainted them. The two regiments lay half or three-quarters of an hour in the river bed, which was dry at the time, except at the deepest part, where the river current runs. In order to escape the fire they then moved out, changing direction twice and passing in front of Carroll's brigade to cover under a high bank, and lay there another half hour. From this point, looking back across the trees in front, as described in the story of Carroll's cavalry brigade, the Spanish position could be seen. It was well known to the officers what was expected of the line, and finding in front of them a barbed wire fence of six strands, all hands went to work to clear away the obstruction. The men pulled out the posts and twisted and broke the wire, all the time under fire.

A boy here was developed at this time in the son of the colonel of the Tenth, Theodore N. Baldwin, Jr. Young Baldwin was a civilian, who went along to see the fun. He was 19 years old. He had joined a college club, intending to fight along with the rest and was foremost in tearing down the fences. After word he changed to the left hill with the line, and President McKinley commissioned him for his gallantry. After the fence had been levelled the line of Wood's brigade was formed, with the rough riders in front.

Much had been said about this, that and the other one having initiated the charge on San Juan hill. It is evident from what has been told of the situation in Carroll's brigade that the line officers and men were not left to their own devices at this crisis. Wood was the colonel of the rough riders(" Wood's Weary Walkers," as their regular comrades called them, imitating the first alliterative title), and it is to be supposed that he looked to them and to the rest of the brigade as well.

He was new to command—in fact, comparatively new to the service. Colonel Baldwin of the Tenth is a regular army war veteran; same with Major S. T. Norvell. Major Theo Wint of the Tenth is a war veteran of the Sixth Pennsylvania cavalry. Colonel O. D. Viele of the First has been in the regular army since 1861, and Major A. G. Forse was at West Point from 1861 to 1866.

When the line was formed, the barbed wire fences cleared away—all of this some hours, be it remembered, after the Spanish guns began their killing work in the crowded road and at the crossing —Colonel Wood appeared on the line of his brigade and gave the order to advance. Colonel Baldwin of the Tenth arranged his two squadrons one in front and the other as support. Colonel Viele of the First cavalry took his squadron commanders through the fringe of trees and pointed out a red house on a hill (to the right of the blockhouse), which will be spoken of hereafter as San Juan hill or "Kettle Hill." He said to Captain Tatberly, commander of the First squadron, "That is your right." Tatberly asked, "When shall I fire?" to which Viele answered, "Don't fire on our men; fire when you see the Spaniards." The First was in the third line of the brigade.

Colonel Viele's caution about firing was timely, for there were many obstacles to be passed which would break the line, and besides Kent's infantry on the left of the cavalry was already working toward the blockhouse. The two columns were to converge slightly before reaching their separate goals and right in the excitement of battle agreed to take each other for the enemy. The gallant Hawkins, leader of Kent's advance brigade, impatient to dash at San Juan blockhouse, which he declared that he could take in the flank, passed up the road to the front, while the cavalry was belted in the bed of the creek. Said a cavalry officer, "Hawkins was the finest soldier there, and the cavalry knew him well." All the older regular officers are known to all the other officers and to the long service privates as well, because promotion takes them from one regiment to another. Hence, although Shafter's was a new army, it was by no means an army of strangers.

It was about noon when the line of the cavalry division was sotmlly formed for the attack on the ridge in its front, the ground having been recognitered and points for attack known to leaders of regiments and squadrons. As usual in such cases, the exact time was not noted down, and perhaps the term noon may be used to cover the time between 12 and 1 o'clock. An officer of the First cavalry said it took three hours to pass down the road from El Poso to "Hell's Crossing," and that the march began at 8:30. About 1:30 hours seem to have been passed in the bed of the creek by some of the cavalry, perhaps by all.

It should be remembered that this was midday, and a tropical midday at that. The soldiers, when inactive, could barely keep their feet. They were in a valley without a breath of air. They were wet, some to the knees and some to the waist, from wading in the streams. For more than an hour they had been in the hot sun and had brought into the angle, victims of the Spanish marksmen in front of them on the crest of the ridge. It was this time, if at all, that the general impulse to charge the hill swept down the line. Regiments, battalions and companies had been formed to attack. Full directions had been given with the exception of the word "go." It is said that just then a volunteer field officer, who all the morning had been rather heard than seen outside of his own regiment, called out with a theatrical wave of his hand: "This hill must be taken! If there are three men here who will go with me, we will take it!" Already parts of the line were in motion, and shortly the entire column surged forward, carrying the excited volunteer officer with it, or perhaps swallowing him up, for he was not seen by the regulars again until they had planted their standards on the first hill.

Obstructions were encountered every few rods. At the outset there were two wire fences and hedges, which were cut through and jumped down, the First and Tenth cavalry keeping a good line across the clearing and making straight for the red House.

Carroll's brigade, moving to the right of Wonds', found the hill beyond the hedges and fences steep and rocky. The men clambered up and at the top reached level ground—in fact, the fields and yards of a country house. Their position was swept by fire from Spanish intrenchments in front. No Spaniards were seen by Carroll's men, but they had been there and could be seen by the men on Colonel Wood's brigade, rapidly retreating to the right. The Tenth cavalry, naturlad its colors, planted its staffs in the ground at the Red House, which immediately drew a heavy fire from the Spanish in San Juan fort. The line is set down by the Tenth cavalry as about noon. In Carroll's brigade this first hill was called "Kettle Hill" because there were some huge iron cauldrons sat up at the crest. Near these hettles the flag of the Third cavalry was planted.

Soon after reaching the hill, Colonel Viele's squadron commander, the colonel's chot, Lieutenants Thayer and Aleyer of the Third wounded and Hamilton of the Ninth killed. In the meantime the hill Lieutenents Smith and Ship of the Tenth were killed and Lieucenant Robertson wounded. Judging from the number of cavalry officers hit on this first hill, and for that purpose went to an insistation near Boston. The manager, questioning him, asked:

"Do you stammer all the time?"

"Nun-nun-nun-no, sir; o-o-oonly who-who-when I t-t-t-talk, sir."

Diamonds may be black as well as white, and some are blue, red, yellow, green, pink and orange, but there is no violet diamond, although, in addition to amethysts, there are sapphires, rubies and garnets of that color.

How Balloons Are Made.

Balloons are manufactured of gold beater's skin, which, though small toy ones had been made of it, could not be produced in sufficient quantities for the large balloons until Colonel Templer invented and perfected the process, which is briefly as follows:

The gold beater's skin is made up of quantities of a certain thin membrane (80,000 of these are required for a balloon of 10,000 cubic feet capacity), which is first freed from all fatty substances and then cooked in a solution of glycerin and water. They are then applied to boards cut in the form and to the size of the gore of the balloon required. Others are then superposed, until a thickness of four layers has been reached, great care being taken that no air inhibit remain between the skins. After this fourth layer a method of strengthening is resorted to in the shape of a net manufactured of skin. After this net two or three more layers of membranes are applied.

The whole is then allowed to dry, and a solution of boiled linseed oil is used as a varnish. The fabric is then quite indissoluble, and the membranes cannot by any possible means be separated from one another, but sometimes to render this homogeneity the more perfect, a solution of bichromate of potash is sponged over the fabric.—Pall Mall Magazine.

Beautiful Viennese Women.

Vienna, the capital of Austric, is chiefly noted for producing three things —coffee, music and women. The word "jolly" describes the temper of the Viennese women quite aptly. She lives only for today and lets the morrow take care of itself. She is as good a housekeeper as her German sister, but not quite so particular. She is quite as economical, but dresses herself more artistically. She is just as good a mother, but a more loving wife. She is somewhat nervous, and the quarrel with her husband is as regular as the amen in her prayer. The truest and prettiest type of the beautiful Viennese woman is that which comes from the south: In common with the majority of her European sisters, the Viennese makes marriage her goal, but retains her girlish ways, her jolly spirit and much of her hesuty, and even to guess at her age is not only a crime, but an shardicty.—Edward A. Steiner in Woman's Home Companion.

Blankets of Bark.

In Ecuador, one of the South American republics, the bark of a tree which grows on the slopes of the Andes is utilized for the making of blankets. The blanket is over six feet long and over five feet wide and is as soft and pliable as though it were made of flannel. It is about the thickness of a good flannel blanket and can be rolled up and put in a strep without hurting or injuring it.

This tree or bark blanket is merely a strip of bark cut from a section of the trunk of the blanket or desmagates tree. The Indians make a cutting around the trunk to get it, and they prepare it by soaking it in water until it is soft; It is then pounded so that the rough outside can be stripped off and the inside alone left. The inside is of fine fibers so joined together by nature that it makes a beautiful blanket, warm enough to be used as a cover and soft enough for a mattress.

Poison Hemlock.

Water hemlock is a deadly plant common in most country neighborhoods. Its roots are eaten often in spring by mistake for some edible root, and cases frequently results. Cattle are often poisoned by drinking water in marshes where it grows.

The poison hemlock from which the Greeks made poisons is a near relative to the water hemlock. It stands from two to seven feet high and has clusters of small white flowers and large, pinnate leylike leves. The stalk, being hollow, is often made into whistles by country boys, and many children are poisoned in this fashion.

Mixed Berries.

A young tailor named Berry, lately succeeded to his father's business, and sent in his account to Cherles Matthews somewhat ahead of time, whereupon Matthews, with righteous rage, wrote him the following note:

"You must be a goose—Berry to send me your bill—Berry, before it is due—Berry. Your father, the elder—Berry, would have had more sense. You may look very black—Berry, and feel very blue—Berry, but I don't care a straw—Berry for you and your bill—Berry."—"Cyclopedia of Anecdotes."

Salt For Small Change.

Besides the Maria Theresa 1780 dollars the people of Abyssinia for small change use a bar of hard crystallized salt, about 10 inches long and 2½ inches broad and thick, slightly tapering toward the end, five of which go to the dollar at the capital. It is a token of affection among the natives to present these bars to one to each other a lick of their r espective hars, and-in this way the material value of the salt is also decreased.

Didn't Stammer All the Time.

An electrical engineer who stutters once endeavored to be cured of, the habit, and for that purpose went to an insistation near Boston. The manager, questioning him, asked:

"Do you stammer all the time?"

"Nun-nun-nun-no, sir; o-o-oonly who-who-when I t-t-t-talk, sir."

A Very Bad Bargain.

That figures are sometimes wonderful things is illustrated by the following characteristic story told of a young town a number of years ago: A student in the university was a member of an eating club of 12 members which regularly patronized a certain little boarding. He was hungry enough one day to become the recipient of a legacy amounting to about $1,000, and, showing the sum to the hotel keeper, agreed to give it to him on condition that the sum be accepted as payment for meals eaten by the students until every pennie com[illegible]nation of the seating arrangements of the boys had been exhausted, the order of seats occupied by the boys to be changed at each meal.

The hotel keeper thought it a most profitable deal, but a friend of his with a mathematical turn proved to him that it really would mean ruin, as no less than 479,001,600 arrangements were possible, or a total of $8,748,019,-200 individual meals, which, at the rate of 10 cents per meal, would represent a value of the tidy sum of $947,801,920. The contract was cancelled out for the four years of the boys' student life, when it really drove the hotel man from business, as reckoned on a basis of $3 per week per student the hotel man had lost $3,000, while the students had only eaten 52,416 individual meals and had still a credit of 6,748,960,784 meals, or enough to give them three meals a day for 438,718½ years.—Philadelphia Record.

Everything Leaks.

Ordinary tumblers will hold water because the globules of water are too big to squeeze through the glass. But glass is full of holes as a sponge, and air blows right through it, because the specks of air are smaller than the holes.

Put a bell into a big globe of glass, seal up the vessel, pump out all the air, then ring the bell inside, and you hear nothing. There is not air enough in the globe to carry a sound. But lay the globe down for a month or so, and no matter how carefully you have sealed it the globe you will find that you can hear the bell when you ring it. Air has got into that globe—enough anyway, for the sound of the bell could in through the substance of the glass.

The ordinary incondescent lamp is a globe from which the air has been sucked, and after a few months sufficient air leaks through to dim the light which comes from the fusing of carcrtified charcoal inside.

We can make plenty of vessels to hold water, but nothing has been made which will hold air without any leaking. The air is always trying to get in.—Scientific American.

A Lesson in Patience.

When the eminent botanist Professor Aitmnn of Glasgow was a small boy, he was the proud owner of a silver bit, whereupon his mother wee so worried with questions as to what he should do with it that she suggested: "Really, I yod had better go to Thomns Elliot's (a well known pharmacist) and buy sixpence worth of that thing."

Down the street marched the lad and demanded of the chemist, "Mr. Elliot, please give me sixpence worth of patience."

Mr. Elliot, taking in the situation at a glance, said: "Certainly, my boy; there's a chair. Just sit down and wait till you get it."

Professor Aitman's endeavor to purchase patience was a great success. It was a lesson in patience he had not forgotten, and was one of the factors of his success in life.

A Soldier's Blanket.

This story, told of Sir Ralph Abercrombie, the victor of Ahonkir, shows that even in death he did not forget the comfort of his men. He had a favorite at which he was mortally wounded he was carried on board a ship, and a few hours before his death he called for his head to ease it. He felt the relief and asked what it was for.

"Only a soldier's blanket," was the reply.

"Whose blanket is it?"

"Only one of the men's."

"I wish to know the name of the man."

"It is Duncan Roy's, of the Forty-second, Sir Ralph."

"Then see," said the dying general, "that Duncan Roy gets his blanket this very night."

He Might Have Married.

Fitz-Greene Hallock never married, yet, as Mr. Howe reminds us in his "American Bookman," he could not have been without attendance for a certain superior lady is reported to have declared:

"If I were on my way to church to be married, yes, even if I were walking up the aisle, leaning on the arm of my husband, I'd leave the man I had promised to marry and take him."

To this, perhaps, should be joined his epigram, written for a young lady who had asked for his autograph:

There wanted but one thing to fill
The witless poet's cup of fame.
Hurrah! there's a lady still
Willing to take his name.

A Xantippe Outwitted.

An Englishman of Lymington had the misfortune to live in a continuous quarrel with his wife, who was a modern Xantippe and threatened in case she survived him to dance over his grave. It was her lot to outlive him, but it was not so easy to carry out her threat. The husband had the presence of mino to make an injunction in his will requiring his body to be buried in the sea, near his residence, and without ceremony. The injunction was complied with.

On the Contrary.

"Isn't that a fine alarm bell that's ringing?"

"Well, I should say not. That's the bell of the Universalist church."—Chicago Tribune.

Gained Their Point.

In describing the bombardment of Morro Castle at Santiago during the Spanish-American war a war artist who was in Cuba tells how he and some newspaper men managed to attain a point of vantage near the Texas.

A few days previous a rival newspaper dispatch boat, the recipient of certain courtesies with which we had not been favored, had been carrying minor telegrams to the flagship from one point or another, and she was in the habit of sailing in among the fleet, with an air of importance and displaying the signal, "We have dispatches for the admiral."

This, of course, prevented the vessels of the fleet from making her come ontside and enabled her to approach the flagship to deliver her communications. Before leaving Port Antonio we had taken in a large supply of fresh fruit, including bananas, so it occurred to one of our very alert and original newspaper men that we should imitate the signal. "We have bananas for the Texas on board."

This was acted upon, and one vessel was allowed to glide in without interference, until we reached the Texas. Once alongside, Captain Philip hailed us with delight, accepted our little gift and told us that a bombardment was very shortly to take place. We thought ourselves in great luck as receiving this news and made outside the lines, hoping as near to the squadron as we were permitted.

Reputation.

In the "Memoir" of Lord Brnswell is a telling illustration of the fact that reputation clings to us, even after many years. The great jurist as a little lad became a pupil at Dr. Reddy's school, where the late Baron Channell, three years his senior, was head boy.

Channell read for the law, and the two school friends scarcely met again until, years afterward, Mr. Chonnell held a brief in a certain case at Maidstone assizes.

Consultation with the solicitors showed a flaw in the pleadings drawn by them. It was of a sort which in those days would prove fatal to the case, and the solicitors could only hope that it would not be discovered.

"Who is against us?" asked Channell.

"Oh," was the reply, "a Mr. Brunwell. Nobody ever heard of him before."

"Then, gentlemen," said the advocate, "we're done. I was at school with that gentleman."

He was right. Brnswell was too clever for them, and they were "done" indeed.

Handling a Cobra.

When I went to the sailor, he held in his hand a very old and ragged carpet bag. He said, "I've got a fine stinging fellow here for you." I asked what he meant, as he opened the bag and showed me one of the largest and fiercest looking cobras I had ever seen. I obtained a large fish glue pot, into which I told him to drop the serpent, hog and all, and then secured the top. I asked him how he became possessed of this dangerous creature.

"I caught it among some timber," said he, "on board a ship at Blackwall, just home from India." "And how did you manage to get it out and trap it?" "Well," said he, "I took the train from Blackwall and the omnibus from Fenchurch street, and as (meaning the snake) was quite quiet all the way." "What do you want for it?" "Ten shillings and my expenses." Which I paid. He asked me if I would take another if he caught it, as he had seen one larger than the one he had brought with him.—Bartlett's "Wild Animals In Captivity."

Tune For Tone.

Frederick the Great made generous presents to all musicians except flute players. He played the flute remarkably well himself. A famous flutist once asked permission to play to the king, hoping that Frederick would show his appreciation of his skill by some valuable gift. Frederick listened attentively, but he played a wretched piece. "You play very well," he said, "and I will give you a proof of my satisfaction."

So saying, he left the room The musician waited, guessing at the probable nature of the gift. Presently the king returned with his own flute and played the same piece. He then handed his visitor "Good day," saying, "I have had the pleasure of hearing you, and now was only fair that you should hear me."

Weight of a Lion.

What does a lion weigh? Those who know the look of the king of beasts best and how small his little body really is will probably come farthest from the truth. About 200 to 250 pounds is a usual estimate. But a full grown lion will strip the scales on no less than 600 pounds. Five hundred and forty pounds is the record for an African lion. His bone is solid and dense as ivory.

The tiger runs the lion very close. A Bengal tiger, killed two years ago by an English officer, weighed 700 pounds. A tiger this size has, however, considerably more muscular strength than the biggest lion.

Quite Clever.

Bob—How do you stand with your employer so well, Tom? You never laugh at his jokes.

Tom—No, but I dine at the same restaurant, and pretending not to see him I read all his stories, saying loudly, "I can't tell it as well as he can, but here's a rattling good yarn Mr. B. told us this morning." I've been promoted three times in a year.—Answers.

Birds' Nests.

Many birds vary the composition of the outer layer of the nest according to the circumstances. If the nest is located among growing leaves, the outer layer will be of green moss; if on a dark branch, of natural colored lichens.

MR. JOHNSON BRIGHAM, State Librarian of Iowa, contributes to the American Monthly Review of Reviews for March, a valuable study of "Middle Western Literature."

WE thought "Honest John" passed as the friend of the farmer but his attempt to prevent the building up of the best sugar factories was surely not in the interests of the agriculturalists, for the growing of beets to be manufactured into sugar is in a fair way to become one of the industries of the state.

AT the close of an editorial in praise of the governor's act in vetoing the sugar beet bounty bill the Moorhead News says that Mr. Lind by his veto "has rendered a very great and valuable service to the people of the state." We fail to see the value to the state in its penal attempting to repudiate a bona fide debt.

AT noon next Saturday one of the most eventful sessions of congress in our history closes. The members of this congress have been a great part of one of the most momentous crises through which our nation has ever passed, and though mistakes may have been made it may be said with truth that they have acted well their part.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM JAMES in the March Atlantic continues his interesting and instructive articles upon Psychology for the Use of Teachers. In this paper he discusses what are and in what way are manifested the original and native impulses of children, and how these should be taken advantage of and utilized to obtain the best results for educational purposes.

SENATOR DAVIS is in favor of some kind of an alliance or understanding between the United States, Japan and Great Britian with reference to the Chinese question in the East. He thinks that it would safeguard the business of the world in those waters for fifty years if these three nations should declare with their united powers that there should be no dismemberment of that immense marital empire.

THE New York legislature has passed a law making it a misdemeanor to use the United States flag for advertising purposes. That is patriotism by statute.—Little Falls Transcript.

The flag has been dragged into every thing, especially during the past year, that it is no wonder that the New York legislature has become disgusted and put a check upon the practice. What is worthy of honor and reverence ought not to be made light of.

WHILE the Filipino insurgents were firing Manila, and the sharp-shooters were firing at our soldiers our Mr. Bryan kept firing away about America enslavity to the Filipinos and the ability of the latter to govern themselves. The worst of it is that while the hot shot of our dusky brothers across the Pacific can be stopped, we must still continue to listen to the anti-expansion sentiments of our eloquent brother from Nebraska.

THE farmers of Polk county will meet in Crookston March 16 to organize a grain growers association. The local organization will elect delegates to the state meeting which will be held in Minneapolis next June. It is the intention to make this association out of politics and indeed unless this is done it will have the same fate as the old Farmers' Alliance. The object of the organization is to get justice for the farmer in the matter of selling his grain. The farmers are a power and if they stand together they can undoubtedly get what they wish.

THE joint high commission made up of Englishmen, Canadians and Englishmen was one of the most important commissions at work last year. Its purpose was to adjust any difficulties existing between United States and Canada, and to arrange if possible for closer trade relations. All questions seem to have been satisfactorily settled save the question of lumber and the Alaskan boundary. Canada wants the United States duty on lumber reduced 50 per cent. The commission has adjourned till next August and it is thought possible that in the meantime matters may be so arranged that a compromise will be affected at the next meeting.

THE controversy between Sampson and Schley is greatly to be deplored. There was enough glory for both without either trying to gain prominence through decreasing the fame of the other. For many weeks Sampson bore a tremendous responsibility and little if any fault is found with his management of the campaign. The navy department, on the other hand, rather censured Schley alleging that he disobeyed orders. Schley, after obtaining leave to do so, replied to the charges, and by quoting a letter which the navy department appeared to be ignorant of, showed that while he was at Cienfuegos he was acting under orders from Sampson.

THERE is now being placed in the vaults of the county clerk, auditor and recorder, steel roller book shelves and document files. With these later improvements added to the vaults the depositories are made absolutely fire proof, hence there will be no loss of records in the above offices in case of a fire. The cost of the improvement is about $1,100. Besides being fire proof the improvement is a great saving to the binding of the books as their movement is now done upon rollers with no possible chance for damage by handling.—St. Peter Tribune.

Polk county needs just such improvements as these, for in case of fire many if not most of the county records would be destroyed. Still it is useless to do anything like this until the new court house is erected.

SEVERAL state legislatures during the late discussion over the ratification of the Peace treaty passed resolutions urging the United States senators of the respective states to vote for ratification. This raises a very interesting question as to just what the position of the people's representatives is. Are they to do what they think is best or what their constituents think is best? The voice of the people certainly cannot be ignored nor on the other hand must the man's personality be lost. As the party in power in any state legislature might change several times during one term of a United States senator it would assuredly look as though the senator could not very well follow the instructions of the legislature or neither he nor anyone else would ever know where he stood. Being a legislator, national or state, is not so easy after all.

THE bill before the legislature increasing the high school grant from $400 to $1,000 is a commendable one. When it is considered that the large majority of the citizens do not go further in their school education than through the high school it will be seen that nothing should be left undone to make this training as broad and inclusive as possible. For high school work, particularly in the line of history and literature, many reference books are needed, and scientific studies cannot be pursued without apparatus that costs a good deal. The additional grant would enable many a high school to greatly improve its course. Comparing the amount of money that the Normal schools get with that which the high schools receive, and taking into consideration at the same time the number of students in each, it will readily be seen that the high schools are not getting as much as they are entitled to.

COLONEL GRINDLEY has been trying to arouse public sentiment against the way the iron mines in St. Louis county are being managed. He charges that there is a joint ownership of the principal mines and the iron ore railroads, and that in consequence the independent mine owners will be forced to close up operations. The state school fund would be decreased several million dollars in case these independent mine operations shut down for they pay a royalty into the educational treasury. Such, boiled down, is Col. Grindley's plea. As the colonel is personally interested in some of the independent mines the matter should be thoroughly investigated before any action is taken either by the legislators or others. If, however, the school fund is in danger of being illegitimately divided things go on as they are going, nothing should be left undone to bring about a change. As it is, there is not enough money to pay for the usual number of summer schools, and this costs only a few thousand.

RUMOR again has it that Mr. Alger will resign the war portfolio. This, it seems to us, is the best course both for himself and for the administration. He certainly failed in the management of his department during the war, and the most charitable construction that can be put upon the matter is that he was not a big enough man, was not inclusive enough in his grasp to comprehend the situation. He cannot retrieve himself and the public might perhaps be more charitably inclined toward him were he to leave public life for a while. Mr. Alger has also been a great load to the administration which the latter cannot afford to carry much longer. He had his chance and failed to make it, and Mr. McKinley is under no obligations to keep him as a member of his official family any longer. The president is, in fact, under obligations to the country to remove him. While we regret that the secretary of war was hissed and hooted in Boston, it is probably only too true that such would be his reception in very many places.

THE legislature has been considering the advisability of providing for the release of the Younger brothers on parole. These men were responsible for the killing of Cashier Heyward at Northfield, Minn., and have been in Stillwater for 20 years. Warden Wolfer and others connected with prison management think that the conduct of the Younger brothers while they have been in prison has been such that it would be a wise and humane act to give them their liberty on parole. These men have long scarcely a black mark, if indeed any black mark, against them since they have been in prison. They have very few years to live anyway, and it would seem as if the ends of justice in their case had been attained. The object in imprisoning men is not to wreak vengeance upon them but to make them capable of being good citizens, and if the conduct of twenty years is any criterion by which to go the Younger brothers will lead respectable lives if released. We say let them leave the prison walls and get a glimpse again of Jennett's sunshine."

Notes From Exchanges.

St. Hilaire Spectator: Anton Anderson, of Crookston, was in town last Monday getting up his real estate in this vicinity. He may come back and locate in the spring.

Fertile Journal: Rev. Benj. Irons circulated a petition last Friday by being up the license question at the coming village election. The necessary signatures were secured and the question will be voted upon.

Norman County Index: Jake Valland reports that prospects are good for the largest immigration into Norman county this spring since the first rush in the early '80s. He is getting a large number of letters and may go to Kansas and Missouri soon to talk with intending settlers.

Red Lake County Courier: The Madden boys brought in ten wolves Monday and received $30 in bounty from County Auditor Zeh. As the story goes, George's knowledge of rope throwing came in handy, as he chased one of the wolves into a tree and catching the "varmint" in the loop in western style.

McIntosh Times: County Attorney Street, of Beltrami county, is after the lumber barons with another little bill that will hardly increase their admiration for his red whiskers. We refer to the bill providing for a lien on the logs for the taxes due on the land from which they were cut which has been favorably reported by the house committee.

Sauk Centre Avalanche: His many friends here and elsewhere will be pleased to learn that C. H. Graves, who has been conductor on the Great Northern system for so many years, has been promoted to traveling freight and passenger agent of the Fergus Falls branch, and entered upon his duties last Monday. This is an instance of proficiency and ability as well as long services being rewarded, and C. H. is not slow in rewarding faithful employes.

Wahpeton Times: From very reliable sources we learn that President J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern railway has about concluded to remove the division headquarters located at Breckenridge, to Wahpeton and a party of civil engineers of the company, 'accompanied by the other officials of the road, were in the city recently, with a view to locking up suitable site for the location of the shops.

Fergus Falls Journal: The Torrens system of land transfers is now in operation in Chicago and is proving very satisfactory. The system is almost universally commended and if some Minnesota solon should see fit to introduce a bill for its establishment in this state, future generations would rise up and call him blessed. Here is an opportunity to win fame if not fortune. All classes would rest easier if they knew that the title to their real estate could not be called in question at semi-occasional intervals.

The Head of the Lakes: The Great Northern has reported to the state railroad commission the gross earnings for the year 1898 for the purpose of taxation. The report shows that the earnings in the state of Minnesota were nearly $1,000,000 greater than the year previous. The statement follows: Earnings, $8,928,403.45; 1897 earnings, $7,953,814.75; increase, $972,678.13. Taxes, $357,551.80; 1897 taxes, $298,-674.45; increase, $29,180.35.

Northern Pacific on their lines in Minnesota for 1898; total, $6,943,549.00 against $5,317,240.64 during 1897, an increase of $626,306.45.

St. Hilaire Spectator: Sometime ago it was reported from some unreliable source that the gang saws were to be taken out of the St. Hilaire Lumber company's mill to be put in at Crookston. How the report gained a foothold is hard to determine. Instead, new and improved machinery is being put in and especially in the planing mill so as to increase the capacity in order to handle the large stock of lumber they expect to manufacture this season. St. Hilaire has one of the best and latest improved mills in this state as well as elsewhere and when any machinery is taken out it will be replaced by something better.

The Breeders' Gazette: One thing we must ever keep in view—the retention of the fertility of the soil. All grain crops draw heavily on the fertility. More than once the crop of wheat has been sold for less money than would pay for the fertilizer that would replace what it has taken from the soil on which is was grown. To diminish the fertility of our fields is to destroy the very foundation of all our prospects of after-success on our farm. In growing crops and retaining the fertility of the soil there are two methods easily accessible to the farmer. The one is the keeping of sufficient stock on the farm to consume the roughage on the farm and carefully returning the manure to the fields. The other is to alternate the grain and root crops with clover and leguminous plants; but when I think of this latter it is to combine these two methods. Raise the grains, alternate these with clover and peas, feed all the products except it may be the wheat, and return the fertility to the land.

Red Wing Republican: Not an infrequent complaint from school teachers is that parents so seldom visit the schools. It is a complaint that is well founded too, for there are parents who never visit the schools, and the majority of those who do, visit very seldom. It seems strange that an institution, the interest of which lie so close to our hearts, an institution on which devolves the sacred duties of training the children should receive so little personal attention from us and it is by no means the exception. Our methods in this regard are very much at fault. No fair less reason for our manifestation of any special interest. Visit the schools by all means. Learn what the children are doing, become acquainted with their instructors. It is a duty we owe to both children and teachers.

Winona Republican: The same interest, it appears, has called a meeting of the educators of the state, to be held at St. Paul tomorrow, to try to get them to take steps for a reduction of the rate on ore from the mines to Duluth. This is done ostensibly on the plea that such reduction would enure to the benefit of the state school fund. There are not lacking indications, however, that the scheme is what is known in legislative parlance as a "log-pulling" one, and that those who are back of it are simply attempting to get the school fund to pull their chestnuts out of the fire, and to bear an expense which they cannot do. This whole case was thoroughly gone over upwards of a year ago, ending to the satisfaction of the state railroad commissioners that no reduction in rates was warranted. The expense of that inquiry are said to have amounted to $40,000, and is failed. It looks as if now these parties, who have proved interests to subserve, want the school fund to stand another whirl for their benefit. At any rate, their movement is a suspicious one on the face of it and will bear watching.

Hilliard's Stock Farm.

F. H. Hilliard and Archie Hilliard received last Monday a deed for eighty acres of land which they bought from the Northern Pacific railway. This eighty is meadow land and adjoins their homesteads out near Cass Lake. They have in all now four hundred acres. They intend putting stock on the land and eventually running a ranch.

C. E. Simmons, who with two other men, has been out in this region all winter, returned Tuesday and reported great progress. He himself has a claim out there not far from the Hilliard farm. During the time he has been there five buildings have been erected on the different homesteads and several miles of road have been cut so as to connect the farms with the main thoroughfares.

Best Furniture and Furnishing.

Besides an article on "The House Practical"—"The Library and Living-Room"—the February Ladies' Home Journal has another on the arts of home-making. It describes "Good Furniture and Furnishing," and shows the very best designs in furniture for various rooms of the house. The furniture, as well as the furnishing shows a departure from the conventional kinds, and the pictures being in detail will serve as a pattern or suggestion. The article gives the artistic results that are possible from an exercise of taste untrammeled by conventions.

Old Railway Employee.

C. E. Barnes, of Wadena, was in the city Monday and Tuesday for a short time. He is agent of the A. G. Harbaugh Co., Cleveland, Ohio, manufacturers of oils and greases, and is spending the week canvassing the towns along the St. Vincent line. Mr. Barnes formerly lived in Crookston but has not been here for 18 years. When he got off the train at the Northern Pacific station he hardly knew just where to go to the changes in the city have been so many since he was here last. He was a brakeman on the St. Vincent line and was telling the JOURNAL reporter of how in the early days the railway boys used to sometimes get 16 days' pay for a week's work. From Crookston to St. Vincent was a day's work and if they left St. Vincent before midnight that counted for a second day's work and the third day began just after midnight, and all Sundays counted double.

Wedding.

KIMBALL—CHILDS.

At Warren yesterday the 1st inst, A. F. Kimball, of Minneapolis, to Mrs. Sadie Childs.

Deaths.

HOLGATE.

A telegram from Pierre, S. D., was received last Saturday morning by A. M. Childs announcing the sudden death of Mrs. Houlgate, wife of Rev. Houlgate, late Methodist pastor in Crookston. A letter from Mrs. Houlgate dated Feb. 22 was received by Miss Ruby Childs that same day and at the writing of the letter Mrs. Houlgate was apparently in good health. The next day, Feb. 23, she died of hemorrhage of the lungs, several attacks of which de-sease she had had before, one while she was in Crookston. The members of the M. E church in this city sent to Mr. Houlgate a message of sympathy.

$1,000 Premium.

The Minnesota State Horticultural society is offering a premium of $1,000 for the production of a seedling apple tree as hardy and prolific as the Duchess, with fruit equal to the Wealthy in size, quality and appearance, and that will keep as well as the Malinda. The offer is open to all. For full particulars as to the Horticultural society, fruit list for 1899, terms of membership, premiums offered, sample copy of its monthly publication, etc., address A. W. Latham, secretary, 397 Kasota block, Minneapolis, Minn.

Coaches Ditched.

The St. Hilaire train last Tuesday when about three miles this side of Ives struck a broken rail. One passenger coach, the combination baggage and smoker and one box car left the track. The passenger coach overturned and was dragged for some distance on its side. The twenty passengers were not injured save two, who were somewhat bruised. The combination car was put back on the track and the rest of the day's run made with this alone. A wrecking crew was sent out yesterday to get the coach and box car back on the track.

"Laurel Winners."

That our American composers are equal in many respects to those of foreign countries, is something which the singers and players of this country have yet to learn, and it is the laudable purpose of the publishers of the work enumerated in the attractively written, printed and illustrated brochure, "Laurel Winners," to teach our native musicians this wholesome truth. Laurel Winners is a volume of portraits, silhouettes and biographical sketches of leading American composers, published by The John Church Company, of Chicago.

City Council.

The city council met Tuesday night. The question of a new steel floor for city hall was thoroughly discussed, but definite action postponed. Max Eriesson was granted a license to sell liquor. Broadway street bridge was not accepted as there were one or two matters that had to be adjusted first. The city attorney was instructed to investigate the cases of sick persons sent here from outside towns. The subject of the proposed changes in poor law was also considered. If a curative law is passed the city will be able to issue the $6,000 bonds which the people voted to give the water works company to aid in putting in the new intake pipe.

STATE LEGISLATURE

THURSDAY, JAN. 23.

The senate devoted something more than an hour to two labor bills, that of Senator Daugherty providing that all employes must be paid at least once in two weeks, and the 8-hour bill of Senator McGowan. The McGowan bill was placed on the calendar and the Daugherty bill was killed.

Two new sugar bounty bills were introduced, one for the manufacture of sugar, and the other to give a bonus to growers of beets upon their sale at any licensed factory in the state. The amount to be paid annually in bounties is limited to $15,000 in each case.

When the report of the finance committee recommending the passage of the Horton bill, allowing the capitol commission to issue certificates of indebtedness, came in, Senator Knatvold was still in opposition to the measure. The amendment providing for the retirement of $100,000 of the certificates annually did not satisfy him. The bill was sent to the general orders.

The bill allowing probate judges, where no clerk hire is allowed, $1,500 per year salary was passed when it came from the committee.

Owing to the small attendance the house laid aside the calendar, which contained nine bills and confined its work to the disposition of general orders. Bills were passed:

Amending an act regulating the practice of pharmacy and the licensing of persons to carry on the same.

Throwing open the Soldiers' home to honorably discharged indigent soldiers and sailors of the late war with Spain.

FRIDAY, FEB. 24.

Five hundred members of the state G. A. R. encampment, and a hundred members of the ladies' auxiliaries were the guests of the house and senate during the morning session. Patriotic speeches were made by Grand Army men and legislators.

At the afternoon session of the house the following bills were passed:

Authorizing the governor to name a day to be known as Arbor and Bird day.

Establishing a board of appeals for the inspection of grain and prescribing its duties.

Relating to days of registration at general elections in cities between 2,000 and 12,000 inhabitants.

The senate, after a hard fight, passed the Miller measure providing that the records of the railroad and warehouse commission in evidence, taken on complaint, shall be the records of the court, if appeal is taken to the court.

MONDAY, FEB. 27.

Only 70 house members answered the roll call at the evening session. One new bill was introduced, the four bills on the calendar laid over and at 9 o'clock the house adjourned until Tuesday morning.

Speaker Dare laid before the house a concurrent resolution from the legislature of North Dakota. It recites the fact that complaints have been numerous as to the Minnesota grading of grain at Minneapolis and Duluth, and that the North Dakota legislature is fearful of the belief that the passage of the McCollom bill establishing boards of appeal at the two points named will do away with much of the trouble. The passage of the bill is therefore urged, and Governor Lind is asked to request her the interests of North Dakota producers in appointing the boards if the bill becomes a law. The bill has already passed the house.

TUESDAY, FEB. 28.

Senator Davis appeared before a joint session of the legislature and spoke briefly on national affairs. The senator was present by invitation and was escorted to the house chamber by Governor Lind and committees from both branches.

The most important of the dozen or more bills passed by the senate was the measure making the state railroad and warehouse commissioners elective. When the house bill was called no Senator Ryder moved as an amendment the senate bill, S. F. 8, which includes the application of the law to several offices besides the railroad and warehouse commission, to which alone the house bill is applied. The motion was lost—20 to 36. The bill then passed—40 to 8.

The capitol bill, permitting an extension of the 10-year assessment limit, was passed without debate and only five dissenting votes.

The "home stone" bill of Senator Brower of Stearns also passed without opposition.

These Also Put Through.

Providing for a state road and bridge fund and levying a tax therefor.

Relating to reinsurance by fire insurance companies.

Authorizing boards of county commissioners in certain cases to allow county treasurers and auditors compensation for clerk hire.

To authorize the appointment of a tax commission and prescribing the duties of such commission.

To provide for the parolement of persons convicted of non-support.

The feature of the house session was the discussion of the bill providing for the state publication of free text books. The bill met with considerable opposition and after much debate was referred to the committee on education for amendment.

Decision Reserved.

Judge Otis has reserved decision in the case of Mrs. Mary Ann Hebner against the Great Northern Railway company. Hebner was formerly station agent at Brown's Valley. He was discharged on the ground that he was insolent to the company's patrons. This was stated on his service card, the card on which records of the employes' services are kept. It was alleged in the suit that this card was exhibited to various employers of labor and that the plaintiff had been unable to obtain employment because of these statements, which, the plaintiff asserted, were false. The suit was for $15,000.

The Phenomenon of Walking.

At a small party the other evening those present were asked to name the most common act at the same time the most complicated action in the human phenomena. Various answers were given, showing all degrees of observation and thought. Not one, however, hit upon the answer that the questioner had in mind, which was walking. What action is more common, and yet how difficult of analysis! How many persons outside of some special courses in physics at the universities can explain the phenomenon? Let somebody try.

"Walking," once said Dr. Holmes, "is a perpetual falling, with a perpetual self recovery. It is a most complex, violent and perilous operation, which we divest of its extreme danger only by continual practice from a very early period of life. We find how complex it is when we attempt to analyze it. We learn how violent it is when we walk against a post or a door in the dark. We discover how dangerous it is when we slip or trip and come down, perhaps breaking or dislocating our limbs, or overlook the last step of a flight of stairs and discover with what heedless violence we have been hurling ourselves forward."

All this is very true, as we all know to our sorrow; still the genial Autocrat has not explained the phenomenon.—New York Times.

From Bad to Worse.

Several ladies and gentlemen were riding down town in a cable car. They were mostly strangers to one another, but the conversation became general.

One of the ladies had been at the opera the night before and was fond in her expressions of disapproval.

"Worse than all," she went on, "that Mme. Schroeder is much too old for her part. Her singing is becoming unbearable. Don't you think so, too?" she asked, turning to the gentleman next to her.

"I wouldn't you rather tell this to Mme. Schroeder herself? She is sitting beside you," he replied coldly.

After the general silence which followed the remark, the critical lady turned to the singer with many confused apologies.

"It is that horrid critic Schmieder who has influenced my judgment concerning your singing. I feel sure it is he who is always writing against you. He must be a most disagreeable and pedantic person."

"Had you not better tell all this to Mr. Schmieder himself?" was calmly inquired Mme. Schroeder. "He is sitting next to me."—New York World.

On Landing Troops.

In landing a force on a hostile shore a great deal more has to be provided than the vessels to carry it. There are people who discuss an invasion, and who seem to have an idea that the matter is limited to crowding a number of soldiers on a ship and directing them to be landed at a certain place. There is no consideration of how they are to be fed, or with their arms guns and ammunition; that merchant ships have only a few boats, and that artillery cannot be transferred from ship to beach without any previous preparation. When we consider that, notwithstanding the support and resources of a large combined fleet and the presence of transports, more than a month of hard work was required before an army of 50,000 men could be landed in the Crimea, we are justified in doubting the possibility by no means difficult an undertaking as is often stated.—"Wilmot's Life of Vice Admiral Lord Lyons."

Lakes That Change Color.

It is well known that the water of many lakes exhibits characteristic colors. The lake of Geneva, at the western end of Switzerland, is blue, while the lake of Constance, at the eastern end of Switzerland, is green. Siemens lauds its purity, since the natural color of water is blue. A green lake has its water slightly clouded with impurities, which may be exceedingly fine particles, separately invisible. Professor Spring of the University of Liege says that green lakes sometimes become absolutely colorless for a time, and he has found that this sudden change of hue is due to the washing into the lakes of mud colored red by oxids of iron. Red is complementary to green, and the result of the mixtures is that the green color of the water becomes for the time neutralized.

Curious Indian Custom.

A curious custom prevails among the lowest classes of southern India for obtaining rain. In times of drought a gigantic figure of a women is stretched to its full length on its back on an open, level piece of land. Here and there the carriage is dragged round the streets, the Indian peasantry accompanying it with the harrowing notes of their tomtoms, drums and bugles. The custom is explained by the popular notion that Varuna, one of the chief superintendents of the wife of Varuna, the god of rain, and that when he sees his favorite wife dragged ruthlessly along the streets he sends down torrents of rain to wreak his vengeance.

Financial View of It.

"John, dear," said the wife, "that last sonnet of yours will get me a pair of shoes, the love lyric will buy my hat, the quatrain will get my gloves and your obituary lines on old Jinks will enable us to rent a carriage and attend the funeral. How happy we ought to be!"—Atlantic Constitution.

Quite Evident.

"That boy of mine," remarked the proud parent extravagantly, "is the genuine article. He's all wool, yon can bet."

"Shouldn't wonder," commented old Grumpy. "I notice that he shrinks from washing."—Philadelphia Record.

CHAPTER XI.

A week rolled by, uneventful enough at Russell, but full of mischief in the field. Hemmed in among the sand hills and feeling the toils closing about him with fatal accuracy day after day, Yellow Wolf had had recourse to diplomacy—and the aborigine is a past master of the art, a sure to whom Metternich and Talleyrand might have bowed in envious contemplation.

Sending a scout to the nearest picket post of the cavalry, which happened to be on the north side, the Indian chief asked for a talk, and later that day, in solemn dignity and all the panoply of war paint and feathers, in appeared with a retinue of satchels, and, gravely dismounting in the circle of officers and soldiers drawn up to meet him, he strode forward, erect and proud and powerful still, a splendid specimen of the plains bred warrior, the hatred in front of the commanding officer, although kindling then and there, to become the rest of the way. Athwart was not there. He, with his two lieutenants, Barry and Stannard, was carefully closely watching the Indian position from the south and east. It might all only be a trick, a blind, under cover of which the wily chief would attempt to run off his village through the mazes of the sand hills and, favored by the rapidly descending wings of night, slip away around the right flank of the cavalry and infantry from the White River agencies and be off and away to join the northern Cheyennes. If he could make his quarrel theirs, with their united warriors they could laugh at the combined forces in the field.

But out there on the rolling slope to the north, with the broad valley of the Niobrara stretching miles away toward the horizon, the scene was picturesque and even barbaric. Dismounted from their gayly caparisoned ponies, Yellow Wolf and his principal warriors, fearless and scorning themselves even now as conquerors, towered in a feathered, painted, brilliant group, the center of a somber ring of soldiery. The chief himself stood a few paces advanced from his followers, and his glances, haughty and almost defiant, was fixed on the gray haired, mottle faced officer whom long years of rather inconspicuous service had lifted to the command. The colonel knew little of Indians or of Indian character. Fate had found him at the agencies when the order was telegraphed to "hustle out" every available officer and man and head off those scheming Cheyennes. He was surrounded by his subordinates, most of whom had spent long years among the Indians and were far better calculated to deal with them, and to one of these, a keen featured captain of infantry, he turned and whispered:

"What's the old rip waiting for?"

"You must step forward—meet him half way—shake hands with him," was the whispered answer. Rather sheepishly, a marked contrast to the savage chief in bearing and demeanor, the colonel put forth his thumbe stock in his waist belt, lounged forward and, assuming an affable grin, stopped when he neared Yellow Wolf and, slowly withdrawing the right hand from his belt, shifted his quid of tobacco to the other cheek, blushed as though he knew he were making a mess of it and held forth his hand.

Wolf glanced first at the extended hand and then at the soldier's perturbed face, something almost contemptuous shooting across his raw swarthy features. Then slowly raising his right hand he as coolly brought the fingers of the left close to the finger tips of the other and began in excellent pantomime the motion of pulling off a glove and casting it aside. The white action was significant. Turning redder yet, the colonel hastily jerked his gauntlet from his knotty digits and again held forth his hand. This time the warrior condescended. Striding forward, erect and dignified as ever, he scorned the colonel's paw and gave it a wrench that made the veteran wince, whereat some of the younger Indians nearly laughed aloud and there was an audible titter among the soldiers. Flint formally concluded the colonel proceeded to shake hands with each of the warriors in the suit of Yellow Wolf, saying, as he had learned brother officers greet the Ogalalla brave at the fort, "How, Colah?" which w'am't Cheyenne at all, but Sioux, or a colloquial modification thereof. However, it seemed to pass muster among the visitors, with whom certain others of the officers shook hands and exchanged cordial greetings. They were old acquaintances.

And then at a word from Yellow Wolf his followers seated themselves in the arc of a circle, all save one, an Indian as thoroughbred looking as the chief, who remained close to the latter's side, who bent attentive ear to the words spoken in low voice by his leader and then addressed himself in excellent English to the colonel:

"Yellow Wolf has come to talk with the commander of the white soldiers. But we have no meat. We are poor and hungry. Our children cry for food."

"Order dinner for the dozen, colonel," whispered the captain, coming to his side. "There can be no talk till you do." And over an hour was consumed while the chief and his friends were being fed and comforted, a proceeding that took three times the amount of bacon and hard tack, coffee and sugar that would have satisfied the stomachs of many a hungry white man. Meantime the sun was sinking toward the horizon, and old Stannard, with Atherton's permission, came sparring up from the rear contrast to inquire, as he did in tores language, what the devil was the matter and why in the devil's abiding place they were wasting so much valuable time. Being informed that Yellow Wolf had declared himself poor and hungry and had begged for food as preliminary to the council, Stannard ripped out an explosive protest. "The old scoundrel is only playing you," said he to the colonel. "He's sparring for wind and time, you'll see. You see! He knows we're right in on top of him now, in dius of two days' siege work, and that we could starve him out with every prospect of giving them a thrashing. He's just stending you off until sunset, colonel. For God's sake send him to the right about. Tell him the talk is over and that we mean to attack at once. If you don't, he'll slip out somewhere in the night sure."

But the colonel felt his honor involved. He couldn't in good faith send these back now. He'd hear what the chief had to propose, and if it wasn't satisfactory send him back to his sand holes and pitch in.

"You can't," said Stannard again. He had had years of dealings with the red men and knew their tricks and their manners. "You'll simply know he'll be stringing for a peace smoke. Can't talk sure! after smoke, and talk smoke half an hour before he'll say a word." Stannard glanced disgustedly around at the silent officers, as much as to say: "You know this as well as I do, gentlemen. Why don't you warn the colonel? Why didn't you do it?" But they were silent or turned away in visible embarrassment. Some of them had warned the colonel and even argued with him. The old fellow looked vexed and badgered in good earnest now. He assumed to have known Stannard many a year, as was indeed the case, and so would listen to far more from him than he would from his own people.

All the time this excited talk was going on the girls and children on one side of the baker's dozen of Indians were squatted on the ground boldly plying fingers and spoons, only occasionally casting furtive glances at the group. Around them, in bigger, broader semicircle, nearly 300 troops—infantry and cavalry—stood resting on their arms, watching the scene and occasionally indulging in rough frontier chat and chaff. But the interpreter knew Stannard of old, marked every word that he said, and in a low tone warned his chief, who glanced at Stannard's sturdy figure and snapping eyes with no little concern in his face, then helped himself to more of the bacon.

Just as Stannard prophesied, more than an hour was taken up by the feast. By that time every scrap was eaten, and Yellow Wolf bade his interpreter petition for more, and again he began, "We are poor and hungry." And pleaded for renewed supplies, but this time the colonel hands his infantry captain speak for him, and epeak he did in no uncertain tone. Not another mouthful until the talk was over, then they'd see about it. Another conference followed between Wolf and his interpreter, conducted with due deliberation, for, like the Arapahoe, the Cheyenne language is one to gutturals and accouth that it is said two Indians of the same tribe cannot understand each other in the dark. They must have roomone to gestures.

And then, just as Stannard said, the wily old fencer for time came up with a proposition for a truce. No conference could be held without one. But again: "We are poor and hungry. We have no tobacco."

They had their pipes, however, and these were specially filled, lighted, and with deep gratitude "Ugh!" and sighs of contentment the squatting warriors drew deep clouds of the fragrant vapor into the lungs apparently and exhaled the smoke in long blue jets. Yellow Wolf began, now on a far greater ceremony and passing his beautifully ornamented pipe from lip to lip of those nearest him. Half an hour was consumed in this way, and the sun was growing redder and sinking lower, and the old colonel was waxing wrath and fidgeting here and there, and then, and not till then, when the great orb was barely half an hour high did Yellow Wolf motion the throng to fall back and give him room, and out of the medicine retired to their places and the warriors squatted at a respectful distance from their chief and the colonel and his staff. Then took their stand facing the Indian leader did that savage dignitary advance a step or two and begin, head and body in blanket from his shoulders with a sweeping gesture, and then, clad only in breech cloot, moccasins, paint and barbaric necklace, armlets, leglets and magnificent war bonnet of eagles' feathers, proudly swaying both arms in the wild grace of his savage oratory, Yellow Wolf began. Brave to or 60 words he would pause, and the interpreter would do his best.

"Long years ago," said Wolf, "this beautiful land teemed with buffalo, elk and deer, and their fathers led them (the Indians) to the chase. The white man was unknown. Their young men were brave; their maidens pure and beautiful, their people strong and prosperous and happy. Their foemen trembled before them and fled at their coming. They were lords of the soil and know no master but the Great Spirit. Then came the white man, tempting them with gifts, drugging them with fire water; stealing away their maidens, slaying their young men. Then we have slayed the despoiler, but we would not, for we had welcomed the white man and loved him as a brother. Then came lying paper chiefs—not warriors—who told us to sign papers and we would have cattle and horses, wagons and meat and flour and coffee and sugar like the white man, and then they told us we had sold our lands and must go. Go where? They led us far away from the wild hills and haunts of our fathers. They drove us down among the buffalo soldiers—the negro Indians—the no warrior nations of the south, where our young men sickened and died, where our maidens were poisoned, where the great father's agent starved and cheated us, and when we appealed to him put our chiefs in prison and threatened our young men. At last he brought soldiers in shoot and kill, and then we sought the plains, poor and starving as we were —sought our kindred here at the north, at the old, old hunting grounds, and we are trailed and followed and fought. Our young men are shot again; and our old men are dying of wounds and fever. We are helpless, we are wronged. Look at me," he said, with magnificent gesture, "I am poor and naked. All are these soldiers here? Why are we threatened and fought and killed, we who have done no wrong?" And Wolf looked proudly about him. "I have done," he said, and his followers patiently granted their applause, and all eyes reverted to the colonel, just as the red rim of the sun reached the horizon and turned his mottled face to fire as he confronted it.

"Yellow Wolf," said he, "your ideas of right and wrong and ours don't agree. I don't know anything about your row with the agent. I do know that when you broke away your people killed him and half a dozen white men at the reservation and killed and stabbed ten schoolmistress who had never been anything but kind to your people. Then you started on your raid, and you've made a trail of blood every inch of the way from the territory to the sand hills. Now we've got you, and our orders are to take you back to the Indian Territory, and we're going to do it. My advice to you is to surrender your arms and ponies and go back peacefully. If you don't, we'll lick you out of you, and that's all there is about it. Now go got your guns and horses and head them over. That's all I've got to say."

"We are poor and hungry. We have no tobacco."

In point of oratory there was no question which—the red man or the white—had the better of it. In point of logic it depends upon the point of view.

Slowly the chief arose and striding forward once more swayed to speak, but the old colonel, waving him back as he turned impatiently away, said: "I'll listen to no more. I've said my say." And this the interpreter did not have to explain. But Yellow Wolf was not lightly to be shaken off. "It is too late tonight," he pleaded. "See, the sun has dipped below the mountains. The night comes on darker than early." It was as though he was spreading a blanket over the prairie sol. "We are poor. We have no lights. Tomorrow—tomorrow when the sun is one hour high we will come forth with our guns and horses—all we have—and lay them at the feet of the great father. Let me go back and bid our women cease their grumbling, our children hush their cries, for the white chief promises that his soldiers shall not harm them this night. Yellow Wolf and his warriors will go where the white chief may say. We will fight no more."

This, too, was promptly interpreted, and the colonel wavered. He looked to Captain Lee, his trusted adviser, and Lee shook his head. "It's taking chances," said he. The colonel glanced about the circle of grave faces in the gathering twilight. The little cook fires on the slopes burned redder. Some faces were doubtful, some appealing; at least it meant no attack on a desperate band in a desperate position. At least it meant that there would be no ghastly list of killed and wounded to send by courier to the agency. This seemed to weigh with the old soldier, so heavy had been the losses of the troops within the two years gone by, and at last he whirled about.

"All right. So be it," he said. "Tomorrow, then, when the sun is one hour high—all arms and ponies. Meantime, Yellow Wolf, you and your people are to stay just where you are."

"Will the great chief give us food for our people?" asked the interpreter in noble tbet were almost Hibernian in their fluency. The colonel hesitated. He was a merciful man, but Lee spoke promptly. "Tell him they shall have abundance—feast for all hands today. Tomorrow morning, colonel, but not a morsel tonight. They're not suffering—any of them."

And at this, without another word, with slow, unbroken dignity, Yellow Wolf mounted, and, followed by his subchiefs, rode slowly and solemnly away. Long before they had reached the little butte from whose shelter they had emerged more than two hours before, only as dim, shadowy, spectral figures formed did they appear against the southward slope of the rolling earth waves.

That night Atherton was ordered for such duties as lines as far to the west as possible and have patrols scouring the country west of the Indian position, to establish the cavalry from the north threat mnt similar patrols to the east of his flank. But long before 10 o'clock word came in that the country was all cut up by deep ravines or gulches, with precipitous sides. It was dark and moonless. They couldn't communicate. Ventures some troopers, who dismounted and slid into these apparently bottomless depths, reported that the opposite wall was just as steep. Even if they got down into them there was no getting out on the opposite side, and no telling how many more there were just like them.

Both commands felt out toward the west as far as they could and strove to close the nearly mile wide gap on that side, but to very little purpose. One daring young corporal, striving to find a way in the blackness of the night, was suddenly plunged forward by the misstep of his scurrying horse, and in the blackness disappeared rolled over the edge of the cliff and were found by comrades who ventured down about with lights intended to death on the rocks below. Not until long after midnight did Atherton and Stannard turn in, and then it was with a shake of the head that augured ill for the success of the plan.

The night went by in silence, broken only by the yelping of the coyotes far out on the prairie and the occasional snorting of horses and braying of pack mules. The dawn came slow and chill, and at the first flush of day the troopers were huddling about the cook fires, eager for their mug of coffee. Brighter grew the skies. One by one the stars to the west faded from view, and just before the sun came peeping above the low, distant hillocks at the east old Sergeant Donnelly came riding up to Colonel Atherton's tent with pleasure in his eyes.

"What is it, sergeant?" asked Atherton as the veteran trooper dismounted.

"Nothin, sir, but the Indians. They're in from the extreme left, and it's my opinion the entire command away through one of them gullies in the night and is half way to the Niobrara by this time."

And this proved to be true. When the sun was an hour high, the White River command was in full chase meriting reward for the arms and ponies that were not delivered at that hour, while philosophic Barry and hard swearing Stannard were riding along with their silent old chief, following the general movement.

And this was the answer that General Russell the fifth day of the week referred to, followed next day by the tidings that General Crook had corralled Yellow Wolf at the northern reservation; that Atherton, Barry and Stannard were marching homeward, and all would be there within another seven days, and that was why Mr. Maynard, although he was now almost able to take the field, did not set out for Cheyenne to see his sister's homeward bound ticket had planned to escort her to the station on the following day despite Mrs. Turner's pleas that she might wait just a few days longer until the troops came home, and Mrs. Turner needed friends about her now, for war had been declared by Miss Dregs. "Besides," said Mrs. Turner, "has been mean enough to tell something."

But Miss Maynard was to have started on Thursday, and all preparations had been made, but when Thursday morning came there was distress and consternation on every face along officers' row. Three sets of quarters had been robbed during the night—a big night and reveille, and there was not a clew to the perpetrators.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Visit to Edmunds.

George F. Edmunds has a high reputation in the country as an able lawyer and a faithful and independent senator. He has long occupied a prominent and great public services in the senate. If elected, Edmunds will be the second time honored the presidency on the principles which a large majority of the people of Massachusetts hold. He was not elected before. He was very fond of criticising and objecting to what was proposed by other men. He seemed to be always against as when in opposition to the majority of his associates. But he possessed what persons of that temper commonly lack—great capacity for constructive statesmanship. Any measure of which he was the author would be likely to accomplish its purpose and to stand fire.

David Davis, who was president pro tempore of the senate, used to say he could always compel Edmunds to vote for a negative on a question by putting the question in the old New England fashion. "Contrary minded will say no," for Edmunds was always contrary minded. I once told him, borrowing a saying of an Englishman, that if George Edmunds were the only man in the world George would quarrel with Edmunds.—Senator George F. Hoar, in Scribner's.

Lizards That Grow New Eyes.

The tuatara lizard of New Zealand is said to be one of the most ancient types of animal life now existing. It originally possessed four eyes, but now has to be contented with but two. It lays eggs, and these take no less than 13 months to hatch out. The embryo passing the winter in a state of hibernation.

These remarkable animals are found only in one or two places in the colony, and they are rapidly becoming scarce, as collectors from every part of the world are continually on their track. They are about 18 inches in length, and, like many of the lizards, are said to have the characteristic of being able to replace portions of their limbs, etc., which have been destroyed. One owned by Mr. Carl Hauser of Awanui had the misfortune to lose a tail some time ago, and now a complete new one is, as perfect as the undamaged one, has grown in the place of that lost.

While the eye was developing the lizard seemed to be no more inconvenienced than a human being is in the growing of finger nails or hair.

Trying It on the Dog.

Lamson lives on the South Side. Carter, his arch enemy, lives next door. Trouble has been brewing, and Lamson was getting to give Carter a "piece of his mind," when he suddenly conceived a brilliant idea.

He bought a cheap dog of questionable breed and named him Carter. Whenever Mr. Carter was outside his house, Lamson would let his dog out and standing on his doorstep he would fire the following or similar soulful talks at the canine:

"Carter, you are a cur. Your mother had the mange. I am going to kick the stuffin out of you, you miserable thing. If you were not so hungry looking, I would kill you. You ain't even good enough for sausage meat, you loathsome cheap, good for nothing," etc.

The neighbors wonder why Mr. Carter does not have Mr. Lamson arrested, but Mr. Carter has discovered the lone pit and will never next week.—Chicago Journal.

His Annoying Problem.

"I wonder," she said, knitting her brows in a perplexed way, "whether"—

And then she paused. It was her first experience in keeping house on an allowance, and naturally many problems presented themselves.

"I wonder," she repeated, "whether, when woman gets the right to vote proper spheres and exercises her rightful influence, if she legislates for the first of every month out of existence the bills will come in the second day or will be entirely abolished. I think the plan would be worth trying, anyway."—Chicago Post.

Didn't Admire American Children.

An American lady in Dublin had occasion to talk to her hostess about American children. "I have read of them," said the Celtic one thoughtfully. "I have of them in English read. I have two stories read that I might know. I do not wish to go to America. I have read 'Peck's Bad Boy' and 'Helen's Babies.' Ach! I stay by the German children so!"—New York World.

A Bamboo Bridge.

A British consular report from the far east describes a suspension bridge of 800 feet span made of bamboo. The cane is split up into strips and twisted together to form the cables. Considering its span, the material of the structure is quite remarkable. The information that almost anything can be made out of bamboo receives here a good illustration in the field of engineering.

The Poor and the Poor.

A very little familiarity with the poor disinfects of any city is sufficient to show how primitive and frontierlike they are. Kindly relations, says Jane Addams in The Atlantic, ARE only to be found in the economic condition of all alike is most precarious level makes the ready outflow of sympathy and material assistance the most natural thing in the world. There are numerous instances of heroic self sacrifice quite unknown in the circles where greater economic advantages make that kind of intimate knowledge of one's neighbors impossible.

An Irish family, in which the man has lost his place and the woman is struggling to care for the six young beings by day work, will take in a widowed and her five children who have been turned into the street because a movement's reflection upon the physical discomforts involved. The most maligned landlady is usually ready to lend a useful ni of coal to a suffering tenant or to share her supper.

A woman for whom the writer had long tried in vain to find work failed to appear at the appointed time when a job turned up at last. Upon investigation it transpired that a neighbor fur. ther down the street was taken ill; that the children ran for the family doctor, who went, of course, saying simply, when reasons for her nonappearance were demanded, "It broke me heart to leave the place, but what could I do?"

Help... Nature

1. Babies and children need proper food, rarely ever medicine. If they do not thrive on their food something is wrong. They need a little help to get their digestive machinery working properly.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME & SODA will generally correct this difficulty.

If you will put from one-fourth to half a teaspoonful of this baby's to the three or four times a day you will soon see a marked improvement. For bigger children, from half to a teaspoonful, according to years, dissolved in their milk, or if you so desire, will very often throw its great nourishing power. If the mother's milk does not nourish the baby, she needs the emulsion. It will show an effect at once both upon mother and child.

The ATLANTIC MONTHLY

NO American agency of public information and intellectual guidance has done higher service in this most momentous period of national transition and opening of a new world epoch than THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY. In its point of view and treatment of events of the first national importance, it has stepped into a vacant place and a political review of clear insight, high purpose, wide knowledge, and bold conviction. It is doing for America come part of the work the serious political reviews always have done for British, and while it is the often baffled aim of the "Deux Mondes" to do for France. The time has now come for more public attention to the illuminating discussion of which it is the medium.— From the New York Commercial Advertiser, Nov. 29, 1893.

FEAR OF TROUBLE WITH GERMANY IN THE PHILIPPINES

Act at Rest Effectually—All the Vessels of Her Navy in the Vicinity Ordered to Leave at Once—His Confidence in American and Peace Lives and Property of Her Subject Under Uncle Sam's Protection—Action Considered a Step in the Direction of Closer Relations.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—The German government has set at rest effectually the rumors of a purpose on its part, directly or indirectly, to embarrass the United States in the Philippine islands and has given a signal manifestation of its desire to promote the most cordial relations between Germany and the United States by ordering the withdrawal of all vessels of its navy from the Philippine islands and placing the lives and property of its subjects there under the protection of the United States.

The action taken is regarded as a master stroke in diplomacy by which will be removed all probability of a clash with German interests in and about Manila, and notice to the world especially any Americans who entertained any suspicion of sinister designs on the part of Germany, of the intention of the German empire to promote friendship. By its withdrawal Germany places its affairs in the Philippines

Almost Completely in Our Hands.

The news of the withdrawal of Germany came at the close of a day that had been full of sensational rumors of a clash between Germans and Americans in Manila, the rumors even going to the extent of saying that Admiral Dewey had fired on and sunk a German vessel in Manila bay. These rumors spread despite the fact that the cable connecting Manila with the outer world is in control of the United States government and that it might be reasonably expected that it would be the government that would receive the first news of any disaster or collision at Manila, and at the White House, war department and navy department positive denials of the rumors were made. Finally, at the close of the day and after the official close of the departments, announcement was made of the reason for the great confidence the officials had in the falsity of the rumors, the statement being authorized that by one bold stroke Germany had removed all possibility of

Any Clash Between Hotheads

at Manila. It was announced that the German government had ordered their ships away from Manila, probably to their new naval station at Kiao Chau, on the Chinese coast. The German government followed its announcement to the state department of a purpose to order its vessels away from the Philippines with a formal application to the United States government to undertake the protection of all the Germans in the Philippines, not only in person, but in property. This was regarded as a signal manifestation of confidence and as practically formal notice that the Germans have no ulterior purpose in the Philippines and rather than be subjected to suspicion on that score has taken the course of turning over the care and welfare of their citizens to the American government. The administration promptly accepted the trust and there will be no German ships at either Manila or Iloilo to disturb the relations of the two countries or form the basis of sensational and false rumors.

VON BUELOW REITERATES.

No Reason for Other Than Friendly Relations Exists.

BERLIN, March 1.—To the correspondent of the Associated Press Baron von Buelow reiterated his assurance of Germany's desire to maintain friendly relations with the United States. "There is nothing politically between the two countries," he said, "to prevent this becoming an accomplished fact. I know of no friction between the German and American governments, and so far as Samoa and the Philippine islands are concerned my speech shows the true situation in both places."

Ambassador White also repeated to the correspondent of the Associated Press his statement that Germany's attitude throughout had been strictly neutral.

Oregon Sailed on the Twentieth.

HONOLULU, Feb. 23, via San Francisco, March 1.—The battleship Oregon, accompanied by the collier Iris, sailed for Manila Feb. 20.

AN OFFICIAL STORY.

General Otis Reports That Confidence Is Restored.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—General Otis has cabled the war department as follows:

Scandia arrived last night. On nights 21st and 22d and morning 23d, insurgent troops gained access to outskirts of city behind our lines. Many in hiding and about 2,000 entrenched themselves. Completely routed with loss of killed and wounded about 600 and 300 prisoners. Our loss very slight. City quiet, confidence restored, business progressing.

FAILED TO REACH A VOTE.

Another Unsuccessful Attempt to Confirm Sampson and Schley.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—Another unsuccessful effort was made in the executive session of the senate to confirm the nominations advancing Admirals Sampson and Schley and other officers who participated in the Santiago campaign. This result was due to the objections of Senators Butler, Pettigrew and Stewart, who talked through the executive session, thus preventing the taking of a vote.

NATIVES WISH TO GIVE UP.

Reported Eight Thousand Filipinos Are Ready to Surrender.

MANILA, Feb. 28.—Two Spanish commissioners, Senors Rosalio and Abogado, who were permitted to pass through our lines and confer with Aguinaldo, with reference to the Spanish prisoners at Malolos, have returned through our lines near Caloocan, with sealed dispatches for the Spaniards. The commissioners said that Aguinaldo and Sandiko were both at Malolos and inclined to peaceful overtures. While the Filipinos are not yet prepared to surrender the Spanish prisoners, they will gladly release two Americans who have been held for six weeks, on the payment of some $30, the value of the food and clothing furnished them.

Shortly afterwards the rebels sent out a flag of truce borne by Commandants Sinforoso de la Cruz, and several hundred of the enemy left the firing line, crying "No quire," "Ola comiate," "Americanos Mucho Bueno." The commandants said that fully 8 000 of his men had had enough and were ready to surrender. Among the enemy in the jungle many women and children were visible. A woman hid down her rifle and attempted to cross with the parleyers, but she was sent back.

After the parley returned to the American lines the enemy on the right fired a volley, the bullets dropping at their feet.

SEVERAL CASUALTIES.

Number of the Thirteenth Minnesotans Wounded by Sharpshooters.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—The war department has received the following from General Otis, at Manila:

Casualties caused by insurgent sharpshooters in district of Tondo and Binondo Malbo:

Thirteenth Minnesota — Wounded: Company C, Captain Noyes C. Robinson, lip, moderately severe; Sergeant George K. Shepard, leg, moderate; Private Thomas F. Caldin, shoulder, severe; George S. Wooding, thigh, severe; Company D, Orion G. Grinnell, armpit, severe.

First Nebraska—Private Enoch Davis, Company H, shot in hand, self-inflicted, accidental, severe.

South Dakota—Private Clyde A. McVey, Company B, slight wound, fourth toe, right, amputated.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—General Otis has cabled an additional list of dead and wounded in skirmishes about Manila. The list includes:

First South Dakota—Killed: Co. C, Private Oscar L. Felker; Co. M, Sergeant William B. Smith, died of wounds. Wounded: Co. B, Private Fred Tobin, neck and lungs, moderate; Co. M, Martin Bido, arm, slight; Musician Hulberg, neck, severe.

Thirteenth Minnesota — Wounded: Co. D, Private Herman H. Hilman, chest, slight; Co. M, Egidins G. Fehr, arm, thigh and across chest, severe; Quenc Feckinson, buttock, slight; Co. G, George Baker, neck, severe.

NEEDED AT MANILA.

Dewey Requests That the Oregon Be Sent to Him at Once.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The following dispatches have been received at the navy department:

"Manila, Feb. 24.—For political reasons the Oregon should be sent here at once. DEWEY."

"Manila, Feb. 24.—Yorktown arrived. Charleston and Petrel arriving around the Philippine islands. Affairs more quiet. DEWEY."

"San Francisco, Feb. 24.—The Oregon arrived at Hilo Feb. 4 and at Honolulu Feb. 8. Iris and Scandia arrived on the 12th. GIFFEN."

Mr. Giffen is dispatch agent of the department.

Will Arrive About March 10.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The navy department expects the Oregon will arrive at Manila about March 10. As the transports are ahead of schedule time, it thinks General Otis within a week will have reinforcements of 2,000 men.

EAGAN ON THE STAND.

Contends the Canned Beef Was Wholesome and Nutritious.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The testimony of Colonel J. P. Weston, who was at the outbreak of the war assistant commissary general and who is the successor of Commissary General Charles P. Eagan, together with the appearance of General Eagan, were the features of the proceedings before the court of inquiry investigating the charges of General Miles as to the beef supplied to the army while in Cuba and in Porto Rico. Each contended that the canned roast beef was a wholesome and nutritious component of the army ration which was furnished the Santiago and Porto Rican expeditions, and took issue with the regular army officers who have cized it.

MEAT WAS TEN YEARS OLD

One Olde Adjutant's Experience With Canned Beef.

BUCYRUS, O., Feb. 24.—Adjutant Schaber of the Eighth Ohio volunteer regiment, who, during the Spanish war, handled large quantities of the canned beef provided for the soldiers, says that all the cans bore labels with the figures 1898 printed on them. By soaking the rass these labels could be pulled off, showing the original wrapper, with the date 1888, or some other equally ancient period, marked on them.

DAY GETS A JUDGESHIP.

Former Secretary of State Now on the Federal Bench.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The president has sent to the senate the nomination of William R. Day of Ohio to be judge of the Sixth judicial district. This is a new circuit, composed of parts of Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Tennessee, and Mr. Day will be its first judge.

HAS MADE HISTORY

AN EVENTFUL PERIOD IN THE COUNTRY'S CAREER

Covered by the Dying Congress—Declared War Against a Foreign Foe and also Ratified the Treaty of Peace—Other Important Doings—Hawaiian Islands Annexed and the English Treaty of Arbitration Rejected—Appropriations Voted Reach a Total of Here Than One Billion and a Half.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—An eventful period in the country's history is covered by the work of the Fifty-first congress, which is drawing to a close. It has been a period of stirring and dramatic action, with questions of vast magnitude constantly engaging attention, forming and epoch alongside those other American epochs, the Revolution and the Civil war. This congress has declared war against a foreign foe, and the treaty-making branch has participated in ratifying the treaty by which that war was terminated. It has provided a great volunteer army, has enlarged the regular army, and has expanded the navy to meet War Emergencies and New Conditions.

The tariff has been revised first by the Dingley law and then by the war revenue act; a bond issue known as the war loan, has been provided. But far-reaching as these war measures are, the congress has had time also to enact other legislation which under other circumstances would make its session memorable. This includes the annexation of Hawaii, the rejection by the senate of the general treaty of arbitration with Great Britain, the enactment of a national bankruptcy law, and reorganization of the personnel of the navy. To this list may yet be added certain including the Nicaragua canal, the increase of the regular army, the anti-scalping measure, the Hawaiian bill, and the proposed encouragement of American shipping. Among these the most important general measures are in the final legislative stages, and it will not be half the last hours active that the success or failure of these measures will be determined definitely.

Important Subjects Still Pending,

Based on estimates the total appropriations for the congress would be approximately $1,600,000,000, of which amount approximately $600,000,000 were for war expenses or incident to the army and navy.

GOMEZ GUEST OF HONOR

Brilliant Banquet at Havana Very Largely Attended.

HAVANA, Feb. 27.—The banquet at the Tacon theater proved a brilliantly successful affair. Governor General Brooke and Major General Lee and the Cubans generally regard the occurrences at the function as the most promising augaries for Cuban independence since the peace protocol was signed. The theater was crowded to overflowing with spectators and more than 1,000 diners were laid for the banquetters. Beside the governor general and General Lee the company included Major General Ludlow, General Butler, the governor general's chief of staff; the chiefs of Generals Lee and Ludlow and other army and naval officers, together with many Prominent Citizens and Officials.

General Andrade sat on the right of General Gomez and Mayor Lacoste on his left. The boxes were filled with people representing Havana's best society. As the American generals entered a trumpeter at the door blew once, whereupon a concealed band played "The Star Spangled Banner." When the Cuban commanders entered the trumpet was sounded twice and the band played the Cuban hymn. Among the speakers were Senor Pedro Lopez, Colonel Carlos Garcia, Culberto Gomez, and General Lanuza, secretary of the department of justice. The tendency of all the speeches was towards independence for Cuba with eulogy for General Gomez and assertion that he must never more leave the island. The spectators called vociferously for a Speech from Major General Lee.

His remarks and those of General Brooke were translated for the benefit of the assembly by Senor Pablo Desverbois, secretary of the department of finance. Both of the American generals repealed former statements that the United States intended to establish a stable government in the island and then to deliver it to the Cubans themselves. These assurances were vociferously applauded. General Gomez himself did not speak owing to the hoarseness from which he is suffering.

General Gomez withdrew from the theater about midnight, crowds in the streets applauding him wildly as he emerged and following his carriage for blocks. The general, who is much in need of rest, said to a friend:

"This popularity is killing me."

Gomez Visits General Brooke.

HAVANA, Feb. 28.—General Maximo Gomez, accompanied by two aides-de-camp, called upon General Brooke at his residence at Vedado at 11 o'clock a. m. He was received by the governor general, General Chaffee, chief of staff, Major Kennon and Captain Page. Gomez requested a private interview with General Brooke, and the others, with the exception of one aide-de-camp for Gomez and Major Kennon for General Brooke, withdrew. The conference lasted an hour and a half. Gomez said nothing to indicate that he does not adhere to the agreement arrived at with Mr. Robert P. Porter for the payment and disarmament of the Cuban troops. But he submitted more considerations verbally to General Brooke. Their nature was not disclosed.

The interview terminated with the understanding that Gomez is to put the substance of what he said in writing.

POLICY DECLARED.

House Democrats Adopt Resolutions Defining Their Position on Expansion.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—At a caucus of the Democratic members of the house of representatives the following declaration of policy and resolutions as to the Philippines were adopted:

"We hold that the constitution of the United States, ordained and established for an intelligent, liberty-loving and self-governing people, cannot be successfully applied to people of different natures and conditions. We therefore hold that a colonial policy is contrary to the form of our government and subversive of those principles of civil liberty which we have been taught to cherish. We believe in the Declaration of Independence that all governments derive their just powers from the

and we are unalterably opposed to the establishment of any government by the United States without the consent of the people to be governed and in conformity with these principles we instruct the minority members of the foreign affairs committee to introduce and urge the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the United States hereby disclaim any disposition or intention to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction or control over the Philippine islands and assert their determination when an independent government shall have been erected therein to transfer to said government, upon terms which shall be reasonably and just, all rights secured under the cession of Spain and thereupon to leave the government and control of the islands to their people."

A resolution was also adopted commending the loyalty and valor of our soldiers and sailors.

The attendance was large and little division of sentiment was manifested on the general features of the resolutions.

Agreed on the General Claims Bill.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—After many struggles the house committee on the general claims bill has reported an agreement. The amount cannot be agreed, is $8,100,758, or about one-third of the amount carried by the omnibus claims bill as it came from the senate.

Beneficiai Results Expected.

SANTIAGO DE CHILE, March 1.—President Errazuriz and his suite have returned from Sandy Point, where he had a cordial conference with President Roca of the Argentine Republic which is expected to have beneficial results for both Chile and Argentine.

Origin of the Postal System.

The comfortable penny post which has reached out until it includes every country on the face of the earth, had its beginning in the mind of an ingenious Frenchman.

In 1653, early in the reign of Louis XIV, M. de Velayer established a private penny post. Boxes were set up at the street corners for the reception of letters and offices were opened in various quarters of Paris. Collections were made once a day from the street boxes, followed many hours later by a single delivery, and thus the first postoffice in the world was established.

M. de Velayer was so greatly encouraged by the success of his enterprise that in order to develop it still further he printed certain forms of billets or notes which were intended to cover all the ordinary requirements of business in great towns. These forms contained blanks which were intended to be filled up by the pen with such special matter as might be necessary to complete the writer's object. The plan at once became popular, and the printed forms accompanied the expansion of the postal system throughout the larger cities of France, and it was many years before they fell into disuse.—Harper's Round Table.

Still Smoking Twelve Years After.

The man had been absent from New York for a number of years. During his absence many changes had taken place. Some of his friends had moved away and some had died. Though he had taken time to see New York papers pretty regularly, he had not kept up with these friends of his as he should have done.

One evening he called upon a woman friend who was living at a hotel. Arrived at her room, he found her surrounded by a crowd of people, but he finally reached her and shook her by the hand.

"You are just the same," he said admiringly. "You haven't changed a particle," which was not at all true, for her hair had turned so white that she had the air of a marquise in some old picture. "And your husband, too," he went on, "he is just the same as ever. I saw him just now down in the lobby. He was smoking."

The woman looked a trifle startled for a moment, then recovered her composure with considerable effort.

"I am sorry to hear," she remarked gravely, "that my husband is still smoking. He has been dead for 12 years."—New York Sun.

VOL. XXII. CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY MARCH 9, 1899 NO 48

COUNTY OWES CITY.

M. E. Kirsch Discovers Disused Section of City Charter—Penalties and Interest on Taxes.

BIG MONEY INVOLVED.

City Makes Demand on County for about $20,000—Question May Go to the Courts.

M. E. Kirsch is the man who has discovered that for fourteen years certain moneys have been put into the Polk county treasury which it appears from the law belong to the city of Crookston. How much the sum may be is variously estimated at from $10,000 to $20,000. The county commissioners met today and it is possible that they may consider it the wise thing to let the courts decide the matter.

Mr. Kirsch like a wise alderman was posting himself upon the provisions of the city charter that he might the better perform the duties incident to the office that he holds as one of the city fathers, when he came across section 16, the first part of which reads as follows: "The county treasurer of Polk county shall pay over such taxes, together with all interest and penalties which shall be collected on account of the same when collected, to the treasurer of said city in the several settlements of the funds to be so paid over, as provided by general law." As Mr. Kirsch had been a member of the county board and had been and was a member of the city council he knew that such penalties and interest had never been paid over to the city. He therefore hunted up the city attorney, Judge Montague, and the general law of the state was found to read like this: "All penalties, costs and interest accruing on lands bid in for the state, before redemption or assignment, WHEN NOT OTHERWISE PROVIDED BY LAW OR SPECIAL ACT, shall be apportioned to the county revenue fund."

It then became more evident that the county treasury contained funds which according to law were the city's, so after further consultation among the city officials the following demand was made upon the county auditor:

JOHN GLEASON, AUDITOR OF POLK COUNTY,

SIR:—You will please make and deliver your warrant and order to auditor of said Polk county on county treasurer of said county directing him to pay to the undersigned treasurer of the city of Crookston in said county, all money due said city arising from penalties and interest on city taxes, levied by said city on property within said city for each and every year since March 9, 1886, commencing with that date and down to the date hereof, and also for all interest received and paid into the treasury of said county as interest on the funds of said city as required and provided for by section 16 of chapter 3 of a special act of the legislature of the state of Minnesota approved March 9, 1885, entitled, "an act to amend and consolidate the charter of the city of Crookston."

Crookston, Minn., March 6, 1899.

O. O. CHRISTIANSON,
City Treasurer.

Mr. Gleason, however, did not issue the order for several reasons. As the present custom with reference to these funds has obtained since 1885 he would not undertake, particularly upon short notice, to decide that this money had been unlawfully used. So the matter stands at present. In case the county commissioners do not instruct the county auditor to issue the order upon the county treasurer the city will take the necessary legal steps to find out whether or not such an order should be issued.

As there is a penalty of 15 per cent in case city taxes are not paid within a year of when they are due, as delinquent taxes draw interest at rate of 12 per cent, and as a large percentage of the city taxes become delinquent and remain so sometimes for years it is concluded that the amount that may be due the city is many up in the thousands. In order to ascertain what the sum is it would be necessary for expert accountants to go over the records which of course would take considerable time.

If these penalties and interest on delinquent taxes paid through all these years into the county treasury lawfully belong to the city the county will without doubt pay the money over though it will of course disturb somewhat their plans with reference to the finances of the county. On the other hand, the money will be very acceptable to the city and many improvements can be made which otherwise could not be made.

FIREMEN'S TOURNAMENT

Interstate Race—$2,000 Prizes—Band Tournament—at East Grand Forks in June.

The executive committee of the Northern Minnesota Firemen's Tournament Association met last night in the firemen's assembly room in the city hall. There were present C. A. Brown, of East Grand Forks, president, A. P. T. Suffel, of Hallock, A. F. Foss, of Fosston, Joseph Mandt, of McIntosh, Thos R. Johnstone, of Crookston, and A. C. Schmidt, who though not a regular delegate was always welcome at such meetings as he was the first president of the association and really the father of the whole tournament scheme. Aaron Brown, of East Grand Forks, was elected treasurer in place of Lars Bakke, of Thief River Falls, resigned.

Arrangements were made for the annual grand tournament to take place in June at East Grand Forks. It is expected that something like $2,000 will be offered in prizes. In place of the old hammer prize which Hallock now permanently holds, it is proposed to offer a fine, new, modern hose cart, which it is hoped some manufacturer will donate. A band tournament will take place at the same time, for which the association intends offering a purse of $200. One new feature that will be particularly attractive and exciting will be an inter-state race between picked teams from Dakota and Northern Minnesota.

The other races will be: The association hose race, for the hammer prize, hook and ladder service test, ladder climbing and coupling contest, combination hook and ladder hose race, service wet test, hub and hub race. It will be one of the biggest and most lively tournaments the firemen have yet held.

Grand Forks and Crookston Cross Sticks At the Palace Rink.

Lovers of winter sports were present in goodly numbers at the Crookston Palace rink last Thursday night to witness a game of hockey played between the Ontario Store team of Grand Forks and a team from Crookston. The crowd was made up chiefly of those who were bent on cheering the Crookston boys, still Grand Forks rooters were in evidence to a certain extent. The score resulted in a tie each team gaining five goals.

It was an exciting game from start to finish and until time was called at the end of the second half—each half lasted thirty minutes—neither could predict certain what the end would be. To play this game one must be an expert on skates and the fourteen hockey men of Thursday evening showed that they were at home on the ice.

Grand Forks scored the first goal but soon their opponents made a vigorous rush and the score was tied. Two more goals for the visitors left the home team two points behind but the latter made a brace, increased the speed and just a second or two before time was called in the first half won their third score. In the next half within ten minutes after play was started our boys made the score read five to three in their favor. The Ontario Store team then got desperate and despite the best efforts of their opponents the score was made five to five a minute or two before play stopped. Had Crookston guarded their goal a little better they would undoubtedly have come off victorious. They did indeed remarkably well. It was their first game while the team opposed have been in several contests before. Our boys will unquestionably win the next time the teams meet.

Energetic Lumber Company.

Elias Stedmerson boarded the Duluth train Monday morning. He met on the train Mr. Roddy, of Grand Forks, and together they intend to make a place about 25 miles north of Bemidji. Here they will erect a sawmill, the machinery for which is already at Bemidji, and begin in a short time to cut lumber. The Brainerd & Northern railway which it is expected will be extended north this summer will run within four miles of the new sawmill. The company is well named the Energetic Lumber company, as the boys won't be in it with their humming when these ones get things in running order.

Board of Trade.

The Commercial Union of the city met in their new quarters in the city hall last Tuesday evening. A letter from the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce was read asking the local organization to instruct the legislators from this section as to what was the sentiment here in regard to exempting from taxation manufacturing concerns that may start up in the state.

The question of paving the business streets and charging the cost to those owning the property adjoining the streets paved and letting the payments be made during several years was considered.

F. E. LePage, deputy postmaster hassled in his resignation as a member of the union as he expects in a short time to remove to Mentor.

REPUBLICAN CLUBS

Representative Gathering of the G. O. P. to Take Place at St. Paul in a Month.

The annual convention of the State Republican league will be held in St. Paul during the first week in April. This was decided at a meeting of the executive committee of the league held at the Windsor last evening.

The convention has some political significance. It is the first meeting since the state election lost fall waked all the members to the fact that the methods in organized work were faulty. Hereafter they mean that the work shall be more thoroughly done, and this defeat may not be again laid to overconfidence in which men forget that organization and organized labor is necessary to win.

It is expected that Senators Nelson and Davis will be present and probably Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, one of the most eloquent orators of the republican party.

The convention this year will probably be the biggest in the history of the league. The basis of representation has been changed in order to secure a more general gathering of representative republicans. One delegate from every voting precinct in the state, and the presidents, secretaries and treasurers of the state, congressional, county and commissioners' districts will be entitled to seats.

Shooting Stars.

When a shooting star breaks into flame in our atmosphere, the residuum of the combustion remains in the air and can be found in what is known as atmospheric dust. The virgin snows of the polar regions was often seen to be spotted with traces of dust which contained particles of iron. Like particles are found on church towers and elsewhere, among the minute bodies that dance in the sun's rays there are certainly particles of shooting stars.

The sands of the African deserts when examined by a microscope present traces of very small iron particles which seem to have been subjected to high temperature, and the Challenger on its remarkable trip in the Atlantic found at times in the dredged fragments of magnetic iron which he was every reason to believe fell from the sky. Sir William Thompson (Lord Kelvin) and Richter have even seen in the aerolites the dissemination of the germs of life throughout the universe.—Chantanquan.

The Strength of a Bear.

Few people know that a grizzly bear can give points to any other carnivorous animal in point of strength. A grizzly bear weighing just 400 pounds has been watched carrying a heifer two-thirds its own weight for two miles up the steep and rugged mountain side, and this without pausing for one instant for rest.

The big white polar bear, though not really so dangerous a customer, is capable of performing the most extraordinary feats of strength. A polar bear has been seen to move with his paw a bowlder six men had with difficulty got in position to guard a cache of provisions.

Purifying the Air.

It is found in many factories that the hands do much more work in a given time if they have good air to breathe. Some firms have quite elaborate provisions for the purifying of the atmosphere of the workrooms.

In the absence of these a simple plan is to put a spoonful of oil of turpentine into a liter bottle of well water, shake it well, and then blow it about the room through an atomizer. An improvement is to mix a few drops of acetate ether with the turpentine.—St. Louis Republic.

Too Clever to Keep.

First Shipping Clerk—Have you heard that Robson has got sacked?

Second Shipping Clerk—No. Is that a fact? I thought he was such a clever sort of chap.

First S. C.—Too clever by half. He invoiced a consignments of cradles as matrimonial fruit baskets.—Vanity Fair.

PYTHIAN LODGE.

Instituted at Crookston Last Thursday With Pomp and Circumstance.

BIG BANQUET AT CROOKSTON.

Knights from Surrounding Territory Congregate here—Clever Work of Visiting Teams.

The Knights of Pythias instituted a lodge at Crookston last Thursday with a membership of fifty-two, to whom more than thirty were new members, an unusually large number to be initiated at one time. The visiting K. Ps. began to arrive on the early trains, the team from Barnesville, about fifty strong, and the grand officers W. W. Wooley and Fred E. Wheaton coming in at 6:30 a. m. All the incoming trains brought visiting brethren and a special from Grand Forks reached here at 3 p. m. The city hand and local Knights met all the trains and escorted their brethren to the lodge rooms.

As a large class had to be initiated the work began in the morning lasting all day long and until about 6:30 o'clock the next morning. The degrees were given by the Barnesville and Grand Forks teams and their work in this was exemplified upon by the grand officers and other K. Ps. present.

About midnight, visitors, new members and all repaired to Hotel Crookston where Landlord Lycan had prepared one of those banquets for which he has become famous. Hall's orchestra brought over by the Grand Forks delegation, played at the hotel while the banqueters were feasting. A. D. Stevens acted as toast master, J. E. O'Brien gave the address of welcome, Tracy Bangs responded, Grand officers Wooley and Wheaton spoke, as did also representatives of the visiting delegations.

The lodge elected as officers: A. D. Stephens, chancellor commander; Alex. McKinnon, vice-commander; J. E. O'Brien, prelate; C. F. Mix, keeper of records and seals; R. L. Farr, master of work; F. D. Bell, master of finance; T. G. Thompson, master of exchequer; J. R. Rasmussen, master-at-arms; J. W. Wheeler, L. Ellington and J. R. McKinnon, trustees. It was, indeed, one of the best functions of the kind ever held in this city, taking into consideration the number and character of the members of the new lodge, the visiting teams and their exceptional work, and the grand spread at Hotel Crookston ending in a flow of eloquence.

A Wonderful Opportunity.

The finest farm in Polk county is to be sold at once in lots of quarters and eighties. Easy payments and terms are liberal, value guaranteed. Having arranged for a larger business in Superior, I shall close out the choice property now owned for the eighteen years ago. When you want the best in location, quality and terms call on J. W. WHEELER, or A. N. HIXON. tf

The Tasmanian Devil.

The animal known in Australia as the Tasmanian devil is one of the only devils in existence that exist at one time have been a widely distributed class of animals, to judge from the fossil remains already found in many parts of Australia. Like nearly every mammalian quadruped of the continent, the devil is a marsupial, but with the solitary exception of the so called Tasmanian wolf he is the only surviving marsupial animal that is carnivorous and may be regarded as a beast of prey. He is about the size of a small dog, with soon-be extinct, but in the early convict days of the island—when Tasmania was also called Van Diemen's Land was the penal settlement for the worst class of British convicts—they were plentiful, and many ghastly stories were afloat of their attacks upon escaped convicts who had taken to the bush.

They have evidently the same fondness for bloodshed the name of devil was bestowed on the animals by the early settlers, who were helping simultaring perseverance in following up an enemy to the last with what looked like undying hatred. No specimen has ever been found on the continent of Australia.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Thanksgiving.

To persons of lesser rank one saith "You," without thou-ing anybody, he is not some little child, and that thou wert much more aged and that the customs itself amongst the more courteous; and better bred were to speak in such manner. What concerneth familiar friends, amongst them the custome doth comport in certain places that they "Thou" ons another more freely, in other places one's more reserved.—"Youthful Behavior," 1659.

South Crookston School District.

Two school petitions will come up before the board of county commissioners at this month's meeting that are of particular interest to the independent school district of South Crookston. They are petitions for the creation of two new school districts in the territory south, southeast and southwest of this city, in the town of Fairfax and town 149, range 47. Both of these proposed new districts take certain sections out of the South Crookston district. In all 22 children would be taken from the independent school district and put in the new districts. This South Crookston district has just sold bonds to the amount of $6,000 for the erection of a new school building. If the change be made those who own the land changed will have to pay double taxes. This and other facts will be urged upon the commissioners as reasons why the change should not be made.

How to Quiet a Child.

A little girl frequently fancied she saw bears and tigers whenever she happened to awake in the night. Presumably she dreamed of some danger, may be on account of having eaten too much for supper or having eaten the wrong kind of food. At any rate, she frequently awoke crying in the night, and in order to interpret the dim outlines of a dress or a curtain as a fearful beast that was about to attack her. The best thing to do to deal tenderly with such fancies and remove the child as far as possible from the object that has caused her excitement.

Then, if you can do so without disturbing the other children, light the lamp and let the light fall full on the thing that has given rise to her fear. So slow, and express your opinion first as a kind of preliminary assumption that the bear may after all be mamma's skirt or the curtain moving in the draft, and when this somewhat probability is understood follow up your advantage and declare it to be a good joke that a large piece of cloth should look like a Natural animal. Make the child smile at the incongruity of her fancy, and her laugh will cure the horror of the dream and dispel the nightmare as sunshine dissolves the mist.—Arena.

Luxury, Right or Wrong.

Discussing the right or wrong of luxury in The North American Review, Professor F. Spencer Baldwin, a Boston university authority on economics, comes to these conclusions:

"There are justifiable and there are unjustifiable luxuries.

"In general it may be laid down that a luxury which contributes to the efficiency of the individual in the widest sense and which does not impose on society for the satisfaction of its demands an unwholesome and degrading form of labor is perfectly justifiable.

"This sanction of luxury is not to be stretched to cover conscious self indulgence. The part played by rational self sacrifice in the development of character is not to be overlooked. Constant self indulgence is demoralizing.

"But in general a man has a right to spend money for anything that enriches and diversifies his life, and thus aids in the developing and rounding out of his personality, provided he does not do it at required for the production of the article in question he agreeable and innocuous.

"On the other hand, a luxury that destroys the individual or calls for a monotone form of labor is unjustifiable."

Elephant Hunting in Sahin.

When the elephant is pursued on foot, it is invariably sought in the depths of the forest, where it has retired for shelter from the noonday sun and also for that short repose it takes during the 24 hours. The hunter, having reached his quarry to its retreat, is obliged to use the utmost stealth in approaching it, the elephant being a very light sleeper and awakened by the slightest unusual sound.

The difficulty of moving through a dense, thorny jungle without making any sound, dissimilar to those which might be produced by nature, such as the stirring of the branches by a light breeze or the occasional falling of a dead leaf, is greater than can be realized by any one who has not tried it.

On getting within arm's length of his game the swordsman slowly raises himself to an erect position and deals a slashing cut on the back sinews of the nearest foot about ten inches from the ground, at the same time springing nimbly back to avoid a blow from the animal's trunk. The cut, if properly delivered, hits sheer to the bone, severing the large arteries, and in a short time death ensues from hemorrhage.—Harper's Weekly.

A Barnum Surprise.

A good story of the late George Augustus Sala and Barnum is told. It was on the occasion of the last visit of the famous showman to England, when a public dinner was tendered to Mr. Barnum. Mr. Sala presided. In the reception room, where all were waiting to welcome the guest of the evening, Mr. Barnum came in, beaming, and, shaking hands with the chairman, said:

"This is indeed a surprise to me."

"Did you hear that?" Mr. Sala whispered. "Why, he arranged for the dinner himself."

NEXT UNITED STATES SENATE.

The Republicans Will Have a Majority of Almost Twenty.

The last United States senate stood as follows: republicans, 46; democrats, 34; Populists, and nondescripts, 10. Of the thirty seats vacated March 4 twenty-four have been filled. Fourteen succeed themselves, nine being republicans and five democrats. The republicans were Hawley, Hale, Lodge, Burrows, Davis, Hanna, Aldrich, Proctor and Clark. Democrats: Money, Cockrell, Stewart, Bate and Daniel.

These six have yet to be filled by elections: Pennsylvania, R.; Delaware, R.; Florida, D.; Nebraska, R.; Utah, D.; Colllorado, R.

Ten senators-elect are new to the senate. They are Depew of New York, Culbertson of Texas, Beveridge of Indiana, Kean of New Jersey, McComas of Maryland, Quarles of Wisconsin, McConber of North Dakota, Scott of West Virginia, Clarke of Montana and Foster of Washington.

As the new senate will stand on the opening day the republicans will have 51 members, a majority of 18 over all. If the remaining seats are filled according to the present political complexions of the state legislatures the senate will be made up as follows: Republicans, 55; democrats, 27; populists and others, 8.

New Hall Insurance Company.

The announcement is made that a new hail insurance company will shortly be organized in Crookston and will begin the insurance of city of townsman W. A. Lanctot. We feel confident that the proposed plan which is as far as we have been able to ascertain a superior one to any now in vogue in this state, is devised on sound business principles. A meeting has been called for the 16th inst., at Crookston. All farmers in the valley are invited to attend and take part in the organization.

Odd Fellows to Meet.

The Odd Fellows expect to have a big celebration in Crookston on Wednesday evening, March 22. A class of twenty-five will be initiated into this order of good fellowship. A team from the final lodge of Grand Forks will be over to assist the local members in the work, besides Odd Fellows from all the surrounding towns. A big banquet will follow the formal work. The Odd Fellows have a reputation for being royal entertainers and the visiting members of this order may rest assured that they will be received here most hospitably.

In Society's Realm.

Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Durand and Mr. and Mrs. S. Rosenthal entertained a large company of their friends at cards last Friday night. Mrs. W. E. McKenzie and Mr. Vance were the guests of honor at the same. Mrs. Durand and Mrs. Rosenthal were at home to their lady friends. A unique entertainment was furnished. Each guest was given a piece of paper on which were the letters of the alphabet and was requested to write a story of twenty-six words, no letters of the alphabet to be used twice as the initial letter of a word. Mrs. F. W. Frazer was given first prize for her story and Mrs. Harry Wyand second prize. Mrs. Riggs and Miss McKercher gave some instrumental solos on the piano and Mrs. Spendley read.

—No announcement of the forthcoming musical season can give greater pleasure than that of the early advent of Sousa's Band which will visit this city on March 28th. Sousa has learned the secret of attracting the public heart, not by artifice and not by shallow pretence, but by a direct and simple appeal to the purest and best sentiments that music can evoke. As a conductor Sousa is of the people and for the people. A man of wide musical knowledge, clear human judgment and catholic taste he is superbly equipped by nature and education for the field he has chosen. With the famous organization under his direction Sousa is a welcome visitor in every town and city on this continent. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the gulfs to the mountain ranges of British Columbia he is the one familiar and beloved figure in the musical world. The influence of his concert work among the masses is incalculable and the Sousa Band is ever the pioneer in the cause of music.

Looking Over Journal Improvements.

Gordon McGrew, son of J. G. McGrew of Duluth, was a caller at the JOURNAL office last Friday. Mr. McGrew lived in Crookston many years ago and was for awhile a printer on the JOURNAL force. He was on his way to White Earth, South Dakota. Mr. McGrew said that his father was hourly expecting Governor Lind to remove him from his position as weighmaster. H. A. Kelley, also an old employee of the JOURNAL office was looking over the late improvements in the newspaper office and press room. Mr. Kelley on his way back to the Pacific coast where he is now engaged in civil engineering.

The Red Cockade.

The Red Cockade, which was presented at the Grand last Monday night, is one of the better class of plays and the audience, though not as large as the play deserved, showed that they greatly appreciate dramatic skill, for the actors were recalled time and again. Mr. Wyndham's role is a clever actor with a remarkably sympathetic voice. He is adroit, however, and he never appeared at his best in the Red Cockade, as high tragedy is his forte. His company gave him superb support. The scene of the play was laid in France at the time of the French Revolution and the picture given of life at that time in military circles and in the brilliant salons of Paris was vivid, and valuable to a student of history. On the other hand the aesthetic sense was also satisfied, for the acting was artistic. The element of romance that was present gave a charming and at times pathetic touch to the scenes.

Bankruptcy Case.

Evidence was taken yesterday before Cole Yeaton, referee in bankruptcy, in the matter of the bankruptcy of Lowe & Haggard and Haggard, Larsen & Co. Gazelle Hunting.

Gazelles in Nubia are hunted by a powerful breed of hounds, in build and power more than a greyhound. In spite of being far swifter than the hound, the gazelle falls a victim from the nervous habit of constantly stopping to look back to see if it is pursued. It also expends its strength by taking great bounds in an almost vertical direction, thereby not only losing time, but exhausting itself, so that it is overtaken without difficulty.—Harper's Weekly.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

THE PITILESS MAUSERS.

Kent's Soldiers In Front of the Blockhouse.

TOO HOT TO LIVE, THEY SAY.

Heavy Attack Ordered on the San Juan Stronghold—Fatal Delay at the Fords—Hawkins, With Two Regiments, Opened the Battle—Coolness of the Sixth Regulars.

[Copyright, 1898, by the Author.]

IX.

KENT'S infantry got the bloodiest end of it in the encounter with smokeless powder, blind trenches and Mausers on San Juan ridge. It started very early in the morning on July 1 from its bivouac near El Poso, but after a short march had to give the cavalry the right of way. This resulted in bringing the leading regiments abreast of the Tenth and First cavalry, the rear of Wheeler's division. When General Kent was asked at Montauk to tell of the storming of San Juan heights, he said, "We were ordered to take the heights, and we took them." In so saying the general plunged into the thick of the battle of words which has been stirred up over this very point of orders. Yet he paid a high tribute to the line officers and men. He said that it was a soldiers' fight. Regimental commanders did nobly, but, owing to the ground, could not see their full commands. Company officers had to act, and did, with good effect.

Kent's story is that at 7 o'clock on the morning of July 1 he went to the hill where Grimes' battery was in position before Grimes opened fire, and there Colonel McClernand, representing General Shafter, pointed out a green hill in the distance as Kent's objective, on the left, he being instructed to keep his right on the main road leading to Santiago. The green knoll is on the same ridge as the San Juan blockhouse, some hundred yards south of that point, which is near the road, and therefore the objective of Kent's right flank. Kent had already sent Hawkins' brigade forward, and shortly after Grimes' battery opened, which was before 8 o'clock, he rode on and came up with Hawkins and his leading regiment, the Sixth infantry. At that point he was ordered to give the cavalry the right of way, which caused a delay of his advance 40 minutes. During that delay Hawkins and Kent went to the front under the fire of sharpshooters and crossed the main ford of San Juan river, already reached by the advance guard of the cavalry division, the Ninth regiment. They looked through the fringe of trees and saw the enemy's position. Hawkins thought he could turn the enemy's right at San Juan, but Kent did not agree with him and decided to put two brigades into column for direct attack. Going backward to hurry his troops, he met them just as they came under a heavy fire not only from the front, but from the dense thicket on the banks and from sharpshooters in trees in the rear of the moving troops.

The balloon was abreast of the head of his division, and shrapnel aimed at it fell among his men. The observers in the balloon pointed out to Kent a trail parallel with the road on its left. The Sixth and Sixteenth regiments were already in the road, past the forks of the trail, and Kent went back and directed the Seventy-first regiment into the trail, to be followed by Wikoff's brigade, in support of Hawkins. The Seventy-first became a stumbling block in the way of Wikoff's advance, and it was noon when the head of Wikoff's brigade reached the fording place.

When the Sixth regiment reached the ford, Hawkins was there and said to Colonel Egbert, its commander, "Somewhat beyond here you can get an enfilade fire on those works, and Lieutenant Ord will show you where to go in." The works on San Juan heights were within view. Marching to the front the Sixth formed on the left of the Sixth cavalry behind the fringe of trees, directly opposite San Juan blockhouse. Colonel Egbert looked over the ground in his front, and, finding that the cavalry pickets were being fired upon by Spaniards in the houses in front, sent out four companies as skirmishers to re-enforce the troopers. These companies drew a heavy fire from the Spanish front. This halt was made between the Aguadores and San Juan.

Seeing a battalion of the Sixteenth coming to his support, Colonel Egbert ordered his regiment forward in line of battle. Traversing a grainfield, the Sixth encountered a heavy belt of trees and undergrowth lining the high banks of the San Juan river. Taking Company E, Captain Kennon, with him, the colonel plunged into the stream, which was waist deep, crossed, and beyond the high bank found a road parallel to the river and inclosed by barbed wire fences. At a signal from the colonel the rest of the regiment leaped down the bank, waded the stream and clambered up the opposite side through the undergrowth, all coming to a halt at the wire fence. Captain Whitall, with part of the Sixteenth infantry also crossed and lined up at the fence with the Sixth regiment. The line as it then stood was a prolongation of the line on San Juan, or "Kettle," hill, which the cavalry afterward carried, as told in the last article. The rest of the Sixteenth regiment passed some distance beyond the Sixth, on its left and rear.

Colonel Egbert kept his regiment at the road an hour, partially carrying out Hawkins' orders to enfilade the enemy. His men were somewhat sheltered by a hedge and a roadside ditch, but from their position could only obtain an oblique fire against the hill. In order to get a more effective fire the colonel decided to take his regiment across the road into the high grass and weeds beyond. A Cuban negro, who proved to be one of the heroes of San Juan heights, cut several openings in the fences with a machete. Through these openings the regiment advanced, and, lying down in the tall grass, opened a steady fire on the enemy's works, both by file and volley.

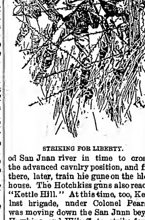
"Suddenly," says Colonel Egbert, "the blockhouse and trenches burst out with cannon and musketry, and the whole fire of the hill was developed on my regiment at short range. Here was to be seen the value of discipline. Our line was torn with shot and shell; men were falling everywhere. Captain Walker, commanding the right center company, and his lieutenant, Gross; Captain Torrey, commanding the left center company, and his lieutenant, Purdy; Lieutenant Turman of Company F and one quarter of my men were down in ten minutes from the time the heavy fire of the Spaniards commenced. Yet no one blenched, and all kept steadily firing, without any thought of stopping until the order should come. This it now became my reluctant duty to give. I saw that the force on the hill, in its intrenched position, was entirely too strong for mine, and that if we remained another ten minutes the regiment would be destroyed. I therefore, with my adjutant, Lieutenant Bennett, walked along the line and cautioned the company commanders to move by the flank quietly but rapidly to the road again, which was done in excellent order, carrying our dead and wounded along with us. As soon as we had bestowed these in safety under the overhanging bank of the river we resumed the fire from the road."

In this plain language a soldier tells the story of the first encounter with the Spaniards at San Juan blockhouse. The range was less than 500 yards. The Sixth lost the highest percentage of any regiment at Santiago, and the greater part of it was incurred in this attempt to reduce the Spanish fire by answer in kind. Colonel Egbert, and Captain W. H. H. Crowell, commanding one battalion, were war veterans, Egbert of the regular service and Crowell of the First Ohio, light artillery.

With the Sixteenth as support the Sixth held on. The Cuban negro drifted over to the Sixteenth, thinking perhaps that it was about to lead a fresh attack. Wikoff, with the Ninth, Thirteenth and Twenty-fourth regulars, was then passing the San Juan at the trail ford and proving that "Hell's Crossing" deserves its ghastly name. The cavalry at this hour, still back behind the fringe of trees, thought that the infantry had been repulsed in an attack on the blockhouse. Perhaps others took the same view of it, for soon after that the sick and pain racked leader on El Poso hill sent urgent orders to Lawton to leave El Caney and move to his position as planned on El Caney road heights, north of San Juan ridge. Twice Shafter sent this order, proof that in spite of bodily torture the brain had a full grasp of the situation at the front. Lawton, striking on the flank of San Juan ridge soon after midday, might have made the battle a masterpiece.

Meanwhile the artillery had not been idle in its efforts to help Kent and Sumner reduce the San Juan stronghold. Grimes' battery had a perfect view of the blockhouse at 2,600 yards and struck it at the third shot, say at 8 o'clock. The Spaniards replied, and at the fourth shot killed two gunners and wounded four at one piece. Shafter's adjutant general, Colonel McClernand, staid with the battery and directed its firing. He had a telephone wire to headquarters. Grimes once caught sight of the flash of a Spanish gun and, with that sole guidance, the Spanish using smokeless powder, pounded away for three hours with intervals. The black powder of his own guns hung like a cloud about them, making a perfect target for the Spanish artillerists. Some of their fire was from batteries in their second line, near the city. The balloon trailed along his line of fire and stopped action for a time. Another rifle battery, under Captain Parkhurst, got into position near Grimes, ready to unite its fire with his at the supreme moment.

Parker, whose troubles in landing the Gatling outfit have been mentioned, found his way to the front blocked by a stationary volunteer regiment, which, after opening ranks for the guns, cheered wildly and drew a fresh shower of Mausers and shrapnel. At last he reached San Juan river in time to cross to the advanced cavalry position, and from there, later, train his guns on the blockhouse. The Hotchkiss guns also reached "Kettle Hill." At this time, too, Kent's last brigade, under Colonel Pearson, was moving down the San Juan beyond Hawkins and Wikoff to strike for the green knoll on the left, completing the line of battle 4,000 strong at the base of the blockhouse ridge. Thus, with the cavalry included, about 7,000 men, armed with Krag-Jorgensen rifles and carbines, stung to desperation by the long hours of torment, stood in leash for that grand heroic rush which is to make history glow with plaudits for the invincible American arms.



STRIKING FOR LIBERTY.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

STATE LEGISLATURE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1.

The Somerville bill, S. F. 00, passed the house, after four hours had been devoted to offering amendments and discussion as to its provisions. The provisions of the bill are:

"To require every foreign corporation doing business in this state to have a public office in this state at which to transact its business, and to appoint an agent duly authorized to accept service of process, and requiring such corporation to file its certificate of incorporation with the secretary of state, pay fees of incorporation and providing penalties for the violation of the act."

Insane asylum hospital bills were made a special order for Tuesday.

Nearly 30 bills were passed by the senate. Among them were:

To protect bicycle paths and bicyclists.

Wheaton's civil rights bill relative to serving colored men in saloons.

Allowing the managers of the St. Cloud reformatory to discharge prisoners who had been convicted of crimes for which the terms have since been reduced by law, at the expiration of the minimum term thus fixed.

THURSDAY, MARCH 2.

But 35 senators answered roll call when the senate convened, the others being absent on visits to various state institutions. General orders contained 48 bills and the senate went into committee of the whole with Mr. Rovernd in the chair. The first bill taken up was the measure providing for a committee to visit state institutions, thus doing away with junketing parties. Progress was reported. Senator Thompson's bill allowing $1,000 state aid to high schools instead of $400 was discussed and finally referred to the finance committee.

The house spent most of the day on Mr. Roberts' bill making changes in the election law. It was recommended to pass.

FRIDAY, MARCH 3.

In the committee of the whole the senate recommended for passage the Batz bill for the repeal of the present sugar bounty law.

The bill putting the oil inspector's office on a salary basis was passed. An amendment adopted makes the bill effected Jan. 1, 1901, at the expiration of the term of the present incumbent.

The bill compelling the labeling of "renovated" butter was recommended to pass, but the Gutterson bill to tax telegraph companies on their gross earning suffered defeat.

The house passed five bills at the morning session, among them being the Roberts bill changing the election laws.

At the afternoon session the attendance was very light and the house went into committee of the whole, recommending six bills for passage.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4.

The senate in committee recommended for advancement to the calendar the two bills by Senator Knatvold, repealing the present beet sugar bounty law and enacting in its place laws limiting the appropriation to $30,000 a year for two years. The bounty is to be divided equally between the farmers who grow the beets and the manufacturers who make sugar. There was no debate on the measures, senators appearing to have made up their minds to settle the matter when the bills come up on the calendar for passage.

The house passed several bills, but none of importance, most of the time being consumed in discussion of two measures, one relating to the probate code and the other to mineral and timber land taxes.

MONDAY, MARCH 6.

The house recommended for passage bill providing for reinacting that section of the state law appropriating $20,000 annually to the relief fund of the soldiers' home.

A bill making the salary of the supremb court reporter $3,000 was recommended to pass.

The Greer tax commission bill was killed.

Several minor measures on the calendar were passed.

The senate held an afternoon session at which one bill was passed and a dozen new ones introduced. Of the new measures several are of a radical nature.

One bill introduced gives the initiative and referendum a foothold in Minnesota; another would permit the partial enforcement of the single tax by giving the smallest geographical divisions the right to exempt improvements on land from taxation, which would so far as local taxes are concerned constitute a practical institution of the single tax scheme.

Still another bill pertaining to taxes, introduced by Senator Schellbach, provides that the list of delinquent personal taxes shall be "edited," so to speak, by the county attorney, who shall strike out such accounts as he does not think it will be worth while to go after. The bill is a sort of a compromise on present conditions.

TUESDAY, MARCH 7.

The house spent practically the entire day in discussing the proper method of caring for the insane, but at the hour of adjournment no conclusion had been reached. While there were two bills under consideration the question turned upon the adoption of a policy for the care of the insane, either for the county system or for the continuation of the system already in existence.

The Somerville bill to tax foreign corporations occupied most of the morning session of the senate. It was finally passed, 47 to 8.

The finance committee made a favorable report on the bill increasing the salary of Warden Wolfer to $4,000 with house rent, lights and fuel, and the Thompson bill increasing the appropriation for the state high schools to $1,000 per year.

The bill to establish a state park at Leech lake was also reported favorably.

What's In a Name?

In an article on Indian names Mr. Frank Terry comments on the odd effect produced by giving rein to this fancy for distinguished appellations in the renaming of Indians. Often their native names are unpronounceable and the translations long and not in accordance with our ideas of what is pleasing. So, instead of simply turning Bear-Sits-Down or Mule-Kicks-Up or Jumping Rabbit into English, the Indian is renamed entirely, and is given the first famous name that comes to mind.

"William Penn, Fitz-Hugh Lee, David B. Hill and William Shakespeare," says Mr. Terry, "are policemen at the Shoshone agency, Wyoming. Only a short while ago it was reported that on an Indian reservation in New Mexico William Breckinridge arrested John G. Carlisle for being drunk and disorderly.

"It would no doubt surprise the reader of this should I say that I have seen George Washington, John Quincy Adams, Franklin Pierce, Rip Van Winkle, Allen G. Thurman and Hilery Herbert engaged together in a game of shinney. Yet this interesting spectacle I have gazed upon, and I have been the enforced witness to a severe spanking administered to James G. Blaine."—Youth's Companion.

Early French Theaters.

The French theater owes its origin to the religious exhibitions given by the pilgrims on their return from Palestine. At these exhibitions the pilgrims gave an account of the Holy Land and recited their own adventures. They were afterward imitated by those who had never been to the Holy Land. To these succeeded dramatic representations of subjects taken from the new text, which, being forbidden by the provost of Paris, the priests of France invited the king to be present at an exhibition to prove that they were calculated to excite religious feelings.

The building in which those plays were produced was divided into three scaffoldings—the highest represented paradise, the second the world and the lowest, which was in the form of a dragon's head, represented hell. The only entrance to the two upper scaffoldings was through the dragon's head.

The actors never left the stage, even to change their dress, and the plays were so long as to require several days for their completion. At the close of each evening the audience was invited to return until the whole were finished, sometimes 40 nights.

The Power of a Cyclone.

Careful estimates of the force of a cyclone and the energy required to keep a full fledged hurricane in active operation reveal the presence of a power that makes the mightiest efforts of man appear as nothing in comparison.

A force fully equal to 473,000,000 horsepower was estimated as developed in a West Indian cyclone. This is about 15 times the power that is creatable by all the means within the range of man's capabilities during the same time.

Were steam, water, windmills and the strength of all men and all animals combined they could not at all approach the tremendous force exerted by this terrible storm.

Railroad Pronunciation.

"I regret to say," remarks a writer in the Boston Transcript, "that on the Providence railroad Wrentham has lately become 'Wren-tham' (a as in Sam) in the months of several brakemen. First we had Wal-tham, similarly twanged in the second syllable, and I fear that ultimately we have to submit to Ded-ham in the place of Deddum. Thus do English names suffer in the months of those who are quite ignorant of their history. Not merely because it is English, but because it is logical and historical, and because the word "ham" has its meaning. Waltham should be Waltum and Wrentham Wrentum. A return to the colonial pronunciation to this extent would, of course, be too much to ask, but still for a little space, O arbiters of the railway, spare us that sharp a in the 'tham!'"

A Literary Note.

"Your majesty," said the prime minister, "this is the page who has been remiss in his duty."

"Aha!" exclaimed the king. "We'll have to bring him to book."

"He! He!" laughed the page. "A noble jest, I'll be bound."

Thereupon the king's heart softened, for he marveled that a man so young could make so old a joke.—Catholic Standard and Times.

Afloat and Ashore.

Bill—How about that Sound steamer?

Jill—I guess she's all right. There's a rumor ashore that she's afloat.

Bill—That's good. I heard there was a rumor afloat that she was ashore.—Yonkers Statesman.

Those Dreadful Sores

They Continued to Spread in Spite of Treatment but Now They are Healed—A Wonderful Work.

"For many years I have been a great sufferer with varicose veins on one of my limbs. My foot and limb became dreadfully swollen. When I stood up I could feel the blood rushing down the veins of this limb. One day I accidentally hit my foot against some object and a sore broke out which continued to spread and was exceedingly painful. I concluded I needed a blood purifier and I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. In a short time those dreadful sores which had caused me so much suffering, began to heal. I kept on faithfully with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and in a short time my limb was completely healed and the sores gave me no more pain. I cannot be too thankful for the wonderful work Hood's Sarsaparilla, has done for me." MRS. A. E. GILSON, Hartland, Vermont.
